Stood the Test.

Allcock's Plasters have successfully stood the test of sixty years' use by the public; their virtues have never been equaled by the unscrupulous imitators who have sought to trade upon their reputation by making plasters with alkies in them, and claiming them to be "just as good as Allcock's."

Allcock's plasters stand to-day indorsed by not only the highest medical authorities, but by millions of grateful patients who have proved their efficacy as a household remedy.

Physiological Mystery.

According to some curious investigations conducted by English scientists, eldest sons tend to be criminals and youngest sons paupers. A great many thousand school children and many families of five sons have been examined to yield these results. First-born children were found to be, as a rule, taller and heavier, with greater ability and endurance than the others. This is in accordance with the popular feeling in many countries that the oldest child is superior to the others and deserving of special privileges. It is a well established fact that among men of genius an undue proportion are eldest sons.—Detroit Free Press.

SCIATIC TORTURE

A Locomotive Engineer Tells How He Was Cured by Dr. Williams'

Pain that seems almost unbearable is a characteristic of sciatic rheumatism. In some cases the pain is knife-like, sharp or shooting; in others it is dull and aching. Sciatica is stubborn in resisting treatment and is patient sufferer for many years. This was the case with Mr. Herbert E. Spaulding, a locomotive engineer on the Chesapeake, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway, whose home is at Longview, Texas. He says:

"I was troubled with engine some years ago," he says, "I fell off and hurt my knee and ankle and was considered cured this to be the cause of my illness. The doctors took care of me from my bed to the back of my head. The pain was the worst I ever suffered in my life and my leg and back were twisted out of shape. I was under a physician's care for several months and for six months could not get out of bed. I also went to Hot Springs but came back in a worse condition than when I went.

"It was when I was down in bed that I heard of the case of a Mr. Allison, a much older man than myself, who had been cured of sciatica by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I began taking the pills and soon was able to get out on crutches. Then I had taken six boxes I was able to work about the house and yard. I kept right on with the pills until I was cured and I have never had any return of the trouble. I have been running an engine ever since."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Shoots Friend, Then Himself.

Fairfax.—The last of a desperate man to murder his friend and to kill himself was only partly carried out here, when Henry Kranz, aged thirty-five, shot Martin Kunz, a barkeeper, aged forty, in the back of the head, and then turned the weapon upon himself, inflicting a wound in his own head from which he died immediately.

The shooting occurred in Joseph Dickmeyer's saloon, in which Kranz had worked as a barkeeper for a dozen years. Kranz went to Kunz's room and asked him to go to the saloon with him. Arriving at the saloon both took a drink, and Kunz leaned back in a chair while Kranz sat upon a billiard table and carried on what appeared to be a mutually agreeable conversation.

Suddenly Kranz strode from the table to a position close beside his friend, and taking a revolver from his hip fired a bullet at close range into the back of Kunz's head. Kunz dropped like a log, and everybody in the saloon thought he was dying. Without a second's delay Kranz raised the gun to his own forehead and blew out his brains.

Kunz was soon to be a benedict and was to be one of a physician's ushers. It was found he was merely engaged. The bullet having flattened against a bone just below the left ear, the bullet was removed and he is now recovering.

Kunz declares there was no provocation for the attempt upon his life and has no motive for the suicide of Kranz, only it is that the latter had grown tired of his employer's unsatisfactory way of living and had plotted his own death and that of his inseparable friend, so that the two might be joined in death.

Fires at Brainard.

Brainerd.—Brainerd was visited by two dangerous fires at the same time. Mrs. Thomas H. Hoare, wife of the proprietor of the Hubbard hotel, dropped a candle in the closet of her apartments, setting fire to the clothing. The alarm was promptly given and the contents of six hand fire extinguishers was used without avail. The fire department succeeded in finally subduing the flames after a hard day's work and had plotted his own death and that of his inseparable friend, so that the two might be joined in death.

Will Inspect Wheat.

Minneapolis.—Word was received that the government would establish grain laboratories in Minneapolis, Buffalo and St. Louis for grading wheat. This announcement is looked upon with favor by many of the grain men, who believe in federal inspection rather than state supervision. Farmers took some similar laboratories for inspection in New York and Baltimore, and the location of three in the West is believed to be a step in advance. The different systems of grading now existing in different states often causes grain men much inconvenience and trouble, and under a general federal grading they believe much of this difficulty would be eliminated. Local millers have their own laboratories, but the federal inspection will be on a much broader scale and the work will be in charge of government experts.

Bull Gores Aged Man.

Wadena.—S. G. Anderson, seventy years old, living at Compton, west of here, was seriously injured by a bull which he had gone into the pasture to feed. While he was arranging hay for the animals the bull suddenly charged, pinning him against the wall of the barn. The fact that the bull had been dehorned is all that saved Anderson's life. The bull's attention was diverted for a moment and the aged man managed to crawl partially outside the barn door. His legs remained inside, and these were badly stamped with his feet and probably would have fatally hurt the old man had his son not discovered his predicament and rescued him.

Ask John Doe to Help.

St. Paul.—Governor John A. Johnson has asked John D. Rockefeller, the richest man in America, to assist in creating an endowment fund for Gustavus Adolphus college at St. Peter.

Directors of the college for some time have been endeavoring to raise a new building and endowment fund for $250,000. So far, the subscriptions have only reached $10,000, and they decided to appeal to the man of millions to help one of the leading educational institutions of the state. The directors asked Governor Johnson, who for the most of his life has lived in St. Peter, where the college is located, to write the letter, and the governor willingly consented.

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis.—Robert Bellaire, a former living here, Monday was robbed of $250 by a pickpocket on a Washington avenue south car in Minneapolis. The robber has not been found.

St. Paul.—The annual drill-down for privates and non-commissioned officers was held at the state farm school. A. P. O'Brien won the contest for privates and H. A. Fallingsteel carried off the honors among the non-commissioned officers. Capt. Sigerfoos, commandant of the university battalion, awarded the medals to the winners.

Mankato.—The movement against dogs is spreading in Southern Minnesota. The Lanesboro and Brownton councils are the latest to order all dogs muzzled.

Lake Benton.—The creamery last year distributed $68,000 to its patrons for milk and cream.

Woodmen Elect Officers.

Minneapolis—William N. Brown of Minneapolis was elected head consul and Judson D. Fee of Woodmen of the World at the biennial election held by the convention at the Hotel Nicollet. Other officers elected for two years as follows: Advisor lieutenant, William Watson, Detroit, Mich.; head banker, N. T. Hagen, Minneapolis; head clerk, Carl Skow, Racine, Wis.; head escort, R. R. Hayes, Beloit, Wis.; head watchman, H. C. Wellner, Sheridan, Wis.; head sentry, F. W. Denton, ——, Wisconsin; board managers (five), G. W. Stanley, Soo, Mich.; H. S. White, Waukesha, Wis.; Jacob Quesnell, St. Paul; Thomas Quenelly, Muskegon; A. J. Lynch, Wyandotte, Mich. Delegates to the sovereign grand camp convention at Norfolk, Va., in May, Id. Campbell, Fort Dearborn, Mich.; William L. Howes, Toronto, Ont. Delegate-at-large H. Wildrig, Mount Clemens, Mich. A class of 500 candidates was initiated at the Masonic Temple. The degree team of the St. Paul Woodmen exemplified the ritual. The banquet marked the close of the two days convention.

Upheids the Law.

Duluth—Although two United States judges, McCall of Tennessee and Evans of Kentucky, have declared the federal employers' liability bill unconstitutional, Judge Page Morris, in a decision here, upholds it.

The decision was handed down in the suit of John Kelley against the Great Northern railroad, seeking to recover damages for injuries sustained through the alleged negligence of a fellow employee, this being made a cause for liability of the employer under the federal statute. The railroad company filed a demurrer in which the constitutionality of the law was attacked.

In his decision Judge Morris maintains that the law is constitutional as a matter of common justice. An appeal will be taken.

Prisoner Takes Own Life.

Duluth.—Despondent over the death of his mother, whom he shot in a drunken frenzy early last summer and for which he was sentenced to a life term at Alba, a Finnish boy, aged about twenty-one years, hanged himself in his cell in the county jail. When the body was discovered, stiff and cold, the indications were that the prisoner committed suicide shortly after midnight, using his shoelaces for a rope. His body reclined as if he had thrown himself in the bunk to sleep. One end of the braces, which was made of strong web, was tied to an iron bars above the bunk and the other end was knotted together about the boy's neck. The noose was drawn so tightly that it made a deep mark in the throat.

Girl Wins First Prize.

Minneapolis.—Miss Vivian Colgrove of this city has been awarded the special contest at the university chapel with her oration entitled "The Press and the Labor Controversy." The second prize of $50 was awarded to Louis Schwartz and Alverson Jackson took the third prize, $25. To the winner of first place goes not only the $100 prize, but also the honor of representing Minnesota in the intercollegiate contest of the Northern Oratorical league in different states often causes grain men much inconvenience and trouble, and under a general federal grading they believe much of this difficulty would be eliminated. MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, March 13—As predicted, the house today refused to concur in the senate amendments to the Spooner two-cent railroad fare bill, and the author of the house file, L. C. Spooner asked for a conference committee of five. Spooner, Thayer, Wells, Handlan, and Morse, were named. They will confer with a like number from the senate, yet to be appointed. The drafting of a new bill as a result of this conference is not unlikely.

R. J. Wells of Brookston, offered a bill in the house today for the taxation of public utilities on a gross earnings basis. Earnings of $600,000 are to pay 3¾ per cent; up to $1,000,000, 4 per cent; in excess of $1,000,000, 5½ per cent. Street car, gas, water, all conduit and subway systems, come under this classification for taxation.

Senator Henry McColl of St. Paul, introduced an important measure in the upper house today. It provides for election of United States senators on the plan of the Oregon law; that they be nominated at a state primary, and later go on the general election ballots to be voted upon for election by the people.

The semi-centennial exposition bill was awakened from a long nap in the senate today by its author, J. M. Hackney, and several amendments attached. The most important was one adding the names of the original commission which reported on the advisability of the exposition to the governor, to the board of managers for the show. These are Jos. T. Mannix of Minneapolis, who two years ago originated the semi-centennial celebration idea when a house member; F. B. Lyndon, of St. Paul; M. B. Cullom of Duluth; Chas. C. Whitney of Marshall; and C. H. Kohler of Minneapolis.

Something of a surprise came in the senate today when the judiciary committee recommended for passage the bill calling for a constitutional amendment to allow woman suffrage on an equality with men. The bill will next come up in committee of the whole for debate.

Harrison White, a house member, has thought of another way the legislature can spend a bunch of money, and incorporated in his bill. The measure provides for investment of $10,000 in a statue of "Peace" for the new capitol, to be copied after the Minnesota memorial in the Vicksburg military park.

James J. Hill was before the Sundberg committee of the senate again today in the hope to sleep. One end of the braces, which was made of strong web, was tied to an iron bars above the bunk and the other end was knotted together about the boy's neck. The noose was drawn so tightly that it made a deep mark in the throat.

Dies Under Load Of Hay

Hardwick—John Brown, sixty-two years old, a farmer living north of here, was instantly killed on Saturday by the overturning of a load of hay. Brown and a young man were handling hay and as they crossed the railroad track there was a sudden lurch; Brown was thrown heavily to the ground and the load of hay tipped over upon him. His companion escaped uninjured and hastened to the Brown from beneath the avalanches of hay. When he was taken out he was dead, his neck being broken.

Theft Victim Profits

St. Clond—"This is in payment for the goods stolen," was the burden of a letter received by $25 in money which was found at the Hillebrand grocery store when it was opened in the morning. Hillebrand does not know where the money came from nor who is the sender. About a week ago a thief broke into the grocery store and stole goods amounting to about $25. The matter at once was placed in the hands of the police, but they never succeeded in finding any clue to the robber.

BOYS ARE SURE TO REVOLT.

Cruel Scheme Proposed to Render Them Immune to Germs.

When the purely scientific investigator introduces us to a new variety of germ and lectures us about it in such a way he plunges into pastures new to scare up germs of another feather we may feel somewhat down in the mouth, but we can contemplate the germy scheme of things in sorrow rather than in anger. Even when a sensational writer gets possession of the facts the scientist has dispassionately unearthed and lays before us we are not attempting to dodge the microbe by executing feats compared to which the tasks of Hercules would be mere calisthenics, we have every right to resent it.

A serious-minded contributor to an altogether serious periodical urges that whenever children return from playing in the streets they should be treated thoroughly with a powerful germicide. It is difficult enough to catch little Willie and hold him down while something the shocker can be hid in his ears—and hard enough upon Willie in the opinion of any man who remembers the days, many and full of trouble, when he was pounced upon by a merciless being with six times his strength and some of the tenderness that should accompany might and held in a vise-like grip while on ointment was made to rub his back fair out by the roots with a rough washrag. It is difficult enough to circumvent little Willie now or twice a week and get him into a healthful but hated tub. To inaugurate a policy of spewing a germicide all over him whenever he comes into the halls of his ancestors would be to alienate him utterly. It it did not crystallize his latent determination to become a boy highwayman or cause him to drown himself in the rain barrel he would surely starve out for himself as a street sweeper, a garbage cart driver, a junk dealer, or in one of the several honorable callings which appeal to the imagination of the streetbred urchin. Of course, some spiritless sons of mothers who would never might tamely submit to the ordeal of the medicine bath, but whom the gods destroy they first make mad, so why make them miserable during the brief period of their stay on earth?

Their Dire Predicament.

A bit of real life of the North sea fishfolk is exhibited in a letter sent to the editor of the Daily Graphic, from which one catches a glimpse of the dim and dreary North sea just outside.

Suddenly a fisherman was shown into the room—a typical east coast sea-dog.

Touching his forelock in response to his vicar's hearty greeting, he said, "Please, sir, we're in a bit of a reg'lar quandary ohonrd our smack, and knowin' as you know all there is to know about the sea, I thought I'd come and ask your advice.

"Last December we chaps on board our smack—Charlie skipper, me and two other men, and the boy—clubs together and buys a accordion. Well, on Christmas eve we're all merry and hauls the blarsted thing a-playin' 'Erald Angels;' and that ain't the worst of it, for it says we've got to pay for mendin' it!"

Delinquency Explained.

Lord Dunmore, the notable earl who has been touring America, talked at a dinner in Boston about Mrs. Mabel Boldt, upon whom he had called in Concord.

"I think Mrs. Boldt Eddy is a good woman," said Lord Dunmore, "and I think her work has been on the whole beneficent. They who misunderstand her, I am persuaded, misunderstand her willfully."

Smoothing his gray beard, Lord Dunmore smiled.

"They are like a certain soldier who served in my regiment," he said. "The soldier's duties at first were found making for a public house one day.

"Donald!' the chaplain shouted. 'Donald! Ay, Donald!'

"Donald turned and gave him a hasty look, frowned and darted into the bar.

"The chaplain loitered outside the door and Donald came forth again.

"'Donald,' he said reproachfully, 'didn't you hear me calling?'

"'Ma sir,' Donald answered, 'I did, but—but I had only the price of one.'"

Laying Up Switches.

Apples and birds' nests, precious stones—precious is the owner—growing plants and baby mudturtles are but a few selections of treasures carried back from the country; hub rarely has a "fresh air" displayed the weight of any mother who has seen clambering over a rail fence into a piece of underbrush.

"Paddy Jones o' thim nice switchen I'm after, Miss Brown," was the reply to the deaconess' question. "I have a boy here who has got a die switch for the b'ys fence I was in the knotty last summer, and now I'm going to take home enough to last till next year."—Deaconess Advocate.

Evolution.

"Don't you believe in evolution?" asked the scientific man.

"Certainly," answered Miss Cayenne. "No change that centuries bring about in natural history can be more remarkable than that which a woman undergoes in a single day as she progresses from curl papers to evening gown."

The only line of goods that are being handled in Plummer is Sunney brook rye, and stationary.

The head line writers for the Daily papers will soon have to hunt up something new; the trial of Harry Thaw is about finished.

We sometimes get a little bit envious of some of the millionaires, but we can't kick as we had an even start in the race for wealth with Jim Hill, but what puzzles us is, how we got so far in the rear. It was not due to class legislation for we had just as good a chance as Jim did. We would like to have some of our Socialist friends explain this as it has bothered us a goodeal, and we sometimes think that some might be of the opinion that the reason we did not have as much money as Jim Hill was because we did not have as much brains as he has got, and that might be the reason.

The speech of Hon B Steener son in Congress, regarding the investigation of final proofs on ceded Indian lands, is certainly a very able and explanatory document. While the speech has not been so well circulated as it should have been, a large number of his constituents must have read it and given our able Congressman credit for taking an active interest in a question that was of such vital importance to his district as this one, of holding up final proof certificates for an investigation to hinder people that had paid for their land getting a title from the government.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

Mr A F Lattimore of Erie Minnesota, in December 1905 established at that point a Newspaper known as "The Eleven Towns," and at different times thereafter applied to the Register of the Crookston Land Office to have final proof notices published in that paper. The register refused to recognize his paper as entitled to publish final proof notices. Mr. Lattimore appealed to the commissioner of the general land office from the register's decision. The Commissioner of the general land office sustained the decision of the Register, Mr. Lattimore then appealed to the secretary of the Interior, and the secretary of the Interior rendered his decision February 27th, also sustaining the contention of the register in refusing to recognize the paper, basing the decision mainly on the fact than in the publication of final proof notices the Register is, by statute, specifically required to designate the newspaper in which the notice shall be published; that in the publication of such notices neither the commissioner nor the Department has the authority in advance of the action of the Register in the exercise of the authority and discretion specifically conferred on him by law to control such action. —Thief River Falls news.

This decision did not ought to settele the matter as far as putting in a newspaper for the purpose of publishing final proof notices is concerned, as Register Montague will not publish final proofs in a newspaper that has no established reputation of being a newspaper that people take and read.

Bill Nye had the truth well told when he said: "A man may use a wart on the back of his neck for a collar button; ride on the back coach of a railroad train to save intereston his money till the conductor gets around; stop his wacth at night to save wear and tear; leave his 'i' or 't' without a dot or cross to save ink; pasture his mother's grave to save corn; but a man of this sort is a scotleman and a scholar compared to the fellow that will take a newspaper two or three years and when asked to pay for it puts it into the office and has it marked "refused."

MUST ATTEND 40 DAYS.

St. Paul Minn., Feb. 5th 1907

Mr. T. A. Gundersen;
Rhoda Minn

Dear Sir:

In reply to your letter of January 31st let me say that an attendance of forty days in required in order that a pupil may be counted to share in the school appointionment.

J. W. Olson, Superintendent.

The Juice of the Grape.

The Arabs say that when the first grapevine was planted the demon Eblis sacrificed a peacock on the spot where the plant was set. As soon as it began to sprout forth he sacrificed an ape over it. When the grapes began to appear he slaughtered a lion, and when these were ripe he offered up a pig; hence it is that he who drinks wine feels at first as proud as a peacock and becomes subsequently as treacherous as an ape, as bold as a lion and as beastly as stupid as a swine.

Definition.

Asked to define a sufferfait, a British schoolboy answered, "A person who creates a disturbance." One boy described "sort" as "a form of seaweed which grows in the Pacific ocean." In an essay on the canine race a pupil declared that "small dogs improve by keeping," and another gave the singular of "oxalic" as "worstick."

There Yet.

Stout—My wife's mother has visited us only once, in five years. Mott—That isn't bad. When do you expect her to pay her second visit? Scott—Oh, she hasn't got through her first yet.—New York Telegraph.

Hardly.

She—I'm glad we went. It was an excellent performance, and for such a charitable purpose. Her husband—Yes, indeed! We all feel a thrill of satisfaction, when we do something for charity and get the worth of our money at the same time.—London Tit Bits.

Intended.

Bills—You made a funny break in congratulating the bride's father instead of the groom. Wills—No, I didn't. It's a dangling, too, sire, I carry what I say.—Chicago Journal.

Agility of Mares and Rabbits.

Interesting figures on the relative agility of mares and rabbits are given in a volume by J. G. Millais, "Breath of the Veldt." he says: "The height of the hare's stride is about four feet, but under conditions of fear it may extend 10 ten and twelve feet, while some hunters claim that it can jump ten ditches twenty feet in succession, width. Nevertheless, I have not jump on to a five foot wall, but seems to be bounded by one about six feet. The stride of the rabbit is about two feet. When necessary it can make a leap of six or seven feet horizontally. About three feet is the highest that a rabbit can attain to even when driven by the terrified pack upon sight." Mr. Millais adds how forcibly even when rabbit-shot he once saw a rabbit, with both hind legs and a fore leg broken, while the backs of the hind feet appear above the blemish at each stroke. The shoulders and front part of the body are buried beneath the water, while the rump and tail are high and dry."

You will never get on the sunny side by waiting for the world to turn round.—Atlanta Constitution.

Splendors of Cafes.

The cafes and hotels of New York are rivaling each other in the almost oriental splendor with which they have fitted up small rooms for dinner and after theater parties. At one cafe near Broadway the sides of one of these rooms are composed entirely of mirrors, after the French fashion, while the ceiling is covered with green leaves and grapes, bunches of pink and purple grapes of glass, within which are electric lights. The effect is that of a beautiful arbor. Another cafe has mirrors reflecting small red lights throughout the room, while the ceiling, also of mirrors, is an exquisite imitation of moonlight, the effect of which is obtained by electrics inclosed in globes of the color and sheen of an moonlight seen through a delicate tracery of faint green leaves.—Exchange.

A Sad Case.

A Chicago physician was one day called to attend a sick child in a shabby genteel quarter of the Windy City.

"Madam," said the doctor to the mother, "you should send this child into the country for several weeks each summer."

"I am sorry to say, doctor," responded the woman, "that we are not rich enough to do that."

"Then," suggested the physician, "have her sent by the fresh air fund."

"Oh, no!" exclaimed the woman, "we are not poor enough!"—Harper's Weekly.

Too Selfish.

Clitman—What's the matter with all you Swampshire fellows? You don't seem to like my friend Bucklots. Subbubs—No; he's selfish, Clitman.—Oh come now! Subbubs—That's what he is. A barn near him caught fire the other night, and he put it out without waiting for the rest of us members of the Swampshire Hose to reach the scene.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Comfortable Portions.

"What is your idea of a comfortable fortune?" asked the ambitious youth.

"One," answered the man of experience, "that is big enough to buy you everything you want and not big enough to attract the attention of the grand jury."—Washington Star.

A Novelty.

Guest—I hear you are going to give up housekeeping. Host—Eh? Not so loud! My wife wants to have the satisfaction of discharging the cook.—Puck.

Safest Place In Trains.

"I have one rule for my family when they travel, said the conductor of the suburban train, "and that is for them never to ride in the rear coach or the first one and, preferably, not in the coach next to the last or first. The reason for it is so obvious that I should think the forgetful last cars of a train would have scant patronage from anybody who reads of railroad accidents. If there is a smashup, those are the coaches that suffer. It seems strange that some kind of a buffer is not put behind the locomotive tender and at the rear of the train. How many lives would be saved by a device of the kind one has only to study the statistics of railroad accidents to figure out for himself."—New York Press

A Precise Answer.

"Lawyers are supposed to be the most literal minded men," said the prominent member of the bar, "but every now and then connect in edurse of practice will encounter witnesses who can give them points in the matter of literal knowledge. An Irishman was called to testify in a damage suit arising out of the death of a man 'at the hands of a bull,' so to speak.

"'Are we to understand, sir,' asked the prosecuting attorney, 'that the deceased, Patrick Flanigan, was your father?'

"'He was sir,' the boy killed him,' was the quick reply."

CRACK NUT SUNDAY.

Queer Method of Hearing a Sermon Still in Use in England.

"One fine autumn Sunday I attended a service in a north of England country church that would have driven a New York preacher clean crazy," said the man who travels. "The congregation didn't do a thing but sit around and crack nuts. Fancy a New York minister talking to a crowd of that kind! The modern preacher likes to have things quiet when he talks. It disconcerts him to hear a baby cry or a woman cough or an old man snore. If he is put out by such trifles as these, it is interesting to conjecture what he would do if he were to take hold of a congregation whose every body brought nuts to crack during the sermon.

"Throughout, it seems, used to do this in England and even in our own states during colonial days. This disturbance was not a weekly occurrence by any means. If it had been, the poor preacher would have undoubtedly left his flock to administer spiritual consolation to suit themselves. But as it happened only once a year he was forced to endure it. This one day which was attended by such remarkable license came the Sunday before Michaelmas day and was called 'cracknut Sunday.' Nobody, no matter how pious he might be, hesitated to avail himself of the peculiar privilege granted him, and men, women and children came to church with their pockets stuffed with nuts, which their complacently cracked and munched during the sermon.

"It was that kind of a sermon that so impressed me with its oddity. It can be easily imagined that when forty or fifty people get to cracking nuts with all their might the noise is not to be something terrific, and many times the minister was hard put to it to hear himself think. That custom, from being regarded with high favor for many years, finally came to be looked upon as a nuisance, and the habit was suppressed, except in a few remote localities, although the act of suppression was attended with considerable difficulty, as family feuds and cracking nuts took hold of the fancy of the people."—New York Press.

Obedience.

A Story of Sir Robert Ball.

Sir Robert Ball, the noted British astronomer, on one occasion went to a remote town in Ireland to lecture on his favorite science. On the night for the lecture all the [illegible] disappeared at once, but he could not find out where they had gone. "Is there a Ball?" he inquired of an enthusiastic reply the most locally appointed, replied: "Sure, your honor, I'm sorry I kept you waiting, but I was [illegible] to look for an intellectual gintleman." Sir Robert thought that under the circumstances it would be better not to inquire what was the town's idea of intellectuality.

Oddly Marked Tombstone.

In an old graveyard in Maine the monument to the tomb of a distinguished family is marked with the outline of a human leg. It is formed by black streaks in the granite running through the stone, for at the back there is another leg, but much smaller in dimension. Nobody saw this blemish when the stone was set up. Not until years had passed did any one notice it. People contended that the stonecutters, not wishing to go to the expense of quarrying out another block, so hid the leg with cement and stone dust that the actions of the storms of a dozen winters were necessary to expose the dastardly fraud thus perpetrated.

An Odd Little Anagram.

Here is an interesting little puzzle and anagram which was published in a newspaper several years ago:

—— old woman with —— intent
Pat on her —— and to market went.
"——," said she, "give me, I pray,
The wherewithal to —— this day."

Each of the blanks is to be filled with a word of four letters, and the same letters occur in each of the five different words. These words are consecutively "vile," "veil," "veil," "Levi" and "live."

Her Share.

"Haigsby has a new scheme that he purposes substituting for the ordinary wear off idea. He is going to carry a little savings bank around with him, and every time he buys liquid refreshments he will drop the cash equivalent in the bank for his wife."

"Whose idea is it?"

"Haigsby's wife. She thinks there'll be a little something in it for her."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Looking For Trouble.

TOMMY AND LOVE

BY HAROLD HUNT

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

I never did think much of girls—never! Either they are kinda sappy and lezzy things, and think they can play games just as well as boys, or else they are flirty and silly, and think one ought to be always making love to them.

Love, indeed! Such rot! Well, I don't mind telling you that last term, when I caught Stewart Mills writing a love letter to his Cousin Grace, I gave him the worst licking he'd had in his life. The cheek of him. You see we'd allowed him to join our fraternity, our grand, mysterious society that some chaps would give their ears to be allowed to join, only we don't allow it to become too cheap—the "Brotherhood of the Gory Hand"—and one of the rules we have to take in not to let ourselves be mixed up in any nonsense with women. We are all to be either detectives, or pirates, or discoverers of unknown countries when we grow up, and in any of those noble professions one is sure to come to grief if one doesn't steer clear of the women.

So, I never did think much of girls; and after the episode I am about to relate—doesn't that sound grand and mysterious?—after the episode I am about to relate, you may bet your boots I think less of them than ever.

It really did seem as if Marjorie Verschoyle was more decent than most of them. She was older, for one thing—quite grown up; and she could talk quite sensible—for a girl—about football and hockey and golf, and other things that are really worth talking about, and she saw me bring a gun home from the garden without shrieking and not crying out: "Oh! do take care! Are you sure it isn't loaded?"

So I wasn't quite so stiff and standoffish with her as I am with most girls on principle—and I explained to her one or two things about sports that she had got a little muddled with, and she tried her very best to understand and wasn't really so stupid, for a girl.

So really liked to talk to her, and soon got frightfully disgusted I was when I came upon her one evening in the garden with that solemn ass, Leonard Ashwell, and I do believe he was talking poetry about the moonlight!

As I came near, I saw Marjorie's Aunt Henrietta coming down from the house to look for her. Marjorie Verschoyle called out to me quite eagerly to join what scare the football team had made. No doubt she was fired to death of Shelley and the moonlight, and glad to have a little sensible conversation for a change.

"Oh! It's Tommy Braddon," said Aunt Henrietta. (Steamwhile Ashwell had sneaked off down the shrubbery). "I am so short sighted, but I really thought—"

"Mr. Braddon is giving me a most interesting account of the game," said Marjorie.

We had quite a good talk; she seemed to want to get the taste of Ashwell's poetry and moonlight out of her mouth, but half an hour after, when I strolled down the garden to have a cheroot—a cheroot, because if he was out at it again looking at her as sentimentally as—as a cat at a saucer of cream—but there wasn't much sentiment after I joined them, you bet!

Then that Ashwell began trying to make friends with me—asked me into his room to have a quiet smoke, and so on. I suppose he saw that Miss Verschoyle thought me end of me, and so he wanted to get on my right side. But I am not so easily fooled.

Miss Verschoyle was quite interested to hear that I had been in his rooms, and asked me heaps of questions about the furniture and ornaments, and especially about the photographs.

"Was there one of Miss Disart?" she asked. Miss Disart was a girl who was staying at our home, too—a handsome girl, but not my style. She was making a dead set at Leonard Ashwell.

"No," I told her, "there wasn't one of Miss Disart, but there was a portrait on his writing-table that he was always gazing at when he thought I wasn't looking."

"What—what was it like?" she asked.

"Well, I think it was an actress," I said. (She quite shuddered). "She had a star in her hair, and stars on her dress, and a great deal of bare shoulder."

Miss Verschoyle blushed. Fancy blushing because I talked of an actress' bare shoulder! But I like girls to be simple, don't you? For us men it's quite different, but a girl can't be too simple for me.

"And you're sure there isn't one of Miss Disart?" she asked again.

"Sure," I said. "I've got one of her, though, if you want to see one. Her brother swopped it with a lot of other rubbish for my old camera."

"Look here," said Marjorie confidentially, "I wish you would offer to give it to him in exchange for the—for the actress, you know. I should like just to know what he would say."

"By Jove! I will," I cried; "but I'm sure he's too far gone on that actress!" She actually blushed again!

Next time I saw her, she said: "Well, what success?"

"It is just as I expected," I said: "he would not hear of parting with that photograph."

And then she was nicer to me than ever. And she would hardly speak to Leonard Ashwell that day and the next. And he seemed quite low-spirited about it.

And in the evening I heard him trying to persuade her to come with him down to the lake. She seemed hesitating, so I just whispered to her as I happened to pass: "Remember the actress!"

She looked at me and smiled. "Thank you, Tommy, I will."

Just then her Aunt Henrietta came out.

"Where are you going, Marjorie?" She was always following Marjorie about and noticing whom she was talking with.

"I was going down to the lake," said Marjorie. "Mr. Braddon will take care of me, won't you, Mr. Braddon?"

Of course I walked off with her, leaving Leonard Ashwell standing there, and jolly well serve him right!

But we had hardly got to the lake when Marjorie began to shiver, and I got a notion to fetch her a shawl from the house.

Well, of course, I had to go and fetch it; and when I came back, she didn't seem to need a shawl, not much, for Leonard Ashwell's arms were round her, and she had her head on his shoulder.

Leonard Ashwell's Arms Were Areund Her.

As you may imagine, I was speechless with disgust. And then she actually had the audacity to kiss her before me and to say: "Congratulate me, Tommy. You've been our best friend all through."

As if I wanted to be a friend to a pair of spoony lunatics!

And the nerve? Well, it turned out to be a photograph of Marjorie herself in fancy dress, and flattered out of all recognition.

And if a girl who once seemed to have some glimmerings of sense in her can make such a fool of herself as that, can you wonder that I think less of the sex than ever?

Absentminded Man.

"I guess I had the most absentminded man in the world in my chair this morning," said a Seventeenth street barber yesterday. "He came in and sat down near the door to wait his turn. I noticed 'em at him two or three times when my chair was vacant, but he was dreaming and didn't hear me. Finally I touched him on the shoulder and told him I was ready for him.

"'What do you want me to do?' he asked.

"'Why, get in the chair if you want anything,' I replied. 'This is a harber shop.'

"'Oh, yes,' he said, and then he got into the chair. He leaned back so I let the chair down and shaved him. He didn't have a word to say. When I finished him up to he got out of the chair and took the check over to the cashier. He paid and started out. When half way through the door he stopped.

"'Say,' he said to me, 'what did you do to me?'

"'I shaved you,' I said.

"'Darn the luck,' he replied, 'I wanted a haircut.' Then he went out sorrowful."—Denver Post.

High Time for Compromise.

In McIntosh county, Georgia, there was a lawsuit about a cow. The cow was dead, but the lawsuit went on.

It was decided by the justice of the peace, appealed, remanded, decided again, and once more appealed and remanded. This went on until the case came back to the squire for the eleventh time.

It was a jury case, and when the last trial was on the squire astonished the attorney by announcing an indefinite postponement, saying:

"This case has exhausted the whole jury venire of the county, and you will have to wait until the coming generation gets old enough for jury service."

Then the litigants compromised.

His Experience.

"After all," said the philosopher, "the real joy of a thing is in the anticipation of it."

"Well," replied Henpeck, "if there's any joy in matrimony that must be it."—Catholic Standard and Times.

JUST ESCAPED THE HOT FLAT.

He was a regular tramp.

"You say you want to raise enough money to go into business?"

"Exactly, mum."

"Well, here's five cents. Now, may I ask what kind of a business you intend going into?"

"Certinly, mum. Yer see, durin' de past ten years I have bin sittin' on de park benches hullgin' castles in de air. Well, now dat dey are gittin' up air ships for ferry passengers, I'm goin' ter remodel my air castles an' transform dem inter air-ship stations."

When the woman returned with the hot fritiron from the stove the tramp had disappeared down the road.—Judge.

The Evils of Divorce.

Wilfred and Elsie were quarreling over a costly doll. Wilfred had a good grip on the doll's leg, and Elsie held on to the china head with both hands. They pulled and quarreled simultaneously.

"Elsie!" came mamma's voice from somewhere in the kitchen, "what's all that noise about?"

After a short pause Elsie replied, "Nothin', ma; we're only playin' divorce, an' Wilfred's fighting for the custody of our doll."—Judge.

A Severe Task.

"They are going to make a comic opera, with you as the central figure," said Watson.

"Ah, indeed?" murmured Sherlock Holmes. "Now, what can be their object in putting me into a comic opera? There is a mystery here, Watson. We must deduct a few deductions."

"It is perfectly simple, Sherlock. They are going to turn you loose in it-to see if you can find the plot."—Judge.

Why He Was Grateful.

"Ah, my dear Mr. Bridefess," said Mr. Hardcash, seizing the young hairraiser's hand and shaking it warmly, "I am so immensely obliged to you. That case of mine the other day, you know—I won it triumphantly."

"Thanks," replied Bridefess; "but did I represent you?"

"No, my dear fellow," replied Hardcash; "you represented the other man."

Getting His Answer First.

"You know," she said, "I am not much of a conversationalist."

This seemed to him the opportunity for which he had been waiting.

"Well," he returned, "if I do the proposing and talking your conversational ability will be sufficient to enable you to say 'Yes,' won't it?"

After all, in courtship there is nothing like getting your answer before you ask the question.

FADED TO A SHADOW.

Worn Down by Five Years of Suffering from Kidney Complaint.

Mrs. Remethe Myers, of 180 South Tenth St., Ironton, O., says: "I have worked hard in my time and have been exposed again and again to all kinds of weather. It is no wonder my kidneys gave out and I went all to pieces at last.

For five years I was fading away and really was that for six months I could not get out of the house. I was nervous, restless and sleepless at night, and tired and sore in the morning. Sometimes everything would whirl and blur before me, I bloated so badly I could not wear tight clothing, and had to put on shoes two sizes larger than usual. The urine was disordered and passages were dreadfully frequent. I got help from the first box of Doan's Kidney Pills, however, and by the time I had taken four boxes the pain and bloating were gone. I have been in good health ever since."

Secret of Japan's Success.

Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton of the British army wrote the evening after one of the great battles which he had witnessed between Russians and Japanese in the recent war in Manchuria: "To bed! Although it is with reluctance that I prepare to lose my grip of the exciting consciousness that I have to-day seen the most stupendous spectacle that it is possible for mortal brain to conceive—Asia advancing, Europe falling back; the wall of mist and whirling cannon." Then as to the meaning of this retreat of Europe before advancing Asia: "The more I think the more certain I am that it was not strategy or tactics, or armament or information, which won the battle of Liaoyang for Oyama, but that it was rather the souls of the Japanese troops which triumphed over the less developed, less awakened, less stimulated qualities of the Russians."

THREE BOYS HAD ECZEMA.

Were Treated at Dispensary—Did Not Improve—Suffered Five Months —Perfect Cure by Cuticura.

"My three children had eczema for five months. A little sore would appear on the head and seemed very itchy, increasing day after day. The baby had had it about a week when the second boy took the disease and a few sores developed, then the third boy took it. For the first three months I took them to the X— Dispensary, but they did not seem to improve. Then I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment and in a few weeks they had improved, and when their heads were well you could see nothing of the sores. Valuable Rubber Plant.

A German maid with a knowledge of English just sufficient to get things mixed was much interested in the house plants of her mistress, who possessed, among others, a rubber plant.

One day while sweeping the room she had occasion to move this particular plant, when she remarked that she had read in the paper that a rubber plant worth $200,000 burned in Woonsocket, and she thought it must have been a beautiful plant to have cost so much money.

WILLING TO LET HIM DIE.

Stinging Message Sent by Farmer Wersted in Business Deal.

In the old colony town of Scituate, Mass., once lived Deacon J——, who had a yoke of oxen he desired to sell. The news reached the ears of Farmer T——, who lived in another portion of the town, who was in want of a pair. So he visited the deacon, who met him with a gracious smile and led him to the oxen, which were chewing their cuds and to all appearances ready for any amount of toil.

After some bargaining a difference of five dollars remained. Finally the deacon said: "I am old and feeble, and shall not live long, and five dollars will be of no account," so the bargain was made. Farmer T— took the oxen home.

They proved worthless, could not work, and had been heated. He felt provoked at being sold, and, seeing a person the next day who was going to the part of the town where the deacon lived, said: "You tell Deacon J—— he need not live another d—d minute longer on my account."

HORTICULTURE

A TREE GUARD.

How Young Trees Can Be Protected From Cattle.

Very often young trees, maples especially, are entirely destroyed by cattle reaching up and pulling the tops down, even when the tops would seem to be out of reach. Of course, cattle should not be where young trees are planted, especially fruit trees; but it sometimes happens that this is not practical. When this is the case use a guard such as is shown in the illustration, says Montreal Herald. It is made as follows:

Take two pieces of board (such as have come off some old building), say about seven feet long, breadth between eight and 12 inches. Leave one of these boards intact. Cut the other into three equal lengths, and nail into the top of the uncut board, as shown in the illustration. Sometimes, if the fence is high enough, a short board, the one facing the fence, can be left out and a cleat used instead. The tree, before putting up the guard, should be pointed and the guard nailed to this post.

MISTAKES IN ORCHARDING.

Common Errors Committed by the Inexperienced.

The first mistake I think all beginners make is in assuming that it is only necessary to secure a piece of ground, and without any knowledge of soil adaptability plant Ben Davis trees and then expect, without much expense or labor, to in a few years reap a golden harvest.

Another mistake is in neglecting to carefully prune each and every year until bearing. If pruning is neglected for three, four or five years at a time, it is almost impossible without great humid to ever get the top in such condition as will make a profitable bearing tree.

It is a mistake, says Farm and Home, to set trees perpendicularly. They should lean sharply, perhaps 20 degrees, to the southwest if you would have them standing erect at bearing.

Corn, peas, beans or potatoes may be cultivated among young trees, but small grains or grasses never. Timothy, rye or clover is less injurious than oats, which is about equal to a fire in destructive elements. It is a mistake to allow cattle or sheep, under any circumstances, to pasture in apple orchards in any season of the year.

It is a great mistake after the trees get to be five years old not to keep the orchard well stocked with young boys. I find young hogs a very efficient and cheap cultivator to have around the trunk of the tree, if properly encouraged by sprinkling a few handfuls of wheat or rye under the tree where you want tending done. They are also one of the very cheapest and best exterminators of field mice, which are getting to be one of the worst species of apply tree pests in some regions.

Another mistake I think we all make, more or less, is in allowing the grub and flat headed borers to take care of themselves and likewise of the trees. Trees should be carefully examined twice a year, spring and fall, for these pests. Most of us only examine such trees as show by the unhealthy appearance of the foliage that they are affected. I think the foliage of the trees will not indicate the ravages of borers until the second year after first attacked. There will be nothing lost in examining each and every tree for borers, whether you find them or not.

Pruning the Peach.

The Massachusetts Experiment station recommends the following as the best method of pruning the peach tree: Prune peach trees moderately, removing not more than one-third to one-half the previous year's annual growth, when the wood has been injured by freezing. When only the fruit buds are killed the wood being uninjured and the trees in good condition, prune severely, cutting back the annual growth to two or three buds. It may be expedient to cut some branches back even into two or three year-old wood.

Ideal Trade Conditions.

Women should not get credit. Neither should men. Cash is the cure. Tradesmen, maybe, would have a bad time for six or 12 months, and many a lady would have to "lie low," but in the end we would get both our trade and our money, and she would get her dress, and at far less cost.—London Opinion.

Triumph of American Duchess.

Helen, duchess of Manchester, is now lady-in-waiting to Queen Alexandra, and the first American to receive that honor. So much for marrying the only son of the most popular duchess at the court of Edward VII. Other American duchesses may shrug and say they wouldn't be a lady in waiting on any account; but don't you believe them. It is a royal distinction tremendously valued by English noblewomen, and the next step in the politicol plum to be made mistress of the robes.—Boston Herald.

TACK THIS UP.

Simple Advice Which May Prove of Untold Value.

At the first sign of Beckache or pain in the region of the Kidneys, or weekness and Urinary trouble, the following simple prescription should be used:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Any good prescription pharmacy will supply these three ingredients at small cost, which can easily be mixed by shaking well in a bottle. This is said to force the Kidneys to filter the sour acids and poisons from the blood, overcoming the worst cases of Rheumatism.

THE ARTISTIC WALL.

One of Solid Color Will Always Give Best Effect.

The dearest, daintiest, most artistic wall is a solid colored wall. It furnishes a perfect background for all kinds of pictures, it throws them out in their correct proportions, and does not detract from their artistic value. The solid colored wall is also much better as a background for furniture, and harmonizes much more artistically with carpets and rugs than any other method of wall treatment. The less breaking up of color on a wall the more artistic it is.

The most successful form of the solid colored wall is an alabastined wall. There is as much difference between tinted walls, as there is between shoddy and all-wool gowns. The shoddy gown holds its color for a few days, while the all-wool keeps its color to the very last thread, so also in solid colored walls, there are shoddy walls and permanently colored walls which retain their color down to the very last particles. The ideal wall coming never rubs off, never flakes nor chips off and is always ready for a fresh coat. If there is wallpaper on the wall scrape it off with some hot water, then go over the plaster after you have removed the paper with warm water to remove every trace of paste. Have the wall thoroughly clean for a clean wall cannot be built on an unclean foundation. If there are any particles of foreign matter adhering to the wall brush them off with a putty knife. Then if there are any discolorations on the wall, size it with an material made from cheap varnish, thinned down with benzine and japan added for a drier, then cover your wall with your tinting material.

Be sure your man uses a tinting material mixed with cold water. If he uses hot water, which is best for warm water, you can make up your mind that there is glue in the material which he proposes to put on your wall, and you can be certain that you are going to have a shoddy wall, for glue means shoddy. Glue means that it will hold its color long enough for the man to collect his bill and not much longer. Insist on your tinting material being mixed with clear, cold water. Be sure that your wall is made from pure materials, then you will have a permanent, artistic, sanitary wall. A wall that will be a "thing of beauty and a joy forever."

FOOLED THE PREACHER.

A Doctor's Brother Thought Postum Was Coffee.

A wise doctor found out coffee was hurting him, so he quit drinking it. He was so lucky with his practice, however, that his wife had to write how he fooled his brother, a clergyman, one day at dinner. She says:

"Doctor found coffee was injuring his health and decided to give Postum a trial, and we have used it now for four years, with continued benefit. In fact, he is now more than the long train of ills that follow coffee drinking.

"To show how successful we are in making Postum properly I will relate an incident. At a dinner we gave, Doctor suggested we serve Postum instead of ordinary coffee.

"Doctor's brother, a Clergyman, supposed it was old fashioned coffee and remarked, as he called for his second cup: 'If you do preach against coffee, I see you haven't forgotten how to make it.'"

"This goes to show that well-made—fully boiled—Postum has much the flavor and richness of good coffee although it has an individuality all its own. A ten days' trial will prove that it has none of the poisonous effect of ordinary coffee, but will correct the troubles caused by coffee. "There's a reason." THE VALUE OF PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE

Personal knowledge is the winning factor in the culminating contests of this competitive age and when of ample character it places its fortunate possessor in the front ranks of

The Well Informed of the World.

A vast fund of personal knowledge is really essential to the achievement of the highest excellence in any field of human effort.

A Knowledge of Forms, Knowledge of Functions and Knowledge of Products are all of the utmost value and in questions of life and health when a true and wholesome remedy is desired it should be remembered that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., is an ethical product which has met with the approval of the most eminent physicians and gives universal satisfaction, because it is a remedy of Known Quality, Known Excellence and Known Component Parts and has won the valuable patronage of millions of the Well Informed of the world, who know of their own personal knowledge and from actual use that it is the first and best of family laxatives, for which no extravagant or unreasonable claims are made.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to worldwide acceptance as the most excellent family laxative. As its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well Informed of the world to be the best we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as a more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of—Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects, always note, when purchasing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, whether you call for—Syrup of Figs —or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna.

WOMEN IN HOSPITALS

Experiences of Mrs. Rockwood and Miss Tierney

MISS MARGARET TIERNEY

MRS. CHAS. A. ROCKWOOD

A large proportion of the operations performed in our hospitals are upon women and girls for chronic organic trouble.

Why should this be the case?

Because they have neglected themselves, as every one of these patients in the hospital will bad plenty of warning in those dragging sensations, pains at left or right of abdomen, backache, leucorrhea, catarrhal inflammation, ulceration, displacements, and other breakdowns.

All of these symptoms are indications of an unhealthy condition of the female system and if not heeded the penalty has to be paid by a dangerous operation. When these symptoms manifest themselves, do not drag along until you are obliged to go to the hospital and submit to an operation—but remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, has saved hundreds of women from surgical operations.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured more cases of feminine ills than any other one remedy. Such letters as the following are constantly being received by Mrs. Pinkham to prove our claims.

Mrs. C. A. Rockwood, Secretary of Parliamentary Law, of 58 Free St., Portland, Me., writes:

"For years I suffered with female trouble. It was decided that an operation was necessary, and although I submitted to a serious operation, I suffered intense misery until Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended and it proved a wonderful remedy, so quickly did it restore my health. I would thank you sufficiently for the good it has done me."

Miss Margaret Tierney, of No. 328 W. 30th Street, New York, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"When only eighteen years of age our physician decided that an operation was necessary to permit of my womanly organs performing their natural functions. My mother objected and being urged by a relative to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did so. I soon improved in health, the proper conditions were established and I am well and strong, thanks to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

No other remedy has such unqualified endorsement as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. No other remedy in the world has such a record of cures of female ills.

ON SECRET SERVICE

True Stories of Experiences in the State, War, Treasury and Postoffice Departments.

By COL. JASPER EWING BRADY

The New $100,000 Policy

"Sid, I'm going to take a run down to New York for a day or so. You watch out at the office until I get back. Nothing special doing here, but something may come up. Address me at the Grand hotel until further notice." Thus spoke Col. Jack Cheney to his friend and associate, Sidney Guthrie, one bright, warm morning in June.

"What is it, colonel? A business trip or just a desire to have a look at old Broadway?"

"Both, Sid, both. Chicago is a little dead now. I've put in a pretty hard winter and spring, and now I think I'll take a rest for a few days. Of course I'll look in the office several times while I'm there."

"All right, Jack. We'll try to get along without you for awhile. Have a good time and come back when you're rested."

Jeff, the ebon-hued faithful servitor, was told to get the colonel's bag ready. Sometimes when away on trips Col. Cheney took Jeff along as his personal attendant. Jeff hoped he would do so this time, but the colonel said:

"No, Jeff, not this trip. Next time maybe. I'm just going to loaf for awhile in New York and vicinity, and I want to get away from every one."

"Ah'm drefful sorry to see you go, kunnel, but Ah'll try an' survive."

"Oh, I guess you'll get along all right. Mr. Guthrie will probably keep you busy."

"Dat's jess it, kunnel. Mistah Guthrie do keep me pow'ful busy; mo'n you do."

"Well, Jeff, I've noticed you're getting a trifle fat and a little extra work won't hurt you. Get out, you rascal!"

"Yas, sah. Huh, huh," chuckled Jeff, as he went out. Jeff once said "He always noticed Kunnel Cheney only abuse dose he loved. W'en he was pow'ful perlite ter anyone hit meant dar was gwine to be se'yus trable."

The Lake Shore Limited that evening carried Cheney eastward, and he gave himself up to complete relaxation. He was tired, brain fagged, and wanted a little surcease. He buried himself in a light novel and just laid off. At six the next night he landed in New York. At the Grand hotel he met several chance acquaintances. After supper he wandered up to the Casino. Some light fantastic musical comedy was playing there, and Cheney really enjoyed it. Between the acts he strolled out in the foyer and was enjoying a quiet smoke when he heard a voice say:

"By Jove, it can't be. No—yes it is. Hello, Col. Cheney, how are you?"

The colonel turned, and there stood Mr. Darius P. King, president of one of the great life insurance companies. Cheney knew him well, had done a great deal of delicate and intricate work for his company, and Mr. King had a profound liking for Cheney as a detective and as a soldier, but above all as a man. They saw each other frequently when either came to Chicago or New York, and as Mr. King was a wealthy unencumbered widower, Cheney was more than glad to see him. A cordial handshake and he said:

"Why, I am glad to see you, King, more than glad."

"What brings you east this time?"

"Nothing, King, absolutely nothing."

"Nothing! Well, by Jove, this is the first time I've ever known you to be doing nothing."

"Well, you see, I got a little tired out, wanted to get away, and here I am for a few days' rest."

"New York's a good place to rest."

The commencement of the second act interrupted the conversation, but after the theater the two men went to a restaurant, had a quiet little supper and a heart to heart talk. It was 12:30 when they parted, and Cheney was to lunch with King at 12:30 the next day. "Come down earlier than 12:30," said King, "and stay as late as you like. My office is a good place to loaf."

"I've never seen any loafing there," laughed Cheney, remembering that King was called "the stiletto," on account of his incisive manner and actions. "Good night, old man."

"Good night, colonel."

About noon the next day Cheney strolled into the stately marble pile on lower Broadway, known as the home office of King's life insurance company. It was like getting up to royalty to reach the head of one of these great financial institutions, but Col. Cheney's card was an open sesame, and in a few minutes he was comfortably fixed in King's palatial office. Mr. King was seated behind his desk, on which were papers, checks and what not. All about was a seeming confusion, but the president knew every paper, every item.

"Anything new, King?" asked Cheney, lighting a fragrant cigar.

"No," answered King, holding a package of papers and a check in his hand. He looked intently at the papers, studied a minute, then raising his eyes, he said:

"Cheney, here's a peculiar case. I've heard you speak of 'hunches,' I remember your man Guthrie has had several successful ones. I've got one right now, have had it ever since these papers came to me for approval yesterday morning, and, like Banco's ghost, it will not down."

"What's the case, King?" asked Cheney, beginning to take notice. Intuitively his mind scented mystery.

"It's a death claim for $100,000. That in itself is not unusual, and the papers are regularly made out. The policy had only been in force 30 days, when the insured died. That, too, is not unusual; but the claim comes up from Mexico, and everything from Mexico reeks of fraud."

"Where does the hunch come in?"

"The 'hunch' says it's fraud. But the papers have been passed on by the various regular departments and committees, and sent me for approval. I guess I'll have to sign them up and get them out of the way." Mr. King dipped his pen in the ink and was about to sign his name, when Cheney quietly said:

"Wait—don't sign."

"Why not?"

"Well, I'm away on a vacation, and this trip to Mexico looks good to me. You give me the papers and draft for $100,000, also give me authority to act in the case. I'll go to Mexico, and if I find everything O. K. I'll pay the claim; if not, why I'll run down the culprit for you."

"By Jove, that's a good idea. You bet I'll do it, and gladly." In a few moments the check, papers and all documents were in Cheney's possession, and after luncheon he bade King good bye, saying he would study the papers all afternoon and that night would leave for Mexico. He did study the papers carefully, from the application to the death claim. The two medical examinations, inspection report, everything was in due form. The insured's name was Juan Silva; occupation, rancher; residence, near Torreon, Mexico; the cause of death was given as typhus fever, and the beneficiary's name was Maria Silva, sister. The medical examination revealed the fact that Juan Silva had one brother and sister living, none dead; the father and mother had been killed years ago by the Yaqui Indians. The family history was good; Juan Silva was 35 years old, wealthy and healthy, and according to the American table of mortality had an expectation of 31.78 years. Yet one month after he was dead and his sister was to get $100,000. "That's a good deal of money for a Greaser," muttered Cheney. "I never saw one worth that much." The agent in the case was R. H. Thomas, agency manager at Torreon, and the premium, $3,875, had been paid in cash on delivery of the policy.

That night Cheney left for the south and five days afterwards landed in Torreon. The Mexican is a suspicious being at best, and once let a well dressed American (Gringo, as he is called) alight in one of their towns and everybody, from the Jefe Politico down to the humblest peon, has a guess as to what his business is. Cheney was no different from the rest. He spoke Spanish rather well and allowed his landlord and others to imagine he had money and wanted to purchase a mine. This was his most plausible tale, because the Silvas, he learned, lived back in the hills and he would have to go there in course of the investigation. Cheney carefully looked up the parties in the case. Thomas, the agent, was well known. He lived well, wrote a good deal of insurance, drank a good deal of mescal and pulque, and was rather familiar with monte. He had a claim or two, and rumor had it that he was going in heavy for mines. He was reputed to have a wealthy brother back in the States who would back him financially. Thomas was a trifle sporty, perhaps, but not enough to condemn him, and his accounts were in good shape. That much Cheney had learned before leaving New York. The two doctors were named Wilmarth and Suydam, both men of character, Wilmarth being especially well thought of by everyone. He had lived in Torreon for years and had made many cures considered marvelous by the natives. The inspector was Charles M. Bull, a plain spoken, honest gentleman. So much for the insurance side.

Maria Silva, the beneficiary, was about 25 years old, and, like all Mexican women, looked a great deal older. She wasn't very popular; in fact the Silva family, though reputed to be wealthy, was not thought much of in the vicinity of Torreon. Their hacienda was situated about 19 miles due west of Torreon, midway between there and Guarda. Eduardo Silva, brother of Maria, was a typical Mexican high roller. The bull fights at Mexico City and Chihuahua were always graced by his presence. Juan Silva, the deceased, for years had been a recluse and was seldom seen.

The application and examination had taken place in Torreon, and yet the physician's affidavit attached to the death claim had been made in Guarda and signed by two Mexican doctors, Beltran and Aguiles by name. The undertaker also came from Guarda; in fact, in life the business was transacted in Torreon; in death, in Guarda. The only man who figured in both cases was Thomas, the agency manager in Torreon, and the man that wrote the policy.

"That's devilish funny," muttered Cheney as he went over the case. "Why couldn't those death claim papers have been signed here? Dr. Wilmarth should have seen that corpse." Cheney determined to take Dr. Wilmarth into his confidence, and did so. The doctor was more than willing to help him.

One morning a short time later they quietly slipped out of Torreon and that afternoon were in Guarda. They called on Drs. Beltran and Aguiles. They were good enough doctors and evidently honest in their statements. In answer to a question by Cheney Dr. Beltran said:

"Yes, he and Dr. Aguiles had attended Juan Silva. He had virulent typhus fever and after a few days' sickness he suddenly died. That was all they knew of the case."

"Not much, is it, Dr. Wilmarth?" said Cheney.

"No, and I am prone to believe the doctors."

"Now for the undertaker."

That worthy's name was Sanchez, and he was a shifty Mexican.

"Si, senor, he had buried Juan Silva; such a grand senor he was!"

"Cut that, please, senor," snapped Cheney. "You are sure the body was that of Juan Silva?"

"Ah, gracias Dio, senor, have I not known Juan Silva for many years? Si, si, it was his body, there could be no mistake."

"Where did you bury him?"

"At Dolores, on the hill yonder, senor."

Not much was made out of Sanchez, and Cheney and Wilmarth left.

"Doctor," said Cheney, "I'm going to have that body exhumed. I know it won't be in a very pleasing state, but you can perhaps tell whether the body is that of the man you examined for insurance."

"Unless there is a marked discrepancy between the corpse and the Juan Silva I examined, I may have trouble in making an identification, but we shall see."

It was not an easy matter to get permission to have the body exhumed, but a judicious use of money and moral suasion won out. Two husky peons were hired and Cheney sent for Sanchez, the undertaker, but he had disappeared. The party went to the cemetery and after more trouble found the grave of Juan Silva.

Cheney and Dr. Wilmarth sat down in the shade of a tree while the peons dug. They even smoked a corn husk cigarette or two, so common in Mexico. Mexican peons will work just so fast and no faster, and it was slow work waiting. But finally their shovels struck the coffin box and a little later it was lifted out and placed under a tree. Only a few minutes were needed to remove the screws, exposing the casket. When the lid was lifted and the contents exposed, Dr. Wilmarth said:

"Well, by God, colonel, the body has been destroyed by quick lime!"

Cheney looked. The detective was uppermost now. A few quick motions and the entire top of the coffin was off. There was a mass of quick lime and matter exposed, but all semblance of a human body was gone. A few strands of dark hair at the head, the dim outline of a body, and the leather sole of a shoe at the foot were all that remained.

"Look at your medical report, quick, doctor. How tall was the man you examined?"

"Six feet one; weight, 192 pounds."

A tape line came out of Cheney's pocket and he carefully measured from the hair to the sole, following the outline of where the body had lain.

"Five feet nine, doctor," he said. "I thought so. A case of substitution, by all that's good. Now to nab the birds. We'll have them by to-morrow night."

Dr. Wilmarth had lived so long in Mexico, he was somewhat imbued with the prevalent Manana spirit, but his American blood rose rapidly under the influence of Cheney.

The next morning about 11:30 they rode up to the Silva hacienda.

"Senorita Silva at home?" he asked a servant.

"Si, senor, si," and in a few minutes Senorita Maria Silva appeared on the porch.

"Buenos Dias, senors," she said, in the soft language of old Mexico. "Won't you sit down?"

"Thank you, senorita," said Cheney, raising his hat. "Dr. Wilmarth and I represent the life insurance company in which your brother Juan was insured."

At the mention of the name "Juan" the senorita raised her dark eyes to heaven, made the sign of the cross and murmured: "Madre de Dios." Under his breath Cheney muttered "hypocrite," and continued:

"Yes, senorita, I have come down from New York to settle the claim."

"Settle the claim, senor! You mean you will pay me the money?" The senorita's eyes were sparkling. Cheney was watching her closely.

"Well, senorita," he replied, smiling, "here is a New York draft on the Anglo-American bank, of Mexico City, for $100,000. It's made payable to your order."

"Ah, senor, I thank you, I thank you."

"Don't thank me, senorita, thank your brother Juan, who was thoughtful enough to provide for you."

"Ah, Juan! Si, poor Juan." Again the solemn "Madre de Dios."

Cheney determined on quick action and said:

"Senorita, the minute I am convinced you are entitled to this check you shall have it; but I'm not convinced now—far from it. I know you are not entitled to it." This last he thundered at her and she recoiled, almost paralyzed.

"What—you—mean?" she gasped.

"I mean," said Cheney, "that the body buried in Dolores at Guarda was not the body of the man insured a month ago. Quicklime was used to destroy the body buried, but the ruse did not work. We exhumed the body to-day and Dr. Wilmarth here positively states that it is not the corpse of the man he examined for the insurance. Sanchez, the undertaker, has fled towards the west coast, but he will be brought back. Now, senorita, who besides yourself and Sanchez are in this plot? Come, senorita, who?" Cheney's manner was commanding, his voice tense, his whole being was powerful. The woman utterly collapsed and muttered one word: "Thomas."

"Thomas!" said Cheney. "I thought so. Now, senorita, make a clean breast of it. The fraud has not been consummated, and if murder has not been done it may not go hard with you."

Womanlike, Senorita Silva told.

"Senor Thomas and I are in love. We are to be married soon. He wanted money; I didn't have any. He knew my brother Juan was not strong. He would insure his life for $100,000; another strong man would be examined and then disappear. Juan would die, papers would go in from Guarda so Dr. Wilmarth would not be called in; I would have $100,000, we would pay Sanchez, the undertaker, $10,000 because Sanchez knew; then we would be married and Senor Thomas and I would travel. Ah, senor, believe me, by my God, I am telling the truth." And with this she fell on her knees to Cheney.

"Rise, senorita," he said, gently, "and we will do what we can."

Taking the senorita with them, the doctor and Cheney returned to Torreon, reaching there after dusk. Bright and early next morning Cheney hunted up the American consul and made himself known. Together they went to the chief of police. His aid was promised and in a short while the three men appeared in Thomas' office. Mr. Thomas was smoking his cigarette and building air castles when Col. Cheney said:

"Mr. Thomas, I believe?"

"Yes, sir."

"I'm Col. Cheney, representing the home office of your company. I am compelled to give you into custody for fraud in the Silva case."

"Fraud! Why, man, what are you talking about?"

"Senorita Silva has confessed, Mr. Thomas; Sanchez has decamped, and your game is up."

It didn't take long to convince Thomas that the game was up; then he showed his gameness and took his medicine. He had played for high stakes and lost. "San Juan de Ulloa for ten years," was his sentence. That meant death, because no man ever lived more than five years in that hell hole. Sanchez was caught and received the same sentence. Senorita Silva was pardoned by Diaz and took the veil.

Cheney and King had a dinner in New York later and Cheney said:

"Your 'hunch' was a good one, old man."

HAD REASON FOR BEING.

How Lack of Flavor of Cranberries Improved Turkey.

With all her wonderful fruits, California lacks a cranberry worthy of the name. A New England tourist ordered cranberry sauce with his turkey one Thanksgiving day at a hotel in Pasadena. An odd-looking and odd-tasting dish of stewed fruit was brought to him.

"What do you call this?" he asked the waitress, a girl from the New Hampshire mountains.

"Cranberry sauce, sir," she answered, with a faint smile of sympathy for his evident distaste.

"Cranberry sauce!" he echoed indignantly. "That has no more the flavor of a cranberry than a peanut has of a pumpkin."

"Maybe not," she replied demurely, "but you see it gives folks a great deal more reason to be thankful for the turkey."

Couldn't Afford It.

About a year ago Sewell Ford became a resident of Rye, N. Y. He had lived there only a short time before he discovered that one of his neighbors was Simeon Ford. The revelation was made over the telephone.

"Hello!" said a voice, "is this Sewell Ford?"

The author of "Shorty" admitted that it was.

"Well," went on the voice, "this is Simeon Ford. Some one's sent me your meat bill."

"Good! Why don't you pay it?"

"I will if you'll pay mine," said Simeon."

At last accounts the bargain had not been concluded. Simeon runs a hotel.—Exchange.

"The earthquake that eastern seismograph recorded was somewhere 14,000 miles away."

"Hasn't it been reported yet?"

"No."

"Well, that's strange. Do you suppose it really occurred?"

"Of course."

"Took place, and nobody knew it, eh?"

"Evidently."

"Well, say, that's just the sort of earthquakes I like."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HOME VS. THE CITY

THAT IS WHAT THE HOME-TRADE PROBLEM AMOUNTS TO.

WHICH SIDE ARE YOU ON?

If You Are Sending Your Dollars to the Mail-Order Houses You Are Battling Against the Home Town.

(Copyrighted, by Alfred C. Clark.)

A far seeing, provident business man will not pursue a policy which is subversive of his best interests. He will not destroy his own house, neither will he jeopardize his business. He will observe the golden rule, not only in theory, but in practice, and its practical observation was never more needed than at the present time. Men dream about the "Golden Age" and yet, ofttimes pursue a policy which renders the dawn of that age an impossibility.

Within the horizon of every country resident there exists an evil which is yearly assuming greater proportions. We refer to the mail order business which last year amounted in money sent to Chicago alone to $200,000,000. Two hundred million dollars diverted from its legitimate channel. Two hundred million dollars sent out to enrich those who were not needy, while those at home sorely in need of support were passed by coldly; the local trade was impoverished just to that extent. This golden trade reviving stream should have remained within its own channel, thus enriching its own soil, and causing desert places to bloom and blossom.

Many unemployed would have been engaged at living wages, households would have been cheered and hearts warmed; but no, it went to swell the dividends of surfeited, boastful city concerns.

The live and let live doctrines was overlooked; its old-fashioned wholesomeness was utterly disregarded.

The country merchant would have been engaged in his daily struggle, instead of battling at long odds against ostracism, adversity, big bills and meager receipts.

Think of $200,000,000, ye who cause the catalogue houses to flourish as the cedars of Lebanon, and the green bay tree; remember that their prosperity is at the expense of your brother, the local merchant, and local progress. Then ask this pertinent question: Can we afford to play the game longer; can we longer stultify local interests?

This great evil affects every farmer, teacher and work hand, every home, every school, every church in every country community. It also touches the interests of the physician, preacher and pedagogue. It really robs the country merchant before his eyes, in a heartless way. He sees the freight yard crowded with consignments to individuals from great catalogue houses, and sadly does he look at his country store with its stock accumulating, for want of trade, and thus decreasing in value every day. Sadly too does he look at the refuge of bankruptcy hourly being hastened because his townsmen prefer the catalogue house with its ubiquitous circulars. Those train loads of goods were bought with money that should have found its way into the honest hand of your local merchant, who has the good of your locality at heart, and who is expected to contribute liberally and continuously to every moral and benevolent institution in your midst. Then likewise remember this, that of all the millions thus sent to swell the coffers of houses in great cities, not one cent will ever return to bless your community; to clothe the naked, to feed the hungry or to educate the ignorant!

This is certainly a misguided, ill-advised policy; if self preservation is the first law of nature, the fact just stated should cause lovers of this country to think. Continue this policy and what follows? The value of real estate decreases, local improvements cease, material progress stops, the whole country suffers.

The money of a community represents in a business sense just so much possibility, and every honest occupation is injured in proportion as that is withheld or sent elsewhere.

In a certain rural community, this official order and warning was issued: "Unless bad roads are fixed there will be no rural delivery at all." It is impossible to put roads in repair without money. This lack of means cannot be traced to poor crops, for the harvest just gathered in has been superabundant. Men cannot support and build up business concerns in distant cities without sacrificing the local good. Is it fair to establish the city by depriving the country of its just support?

Many hold forth the idea that the country is the feeder of the city. This is only partially true. That doctrine has been preached till the text is threadbare. It would be much wiser for men to get a new text and talk and work the country up, then allow the city, including its mail order Octopus, to work its own problems awhile. This, instead of being selfishness, would be the finest order of common sense. A more marked feeling of brotherhood interest is sadly needed in the country on this particular point.

The rural population complain of lack of facilities and conveniences; in order to obviate this, let $200,000,000 this coming year be disbursed among country merchants, among the humbler storekeepers, then observe what will follow. The improvements would be marked. Social conditions would be greatly ameliorated. A new order would maintain in the home and over the broad acres of the farm and best of all, the social spirit of brotherhood would be felt as never before.

Listen to these thoughtful words from Gov. Folk, of Missouri: "We are proud of our splendid cities, and we want to increase in wealth and population, and we also want our country towns to grow. We wish the city merchants to build up, but also desire the country merchants to prosper. I do NOT BELIEVE in the mail order citizen. If a place is good enough for a man to live in and to make his money in, it is good enough for a man to SPEND HIS MONEY in. Patronize your own town papers, build them up, and they will build your town up in increased trade, and greater opportunities."

The batteries of the catalogue houses are carrying destruction to the smaller cities and towns. Are you helping in this work of hurling destruction at the local schools, churches and industries? Are you assisting in the way of distribution of mail-order literature and sending ammunition in the way of home dollars with which they will continue the campaign?

These are the words of wisdom and foresight from a prudent, patriotic man. As it is to-day, these words are expressive of the opposite of what should be in many a country district. The mail order citizen may think he is gaining; the truth is he is sawing off the limb upon which he sits. Disaster only can follow. The mail order citizen makes his money locally and scatters it abroad in a field where it is not needed; this is unfair to both the town and to its merchants. This shortsighted citizen complains of the size and character of his town paper, at the same time he pursues a policy which tends to destroy both. Then, publishers ought to be careful how they exploit and give publicity to the mail order houses; even if they are paid well for the space, it reacts disastrously on the town's best prospects.

Let men stand by the local merchant, let them protect his interests, for they thus further their own. The town that made the man should be made by the man. This is fair to all. Let men ponder well this truth, that we are all interdependent; that the vein of brotherhood underlies the entire social and commercial fabric. That together we stand or fall; that the good of the country demands loyalty and practical cooperation.

ARTHUR M. FROWDEN.

Fortunate Men of Prominence.

Admirers of great, rich or famous people often bestow their wealth upon the objects of their regard. The German emperor heads the list of lucky ones so favored. His receipts in money and real estate during the last ten years would, it is said, make a millionaire envious. Following precedent, a Hamburg merchant prince left more than $1,000,000 to the emperor's chancellor, whom Kaiser William immediately created "Prince" Buelow. William Jennings Bryan recently came by wealth in the same way. In England Lord Allerton has received $100,000 from an admirer of his public career and Dr. Jameson inherits a sum one-fifth larger under the will of Mr. Beit. Queen Victoria was very fortunate in her admirers, of whom the wealthiest was Nield, who bequeathed to her the sum of $1,350,000.

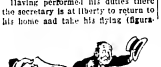
BUSY SESSION COMING FOR SECRETARY TAFT



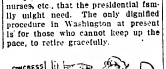
WASHINGTON.—It is a busy season that Secretary Taft will have from this time on. To discharge what may be termed his political duties the secretary will make two graduating day addresses, one to the graduating class of the University of Iowa and the other to the students who will go forth from the University of Minnesota to grapple with, throw and hog-tie the various problems of our complex civilization. These he will give off some time in June—if he gets back from a trip to the canal, to Cuba, Porto Rico and Santo Domingo.

Why he is going to the isthmus everybody ought to know. No matter whether the work heretofer is to be done by contract or by the government without the intervention of such an agency Taft will need to be on the job.

Having performed his duties there the secretary is at liberty to return to his home and take his dying (figurative, of course) trip to the north and west to make those speeches to the collegians.

Then he will be off on a trip to the Philippines, those far-off, daric, chocolate-colored islands where he left his heart. If there is one thing above all others that Taft desires it is to see those islands formed into a strong autonomous government. September 15 will be celebrated in the islands. That will be Taft's birthday. To the islanders it will be about the same as February 22 is to continental Americans. Taft will be there to advise and comfort the little brown brothers that appear to be getting a degree of civilization that is not injected with a Krag.

Taft, therefore, for one who is said to have presidential aspirations, will have about as much opportunity for looking after his political prospects as a Panamanian has of platting the next transit of Venus—if the lady has a transit.



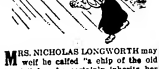
WASHINGTON DIPLOMATS STRUGGLE WITH EXPENSES

HOW may an ambassador keep the wolf (not to mention the social sheep) from his official door when his miserly government grants only a niggardly pittance of, say, $10,000 a year in our coin? Anybody who knows Washington knows that the task of keeping the expenditures of diplomatic households inside the diplomatic limit requires more fine figuring than would be needed to repair a dozen shortages in treasury branches.

There is James Bryce, for instance. He had the forethought to suggest that £2,000 be added to the annual stipend of the British ambassador (himself), because of the constantly increasing cost of living at the American capital. The German ambassador retired for help a year ago. The envoy from Vienna spent almost six months wheedling the equivalent of 10,000 a year from the imperial budget of Austro-Hungary. When the pitiful tales which emanate from the diplomatic corps become public it seems a miracle that the men are able to wear boiled shirts, even on Sundays.

There are those in Washington who assert that they cannot comprehend how the president can afford to entertain as he does. They believe he is living up to every cent of his salary and may go beyond it. If the British ambassador cannot make ends meet with $42,500 a year, and another 10,000 added for emergencies, what can the president accomplish with less? The British ambassador can curtail his expenses at will.

Now, the president of the United States receives 50,000 a year, the use of the White House, the furnishing, heating, lighting and decorating the same on festive occasions. The 20 servants are paid by the public money, except, of course, the maids, valets, nurses, etc., that the presidential family might need. The only dignified procedure in Washington at present is for those who cannot keep up the pace, to retire gracefully.



RETURNS TO CONGRESS AFTER LONG ABSENCE

JUST 34 years ago Gen. J. N. Sherwood was elected to the house from the Toledo (O.) district. On Monday, March 4, he emulated the cat that came back. As the owner of a blanket in public life Sherwood is the premier. The late Galusha A. Grow, of Pennsylvania, came back after he had been out for 31 years. J. Warren Keifer, also an Ohioan, was out for 24 years, but Sherwood has the pas over them all.

The general is not such a terribly old man at that. He is only 72—five years younger than Senators Whyte and Morgan and 12 years the junior of Senator Pettus. Although a Democrat, Sherwood bears the unique record of never having been defeated for any office for which he was a candidate. There are a number of statesmen in the Toledo district who hope he will get so tired of Washington during the two years for which he was elected last fall as he got 30 odd years ago, when, after two years of life in congress, he decided that he had had enough.

To get back to congress this time he had to overcome a Republican majority of 15,000. To do that he had to carry Lucas county, the home of his Republican rival, by more than 900 majority. The year before the county had given a Republican majority of 2,300.

ALICE BRAVES ELEMENTS FOR OUTDOOR EXERCISE

MRS. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH may well be called "a chip of the old block," for she certainly inherits her father's taste for outdoor life in all sorts and conditions of weather. Let the day be ever so stormy, neither wind nor rain can deter the president from a tramp over the country ways and byways. In fact, the more beastly the weather is the more he seems to enjoy being out in it, battling against the elements. The same desire and will to face a storm is inherited by his strenuous daughter.

A soft but heavy snow falling through night and all day has covered Washington with a mantle of white beautiful to look at, but decidedly sloppy under foot.

Through slush and a drizzling sleet and rain, Mrs. Longworth, accompanied by Miss Isabelle May, walked briskly up Connecticut avenue the other afternoon. The young woman evidently were out for a good tramp, and walked with the air and determination of those who walk for the pleasure of it.

In short skirts and with no umbrellas they were quite free to get the full benefit of their exercise, and the fact that they had the street almost to themselves only lent additional zest to the sport.

Mrs. Longworth wore the short skirt affected by the Boston girl, who dares to shorten it a little more than the girl of any other town this side of the Rockies. Her light brown skirt was fully four or five inches from the ground. Above this sensible skirt was a little jacket to match, with which she wore a turban to correspond and brown furs.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

WILL EXPLOIT CONGO LAND

John Hays Hammond, greatest mining engineer in the world, will leave for the Congo Free State in a short time to take charge of the development of Thomas Fortune Ryan's concession. Mr. Ryan has obtained absolute control of thousands of square miles of territory in the heart of Africa. Only a small part of the country has been scratched by prospectors so far, so it is impossible to tell the full extent of the minerals beneath its surface. Gold, copper and iron are known to exist, and malachite, garnets, rubies and even diemonds may be among the hidden wealth.

John Hays Hammond is the highest salaried man in the world. In one year he drew $800,000. Four mining companies paid $100,000 each for his advice. Others paid lesser amounts. In 1903 he signed an exclusive contract with the Guggenheims.

The life of Hammond has been veritably that of a "soldier of fortune." Again and again has he risked his life in his explorations. Once he was condemned to death. As one of the leaders of the reform committee at whose invitation Jameson was to make his rush on Johannesburg, Hammond was arrested and sentenced to be executed. Joseph Chamberlain had not promptly sent a telegram to President Kruger holding Kruger personally accountable for the deaths of the four leaders, some other man than Hammond would be the world's leading mining engineer today.

Hammond's "yes" and "no" dictated the outlay of the millions poured into the South African gold field. Hammond is a comparatively young man, having been born in San Francisco in 1855.

CAN CALM STORMY SEAS

Philip Brasher has just been granted a patent on one of the most remarkable life saving inventions of modern times. By the use of Brasher's device the waters about a stranded ship are made as calm as a mill pond. Outside the magic circle marking the limit of his invention's influence the billows may dash and roar, but the hurricane itself cannot send them against the ship. Life savers, thanks to Brasher, will be able to still the sea between the ship and shore and take passengers from the wreck in perfect safety while the storm rages all about them.

Mr. Brasher's discovery is that air bubbles, rising from below and breaking on the surface, have the effect of leveling the waves. In a recent interview Mr. Brasher said:

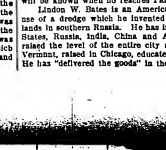
"An actual demonstration of the effect of compressed air on wave-motion may be seen at several points above the tunnels which are being run under the rivers around New York city. The compressed air used in the tunneling escapes in various ways and rises to the surface, producing a complete cessation of the water directly above the escaping columns and a tremendous disturbance of irregular bubbles. Waves which impinge on this disturbed area collapse like balloons which have been pricked with pins."

Mr. Brasher's apparatus is simple. At a distance from the object to be protected is a pipe perforated with holes and connected with the shore or a boat, where a compressed air plant is situated. In stress of weather the air is pumped out and the waves are stilled.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE LEADER

Alfred Farlow, a ruling spirit in the Christian Science church in Boston and one of the defendants named in the suit of George W. Glover, who is seeking to gain control of the supposed vast financial interests of his mother, Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy, rose to his present position from clerk in his father's small grocery in Knoxville, Ill. Farlow occupies the important post of publicity agent of the Christian Science organization. He is also president of the mother church in Boston.

After leaving school Alfred was seat to the Lutheran college at Knoxville, where he soon made himself conspicuous for his scholarship, his skill in debate and his natural oratorical powers.



A year before he was to have been graduated, his father met with financial reverses. He had sold his farm, gone into business at Maquon, Ill., but failed.

After the failure Mr. Farlow opened a small grocery store in the town of Knoxville, which he conducted for a number of years, assisted by his son, Alfred. Soon the father closed out the business, migrated with his family to Beatrice, Neb.

During this period young Farlow served as clerk, taught school near Beatrice, and conducted n number of small commercial enterprises, none of which, however, filled the requirements of his ambitions. Among these was a rather modest broom factory.

Young Farlow langed for a larger field. Wonderful stories of Christian Science fascinated him. He went to Boston, studied under Mrs. Eddy, and became an enthusiast. He returned west and taught classes in Christian Science. In 1893 he founded in Kansas City what was known as the Mission Church of Christian Science. This building is said to be the handsomest house of worship in the city. It cost $75,000. It was finished and dedicated on Christmas day, 1898, and Alfred Farlow was duly installed as a reader of the congregation which worshiped there.

OPPOSES LOCK PLAN CANAL

Lindon W. Bates says a stupendous mistake is being made at Panama. Mr. Bates has been saying this for months, but at last his word of warning is being considered. Secretary Taft of the war department will go to Panama to determine if, after all, a sea-level canal will have to be built.

The contention of Mr. Bates is that the high Gatun dam, the key to the entire lock system, can never be constructed. This dam, 85 feet high, the highest in the world, is to be at the west end of the canal. This enormous three-step dam, "locks to flight," will have to hold back a vast lake of water. Notwithstanding the fact that $50,000,000 has been expended on work that will be rendered worthless without the Gatun dam; that the site is on low ground; that it is surrounded by swamps; that its foundation, says Mr. Bates, will be silt, or soft mud, not a single boring has been made to discover the nature of the foundation upon which this enormous work is to be imposed. Taft has ordered borings made at once so that the results will be known when he reaches Panama.

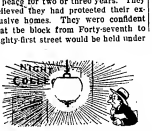
Lindon W. Bates is an American engineer of world-wide fame. By the use of a dredge which he invented he reclaimed millions of acres of wheat lands in southern Russia. He has improved harbors and rivers in the United States, Russia, India, China and Australia. After the Galveston flood he raised the level of the entire city seven and one-half feet. He was born in Vermont, raised in Chicago, educated at Yale, built railroads in the far west. He has "delivered the goods" in the four corners of the world.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

BUSINESS HOUSES TO INVADE SOCIETY CENTER

NEW YORK.—Business expansion is threatening more of Fifth avenue. Millionaire families between Forty-seventh and Fifty-ninth streets fear that they will be driven from their grand mansions by the new rush of trade. Their most formidable bulwarks against the oppressing horde from the south were swept away last week.



When shopkeepers and the mess of small tradesmen first began to crowd [illegible] avenue north of Forty-sec[illegible] a few years ago Commodore [illegible] Gerry built the ornate W[illegible] on the site of the old Wi[illegible]otel, from Forty-sixth to Forty-seventh street. It was believed that the structure would stand as the gateway between the exclusive domain of mansions on the north and the bustling masses of trade on the south.

Fifth avenue's millionaires rested in peace for two or three years. They believed they had protected their exclusive homes. They were confident that the block from Forty-seventh to Eighty-first street would be held under close residential restrictions, because the property was owned almost entirely by the trustees of Columbia college.

But the business boom along Fifth avenue could not be held in check. So many business houses during the recent years of the country's great prosperity wanted the prestige of a Fifth avenue location that land values continued to rise under their concentrated demand. Trade broke through the gateway at Forty-seventh street.

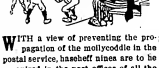
Land was worth the higher prices in the market. Columbia could not afford to lose the money, so the trustees decided to remove the restrictions against business. They closed leases aggregating $100,000 recently on the new trade basis of business occupation.

That gave the business hordes a clear field to the doors of the Vanderbilt mansions, at Fifty-first street. Although the mansion holders between Fifty-first and Fifty-ninth streets are standing together with much determination, it is evident that the trade occupation at their doors will soon fill the avenue with an unwelcome throng.

NIGHT COLLEGE MAY BE ESTABLISHED IN CITY

IT HAS been suggested to the trustees of the College of the City of New York that it would be advisable to establish n night college in connection with the present institution, primarily for the benefit of worthy students, who, principally for financial reasons, are prevented from attending colleges in the daytime. The suggestion has met with a favorable reception from the trustees, who probably will investigate the matter, and if the plan seems feasible recommend to the city that it should undertake the establishment and maintenance of such an institution.

That there is a demand for n night college is the opinion expressed by many who have given the educational situation in this city careful study. In the first place, the opportunities for instruction at night are limited. Of the three institutions especially in the work, not one offers a complete college course. Cooper Union has scientific work only, and Columbia and New York universities have special or professional courses. Cooper Union, the only one of the three which requires no tuition fees, is crowded to its capacity and is turning away hundreds of worthy students simply because of lack of accommodations.



The necessity of providing a college education for the sons of those who were not in a position to pay tuition and other fees was responsible for the establishment of the city colleges, and that necessity has increased until there is an insistent demand for a night college. The city must meet this need.

ANTI-SUICIDE BUREAU MAY LIGHT DARKER SIDE

THE anti-suicide bureau of the Salvation Army, which has just been opened in New York, is expected to throw considerable light on the darker side of Hamlet's grim philosophy. From statistics collected by the army it seems that suicides in New York number 22.7 per 100,000. In cities like Hoboken and St. Louis, the proportion is 29.2, and the average of 50 cities throughout the country is 17.5.

The opening day of the bureau was marked by the appearance of four men and one woman, all conspicuously well dressed. The first was a tall, old Hebrew, who stated that he had lost the savings of a lifetime, some $40,000, in Wall street, and could see nothing ahead more attractive than death. Next came a woman of 40 with a French accent, who stated that she had been swindled in a heavy investment and left alone in New York without friends or money. Then came a waiter and bartender, who had three times attempted suicide by various means, and, driven to desperation by losses in race-track gambling, had tried to shoot a friend. Another man confessed being a criminal, who had been indicted 40 times for larceny and was harassed by fear of a life sentence. The last was a youth of 20, a victim of drugs, who stated that he had run through $60,000 within a month, had forged his father's name, and was ready to die unless the army could think of something better.

FEDERAL BALL LEAGUE NEW ROOSEVELT IDEA

WITH a view of preventing the propagation of the soil-rocdile in the postal service, baseheff nines are to be organized in the post offices of all the larger cities in the country and a New York post office employe is to be engaged as coach and instructor. The idea is the most novel ever suggested in connection with any branch of the federal service and, if it did not originate with President Roosevelt, it, at least, has his sanction.

The assignment of a government employe to organize a form of outdoor athletic sport and to be paid therefor out of the appropriation of the department by which he is employed is without precedent. There have been baseball clubs and bicycle clubs formed by clerks in the different branches of the federal service, but they have been the result of individual and collective effort with which the government has had nothing to do. The baseball league with the old professionals if proper time were allowed for coaching and practice. Cincinnati, Chicago, Indianapolis, Louisville, St. Louis, Denver and probably San Francisco will come next.

MARINES ARE LANDED IN HONDURAN PORTS

COMMANDER FULLAM PUTS MEN IN CEIBA, TRUJILLO AND PUERTO CORTEZ.

American Interests New Thoroughly Protected There and Foreign Criticism Disarmed—Nicaragua Claims Big Victory in Namasique Battle.

Washington, March 22.—Bluejackets and marines have been landed from the United States gunboat Marietta at Trujillo and Ceiba and probably at Puerto Cortez, Honduras, in order to protect American interests in those ports. Advices to this effect were received Thursday at the navy department from Commander Fullam of the Marietta, and they were at once transmitted to the state department.

As yet no word has been received as to whether forces have been landed at Central American ports on the Pacific coast side, but undoubtedly this step will be taken if American interests are considered in danger.

The navy department feels that the action taken by Commander Fullam brings the situation completely in hand so far as the safeguarding of trade interests is concerned. In addition to the protection given to American interests it is felt that the action of this government will relieve foreign governments of the necessity of taking any steps toward making a naval demonstration. The landing of bluejackets and marines and the policing of both shores of the Central American republics with United States gunboats before trading vessels have been molested in any manner or foreign interests jeopardized is regarded here as a diplomatic move that will prevent any international complications growing out of the policy of the United States to prevent European demonstrations in Central American or South American waters.

Intervention Is Probable.

Joint intervention by Mexico and the United States in the war which threatens to involve Central America is now regarded as probable by diplomatists. Tenders of good offices on the part of the two great governments have not been heeded by Nicaragua, Honduras and Salvador, and it has been suggested to the state department that Mexico and the United States should send plenipotentiaries to the warring countries to investigate the causes of the present war and order an immediate cessation of hostilities.

It has been pointed out to the state department that the cooperation of Mexico with the United States in restoring peace in Central America would disarm criticism of the United States and show that it has no thought of acquiring any territory of Latin American republics.

Nicaragua Claims Victory.

Managua, Nicaragua, March 22.—A dispatch received here from the front at 10:35 p. m. Wednesday said:

"The Honduran and Salvadorean army, numbering over 5,000 men, attacked the Nicaraguan positions at Portillos de Namasique, and after three days and two nights of fighting the Hondurans and Salvadoreans were completely defeated, leaving hundreds of dead and wounded on the battlefield. The Nicaraguans also captured many prisoners, among them being several officers, besides 2,000 rifles and great quantities of all kinds of war munitions.

"The defeated Salvadorean officers included Gen. Presa, Gen. Avelar and Gen. Colocho. The Honduran commander defeated was Gen. Licona.

"The Nicaraguans lost many men wounded and had a few killed.

"Gen. Lopez Garcia and Col. Pedro Nabasco have been defeated at Marabia by the Honduran revolutionary and Nicaraguan forces. Many Honduran soldiers and a number of rifles, with ammunition, were captured by the allied troops.

"La Ceiba, a Honduran port on the Atlantic, has been captured by the Nicaraguan forces."

NEW CLEW TO MARVIN LAD.

Authorities of Portsmouth, England, Think They Have Him.

Washington, March 22.—Third Assistant Secretary of State Wilson Friday night received a cablegram from the American consul at Portsmouth, England, saying the authorities have a boy who answers the description of the kidnaped Marvin boy for whom a general search is being made in this country. Mr. Wilson immediately referred with President Roosevelt regarding the matter, and acting on the president's instructions, forwarded the message to Gov. Lea of Delaware. Mr. Wilson stated that this government stands ready to cooperate with the state officials in every possible way in the efforts to ascertain information in the kidnaping case.

Gen. T. J. Wint Dies Suddenly.

ROBBERS GET RICH BOOTY

PLUNDER THE SUMMER HOME OF HENRY SIEGEL

Valuable Paintings, Rare Bric-a-Brac and Silverware Taken—Former Employe Suspected.

New York, March 22.—The robbery of the summer home of Henry Siegel at Mamaroneck some time Wednesday night was unraveled a mystery which the police were unable to solve.

Seven paintings valued at thousands of dollars, bric-a-brac, collected at great cost in Europa and considerable silver were stolen. The value of the articles taken was not estimated by members of the family, but in some quarters it was said that it would reach well over $50,000.

Mr. Siegel is in Boston. Mrs. Siegel remained in New York Wednesday night, a gardener and assistants being the only persons about the Mamaroneck residence. They say they heard no unusual noises during the night. Entrance was gained through a front window, and the house was ransacked, drawers being searched, cupboards opened, rugs taken, solid silver purchased while plated ware was beat and thrown aside and paintings cut from their frames.

A curious feature of the case is that the thieves went to the bathroom and secured a key to the dining room, where the loot was kept. When they got these the task of opening the locked doors where valuables were stored was easy.

Mrs. Siegel said Thursday night that she had a suspicion as to the thief, and intimated he might once have been employed in the house.

Mr. Siegel has been here Long Island round, and it is believed the robbers used a power boat to approach the premises and carry away the loot.

Boston, March 22.—Regarding the robbery of his summer home Henry Siegel said Thursday: "I was notified that 'Driftwood' was broken into by burglars during the night or early in the morning. Several paintings were cut. I purchased from the collections of the late Cyrus M. Field and the late Chief Justice Chase some time and a quantity of bric-a-brac, purchased in all parts of the world, is missing. I can only say that any value upon the paintings, for to me they were invaluable. The bric-a-brac cannot be duplicated."

RUEF INDICTED 65 TIMES.

Wholesale Corruption of Frisco Supervisors Is Alleged.

San Francisco, March 21.—The long looked for indictments in the municipal graft cases were returned Wednesday night. Shortly after six o'clock the grand jury filed with Presiding Judge Coffey, of the superior court, 75 indictments charging bribery, which were found on evidence presented to the grand jury after six months' probing into the municipal affairs of this city by Assistant District Attorney Francis J. Heney and Secret Service Agent William J. Burns.

Of the indictments returned 65 are against Abraham Ruef, for years the political boss of San Francisco, charging him with bribing the board of supervisors to grant franchises to the United railroads, the Home Telephone company, the San Francisco Gas & Electric company and the so-called "prize fight trust." Ten are against T. V. Halsey, former general agent of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph company, who is charged with having bribed the supervisors to the extent of granting a rival company. One indictment against Ruef and four more against Halsey which, it is understood, were also returned, were not filed in open court. Several more indictments were returned by the grand jury, but not filed, Heney and Burns not even trusting the secret file.

DISPUTE OVER THE CONGO.

Belgian Cabinet Disagrees with Leopold and May Resign.

Brussels, March 21.—An acute disagreement exists between King Leopold and his cabinet over the question of the Congo independent state, the king considering the concessions made by his ministers to the parliamentary Congo commission to be unwarranted. A special envoy from the Belgian foreign office had an audience with King Leopold at Beaulieu, France, the result of which was unsatisfactory.

It is believed in well informed quarters that the resignation of the cabinet is certain as soon as the king returns to Belgium.

DETROIT BARS "THE CLANSMAN."

Mayor Forbids the Production of Thomas Dixon's Play.

Detroit, Mich., March 21.—Mayor William B. Thompson Wednesday night prohibited the production of "The Clansman," the play adapted from Thomas Dixon's book of the same title, and which was booked for the Detroit Opera house for the last week in April. Judge Alfred Murphy of the Wayne county circuit court and a number of white citizens joined with a delegation of colored residents in protesting that the presentation of the play here would engender bad feeling and possibly lead to a disturbance by the colored people of the city.

THAW TRIAL STOPS UNTIL WEDNESDAY

JUSTICE WILL DECIDE ABOUT LUNACY COMMISSION FOR DEFENDANT.

Gives Jerome Mare Time—Prosecuting Attorney Denies Charging Hartridge with Unprofessional Conduct —Thaw's Family in Court.

New York, March 22.—The district attorney's office Friday night made public several letters supposedly written by Harry K. Thaw and to which District Attorney Jerome has referred in court and had marked as state exhibits. These are expected to figure in the hearing of the lunacy commission if Justice Fitzgerald decides to appoint one.

The letters have to do chiefly with matters personal to Thaw and are of no special interest except as they may have a possible bearing on the state of mind of Stanford White's slayer.

The status of the case is this: Affidavits have been handed in by the prosecution to show that Thaw is a paranoiac and although legally responsible when he killed Stanford White, is now in such a state of mental incapacity as to be unable to consult intelligently with his counsel and hence should not be on trial for his life. The defense is now preparing its affidavits to the contrary and the matter will come before the court on Tuesday. Meanwhile the jury is excused until Wednesday, when the judge may determine whether a commission in lunacy shall be appointed.

Counsel Make Statements.

Most of Friday's proceedings were in the nature of explanations by counsel on the question of personal privilege raised by District Attorney Jerome's conditional threat of calling counsel of record for the defense to account before the appellate division for unprofessional conduct, should it appear that he had knowledge of his client's alleged mental incompetency.

Speaking to this point, Mr. Jerome referred to the tension under which he had been working and denied any intent to charge Mr. Hartridge, the counsel of record, with unprofessional conduct.

For the first time since the jury box was filled all the women of Thaw's family were awaiting him in the court room Friday when the proceedings opened. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, his wife, sat between Mrs. Thaw and the countess of Yarmouth, while Mrs. Carnegie, a sister, sat in the next row with Josiah Thaw. On coming in Harry Thaw smiled and bowed to his wife and then to the others of the party.

The jury, which had filed in at 11 o'clock was instructed by the judge to return on Wednesday, and left. It was arranged between Mr. Jerome and Mr. Hartridge that the defense's affidavits should be in the hands of the district attorney by two o'clock Saturday afternoon. It was agreed that Mr. Jerome should be permitted to file additional matter on Monday.

CONFESSED TO $400,000 THEFT.

Man Who Stole Sack of Mail Implicates International Gang.

Paris, March 22.—The man named Buttions, arrested here recently with $42,000 in American securities in his possession, under suspicion that he was an accomplice of the thieves who stole a mail bag containing $400,000 on the French line steamer La Savoie, which arrived at Havre February 21, from New York, has made a confession implicating a gang of international robbers, as a result of which other arrests are expected immediately. It developed Thursday that the stolen securities were not negotiable and were extracted after the bags reached the railroad station here.

BLOOD FLOWS IN MOLDAVIA

SCORES OF PEASANTS KILLED IN FIGHTS WITH TROOPS.

Thousands of Jews Flee to Austria—Towns and Farms Devastated by Angry Mobs.

Vienna, March 23.—The seriousness of the situation in northern Moldavia, growing out of the agrarian disorders, according to the latest telegraphic reports reaching here from Czernowitz, on the border, has not been exaggerated.

From the estimates of the damages, made Friday night, it appears that 400 farms in Moldavia have been devastated, 8,000 fugitives have fled over the Roumanian frontier into Austria, and a total of 10,000 Jews are homeless.

The number of dead and wounded cannot be given accurately, but the reports give a total of about 85 men killed, and in the neighborhood of 150 wounded. The outbreak seems to have been partly suppressed.

On Thursday 500 peasants tried to invade Michailani. Some of the soldiers fired, against orders. This violacy killed 15 of the rioters and wounded 45, whereupon the peasants withdrew.

A more successful attack was made at Vasiui, to the south of Jassy. Here a body of 2,000 peasants forced their way into the town. The prefect of Vasiui called for sufficient troops at his command to stop the onward march of the infuriated countrymen. He stood by helpless witness while the rioters, in an incredibly short space of time, plundered practically all the buildings of the town, pillaged streets of Vasiui and then set them on fire. The peasants had looted freely and the fire completed the work of destruction.

The prefect sent in a hurried appeal for reinforcements and the peasants, in ignorance of this step, remained in the town until the soldiers arrived. There then ensued a serious fight up and down the burned streets. The soldiers came out victorious, but 29 rioters were killed and many were wounded.

All the buildings in the villages of Hatanesti, Pantazi, Ghermanesti and Nicolusen were demolished and the villages are now nothing more than heaps of ruins.

The most serious fight of Friday occurred near Platra, 60 miles southwest of Jassy. Several thousand peasants marched against this town, where an entire regiment of infantry was stationed. The soldiers charged the peasants with fixed bayonets. The peasants replied with rifle and revolver fire, and then the troops gave shooting back. The fighting lasted over an hour before the rioters retreated. They had 42 men killed, 67 wounded and 250 of their number were carried off prisoners by the soldiers. The troops had eight men killed and 27 wounded.

CINCINNATI GETS TWO PLUMS.

Awarded Bowling Congress for 1908 and the Presidency.

St. Louis, March 22.—After a spirited contest the Cincinnati delegation secured both plums offered by the annual convention of the American Bowling congress by getting the next congress and tournament for the Queen City and electing August ("Garry") Herrmann, baseball magnate, president of the congress for 1907-8. After the introduction of the new president the congress adjourned sine die.

Berlin, March 22.—Prof. Korn, the inventor of long-distance photography, is in Berlin to make arrangements for experiments which are to take place between Berlin and Munich on April 15. Prof. Korn says the receiving apparatus will be placed on the telegraphic experimental institute in Berlin and the transmitter in Munich. Experiments are to be conducted in America in August.

KILLED IN RAID ON A GAMBLING HOUSE

COUNTY ATTORNEY J. D. M'LEAN IB SLAIN AT FORT WORTH, TEX.

Another Is Fatally Shot—Proprietor of Resort, Who Did the Shooting, Is Then Mortally Wounded—Hundreds See Tragedies.

Fort Worth, Tex., March 22.—Following a raid on an alleged gambling house late Friday, County Attorney Jeff D. McLean was shot and killed and Hamil F. Scott, a member of the raiding party, fatally wounded by William Thompson, proprietor of the resort raided.

Half an hour later Thompson was surrounded in a lumber yard within a hundred yards of where Scott was shot down and captured after a desperate fight in which Thompson received bullet wounds that will probably cause his death within a few hours.

The series of tragedies were of the most sensational and spectacular character and were witnessed by hundreds of men and women, including many members of the state legislature here in attendance on a stock show. The house raided is located on Main street near the corner of Sixth, right in the heart of the retail district.

McLean Shot in the Neck.

Shortly before five o'clock County Attorney McLean, heading a party of deputies, forced an entrance into the place, placed a number of men under arrest and loaded a furniture van with tables and other paraphernalia. The wagon with the confiscated furniture had just moved off when Thompson approached McLean, who was standing on the sidewalk, and when within a few feet of the official, fired one shot, the bullet striking McLean in the throat, breaking his neck and causing almost instant death. As McLean fell, Thompson turned and ran west on Sixth street with Scott in pursuit.

Dodging behind a billboard at Seventh and Throckmorton streets, Thompson ambushed Scott, shooting the deputy three times in the body. When Scott fell Thompson stepped only long enough to discard his empty pistol for that carried by the dying deputy and then renewed his flight.

Desperate Fight with Officers.

By this time a score of policemen and deputy sheriffs, followed by hundreds of excited men and boys, were in pursuit of Thompson, who found temporary refuge in a lumber shed just across the street from the Touraine hotel, the most fashionable hostelry in the city. Here he was located by Patrolmen Bell and Loyd. Thompson, by this time thoroughly desperate and with the cry "Get Lynch him" ringing in his ears, was ready for a fight to the death.

Bell and Loyd opened fire on Thompson, which the latter returned. The officers wounded Thompson, but these places are not believed fatally injured. As soon as Thompson had emptied his gun the officers, whose pistols were emptied, fell upon him with bare hands and made him a prisoner.

Crowd Wanted to Lynch Him.

Soon the police patrol wagon came dashing through the crowd and the officers, surrounded their prisoner with them and holding their empty revolvers in their hands. The mob made numerous attempts to overpower the officers and were only prevented from attacking Thompson by the declaration that the man was dead.

With men hanging on the steps of the wagon and demanding the life of the wounded prisoner, the race was made to the station and the prisoner was carried into the police hospital. The story was then spread that he was dead and the mob quieted.

BIG FIRE IN PINE BLUFF, ARK.

Lumber Plant and Residences Burn—Dynamite Is Used.

Pine Bluff, Ark., March 23.—Fire late Friday swept over the entire plant of the Bluff City Lumber company and destroyed several small dwellings owned by the company. The loss is estimated at from $700,000 to $750,000.

When the fire started in the boiler room of the lumber plant the entire fire department responded, but it was soon apparent that the water pressure was not sufficient to subdue the flames. The fire spread rapidly and several cottages in the immediate vicinity of the plant were razed by the use of dynamite.

Poor Paint is Expensive

If one is rich enough to repaint his buildings every year for the pleasure of having a change of color scheme, the quality of the paint used may cut little figure. But if it is desirable to cut the painting bills down to the least amount possible per year, it is of the utmost importance that the paint be made of Pure White Lead and the best of Linseed Oil. Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

State Has 5,000,000 Trout Fry.

St. Paul—The state game and fish commissioner has on hand distributes 5,000,000 brook trout fry through the parts of the state where those kind of fish thrive. This will break all previous records of the department along this line.

Shipments of the fry are already being made to the southern and northern parts of the state, where the small brooks most abound. One shipment is being made every day, and so far seven carloads, or about 280,000 brook fry, have been shipped.

The sportsmen at Winona and in other parts of the state have organized local anglers' associations and these associations have provided tanks for the fry that they may be kept safely until all danger from the spring freshets has gone. The shipments are made direct to the associations.

All the trout are healthy. The two fish hatcheries were so crowded that part of the stock had to be disposed of earlier than usual. The shipments are made in cans containing about 2,000 trout each. Twenty cans are sent in each shipment.

Rich Iron Ore Struck.

Tracy—A valuable find of iron ore is reported to have been made at Ranier, in Morrison county, on the outlet of the Clayton range. The ore is said to be red hematite of a 60 per cent grade and equals anything yet found on the range.

There have been drills at work in this vicinity for nearly a year, and it is said on good authority that the Allsworth and Washburn interests have made arrangements to renew the work with increasing vigor as soon as spring opens.

It is also said that strong indications of ore have been found in a line running from about the center of Mille Lacs southwesterly through Morrison county. The claim is made that this line has been known for two years to certain Minneapolis capitalists who have been quietly acquiring title to the land through which it runs. There has been no drilling done on this line and apparently it is not the intention to begin exploration work until all of the land has been acquired.

Fixes Interest Rate.

St. Paul—The state board of appeal, consisting of State Auditor S. G. Iverson, State Treasurer C. C. Dinehart and Public Examiner Anton Schaefer, has passed a resolution granting an interest rate of 2 per cent from all banks in the state used as state depositories. But three banks are except, they being the Security bank of Minnesota at Minneapolis and the Merchants National and First National banks of St. Paul. These banks are designated as depositories where the active current state account may be kept, and these banks are to pay 2 per cent interest on short balances.

Heretofore the distinction in regard to the rate of interest has been between the city and country banks, the banks of the small towns being obliged to pay 3 per cent interest, while the banks of St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and Winona paid but 2 per cent. The new order makes the distinction between active and checking accounts. The order will not affect nearly all the banks in the state.

State Gets $67,792.

St. Paul—The state of Minnesota is a winner in the sum of $67,792 which has just been ordered paid by congress. This sum represents interest on the old bonds upon which Governor Ramsey raised money in 1862 to suppress the Sioux uprising. When in Washington two years ago, State Auditor Sam G. Iverson, in making some investigations, discovered what he believed to be a claim against the government for this interest.

Accordingly he took the matter up and had a brief prepared by Attorney General Young. A bill was passed ordering an investigation, and, as a result of the latter's persistency, the claim has been allowed.

Fruit From South Africa.

Minneapolis—Pears and plums that were grown in South Africa furnish something in the way of botanical delicacies in the stock of E. P. Stacy & Sons, commission merchants, and so fas as it known, this is the first South African fruit to appear in the Minneapolis market.

The consignment, which was shipped first to London and from there to Minneapolis by way of New York, consists of several boxes of Winesap plums and several of Bon Cretin pears. The fruit was grown on the Cecil Rhodes farm and because of the cost of transportation it will be necessary to sell each pear or plum for 10 or 15 cents to cover expense.

Blows Off Top of Head.

Alexandria—Peter Nelson, a farmer of Lund township, Douglas county, blew off the top of his head with a shotgun. He had been very gloomy for some time. During the temporary absence of his family he went into the kitchen and resting the butt of the gun against the wall placed the muzzle in his mouth and discharged the weapon by means of a long stick. His hired man entered the kitchen just in time to see him fall dead.

Engineer and Conductor Killed.

Deer River—Frank Mellgren, engineer, and George Martin, conductor, were instantly killed in a head-on collision between freight trains on the Minnesota & International, near Deer River. The trains came together on a reverse curve where the engineers could not see the headlight of the other train.

Both engines were shattered and Engineer McCabe was crushed to death in his cab. Conductor Martin was riding on the top the caboose of his train and was hurled to the ground, breaking his skull. Twenty cars were wrecked.

Sales of State Land.

St. Paul—Samuel G. Iverson, state auditor, is arranging for the sale of 241,609 acres of state lands this summer, beginning with a sale at Grand Rapids on June 11, and concluding with an auction at Pine City on July 4.

According to law, these lands will be sold by auction to the highest bidder. Only 15 per cent of the purchase price must be paid at the time of the sale. The remainder is allowed to run for forty years, if so desired by the buyer, at 4 per cent interest.

The sales which the auditor plans to hold, the place and date of each sale, and the amount of land to be offered at each place, is to be summarized as follows:

	Acres offered.
Tuesday, June 11, Grand Rapids, 9 a. m.	25,000
Wednesday, June 12, Duluth, 10 a. m.	25,000

Wednesday, July 2, Pine City, 1 p. m.	10,000

Fish Clog Water in Pipe.

Brainerd—The Northern Pacific Railway company has been having trouble for some time in getting water at the depot, which supplies the tank at Klondike. A few days ago a crew of men were set at work to clean out the well, and it was found to be absolutely filled with fish. There were suckers, buffaloes, shiners and other small fish in almost by millions. Suckers weighing seven pounds were found.

The pumps has refused to work and an examination showed that two large buffaloes had gone into the valves and, clogging it completely and it was necessary to take the pump apart to get them out.

The well is connected by a large intake pipe with Kakonk lake, and how it is thought that the screen over the end of the pipe must have rusted out, thus allowing the fish to pass into the well.

War on Wolves.

St. Paul—The war which is being waged on mad dogs in various parts of the state is merely a flicker of the candle when compared to the battle which has been going on against Minnesota wolves during the last three months, according to the wolf bounties paid by the state auditor's office.

Since Dec. 26, when the last bounties were paid, 1,767 full grown wolves and 299 cubs have passed away through the medium of the bounty seekers, making a total of 1,547 for which the state will pay $9,958.50. Roseau county leads the list with 361 wolves, thereby securing almost $3,000. Metropolitan Ramsey county is at the bottom of the ladder, but managed to break into the run column with three full-grown wolves.

Walked From Oregon.

From the asylum at Fergus Falls with David Murphy, who is being returned to the asylum at Portland, Ore., Murphy escaped from the Oregon asylum more than a year ago and traveled the entire distance from Portland to Duluth, occupying seven months in the journey.

He was picked up by the Duluth authorities and three months ago and was committed to the asylum. From there he escaped, but has now been learned that he had been an inmate of the Oregon institution, and correspondence with the asylum there developed that Murphy had escaped from the state.

While at Church Home Burns.

Crookston—The farm house of Owen Jones, four miles east of the city, was burned to the ground while the family was in the city at church. The fire was discovered by neighbors, who broke open the doors and succeeded in saving the piano and a few articles of furniture. The house was totally destroyed. The loss will reach several thousand dollars, partially covered by insurance. The origin of the fire is a mystery, but it is believed that it may have been started by an overheated stove.

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis—Judgments for $1,004.03 have been given in the district court against twenty-seven members of the university class of 1906, as a result of the scandal connected with the Gopher publication by that class. Byron G. Willard, the printing firm that issued the book for the class, has been given judgment against the number.

Mankato—A physician sent $1.85 to Windom to treat a prescription and settlement that for this sum it would send twelve full bottles of whisky, the offer being made "merely to introduce the goods." When the package arrived it contained one dozen full bottles, as promised, but each bottle was about as big as a thimble.

Fergus Falls—John Persons of the town of Deer Creek was severely injured while cutting cordwood with his brother. The two young men were using double-sided axes and standing back to back, when the brother swung his ax and struck John in the back, cutting a long gash alongside the backbone, severing a number of ribs and literally laying his back open. Fortunately the blade did not cut through any of the vital organs, and he will recover.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, March 20.—A statistical bureau to be devoted especially to reports relative to farm products, is provided by a bill introduced in the senate today by George H. Sullivan of Stillwater. The state auditor is superintendent, and allowed $6,000 a year for the payment of assistants and such other expenses as he may be necessary to incur.

An interesting bill is one presented by Senator D. M. Gunn of Grand Rapids. It makes a state park of Star Island in Cass lake, to be under supervision of the governor who may appoint a superintendent and caretaker at $100 a month. This island is heavily wooded. In its center, is a forest-bidden little lake, which is considerably higher in water level than Cass lake which surrounds it. How it is possible for the waters of this lake to remain higher than those of Cass lake is a mystery which no one can solve and which caused the state auditor to recommend the very action by the legislature which this bill proposes.

Senators Gunn and Bigelow legislative W. O. Bicknall both introduced an amendment of the existing inheritance tax law which is important. It extends the tax to the transfer of any and all properties within the state where such transfer is for the settlement of an estate. Thus a tax would be secured from non-residents who now escape.

The Pauly bill requiring corporations to pay labor wages at least twice a month, was indefinitely postponed by the senate today after longthy debate. It was contended the bill was unfair to farmers, to operations in the woods, and to mining interests.

A blow at the liquor monopolist which are said to exist in many of the large canters of population in the state, is made by a bill introduced in the house today by Representative James S. Spencer of Rochester. Spencer says that in his town a local brewery has practically obtained control of all the available property for saloon purposes, and thus secures a monopoly of the business. The bill prohibits any brewery, person, firm or corporation from owning more than one saloon license in any one town. The penalty for violation is $100 or 90 days in jail.

Messrs. Bjora and Jefferson today introduced in the house their third joint railroad rate bill. It provides a graduate tax from 2 cents par ton on ore containing 49 per cent of iron, to 7.1 cents per ton on ore containing 60 per cent of iron. The average Minnesota ore runs about 55 per cent, which is taxed 5 cents per ton.

The senate committee on logs and lumber today reported favorably an increase the price paid for scaling state timber from 6 to 16 cents per thousand feet. This bill is introduced at the request of the state timber board, the members of which say that the state of the timber sale is very light at present haing cut, and which one member of the board jokingly declared is a "bachelor's job." Messrs. Williams, Breckenridge, Austin and Wadena.

The agricultural school bill flight took its only many interest in the house today. The morning and afternoon were occupied in greater part in advancing bills already on the calendals. Something over an hour was given in the afternoon to listening to an address on tax laws and taxation by Nels P. Haugen, one of the tax commissioners of Wisconsin. Most of the senate joined with the house members in their chamber to hear the address.

The bill to permit the board of control to sell prison twino outside the state, and to permit retail dealers a profit margin of 1 cent on each sale and 1½ cents on credit sales, came up for lively discussion in the senate today.

"This bill is the only one that will protect this state from the clutches of the binder twine trust and twine sale," said Senator George Sullivan of Stillwater. Senator Ole O. Sageng of Otter Tail opposed the measure because it raised the price of twine about half a cent a pound. Frank Teague of Beckerwas called attention that the bill as worded might permit the trust to buy up the state supply of twine through dealers, and suggested the measure be over for investigation along this line. The motion prevailed. The W. A. Nolan reciprocal demurrage bill was presented to the senate today by the railroad committee with a recommendation to pass. On motion of Senator Clague, it was made the special order for consideration at 11 a. m. next Wednesday. There is every probability the bill will be passed by the senate. It has already gone through the house.

A number of new bills put in an appearance today, but none of great importance. The bill subjects are already covered and bills now coming in will be of minor importance. A large number of them being for appropriations for aid in road and bridge construction.

Winona—E. K. Tarbell, former mayor of this city and for a number of years proprietor of the Hotel Winona, died here after a brief illness.

A Mystery

Minneapolis—By the death of Robert E. Lester, an automobile mystery of three years ago was probably solved forever from being unearthed. On May 14, 1904, Robert Lester returned to his home in the Vendome hotel bruised and cut. Medical assistance was summoned and he lingered for three years a helpless invalid who had forgotten everything about the accident except that he was an automobile. The only clue is that he at times talked about how fast some chauffeurs drive their machines.

Caw Had Rabies

Mankato—Dr. Weshrook of Minneapolis, director of the laboratories of the state board of health, has reported to Chairman Thompson of the Watonwan county board of health an examination of the head of a cow sent to him last Sunday shows that the cow died of rabies.

The cow was one of a herd owned by Fred Kirsch of Long Lake. Kirsch's dog bit four of his cows and is thought to have bitten dogs belonging to neighbors. A number of unmuzzled dogs have been shot in the county.

ETHICS OF THE PROFESSION.

"Well, sir?" said the great lawyer. The visitor spoke tremulously.

"I am a defaulter," he said, "and I want you to defend me."

"Certainly I will defend you, my friend," he murmured, kindly. "And how many hundred thousand did you say—"

"Hundred thousand!" the client interrupted. "Oh, sir, don't think me worse than I am. It is only $250 in all, and a temporary embezzlement, and I expect to pay back every penny before I die."

"George," he said to the office boy, "show this dishonest rascal out."

Protecting His Interests.

Mr. Tightwad (in Pullman car)—Could I borrow your whisk broom for a few moments, sir?

The Porter—No, sah, yo' couldn't! If dey's gwine to be any 'scrimination 'gin de negro in dis hoss cah, I ain't a-gwine to be no access'ry befo' de foct!—Puck.

AN OLD SEA DOG.

Bebby (to his sailor uncle)—Are you an old sea dog?

Solior Uacle—Yes, thot's what they colle me.

Bebby—Well, then, let's heer you bork.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

NOT SATISFIED.

The United States has long been afflicted with an element in the body politic that is never satisfied It wants a change. No matter how prosperous the country may be it agitates for something different, something "better." and experience is that it usually gets something worse.

It appears that even with the disastrous experience of the Wilson-Gorman Tariff period fresh in their memories there are people who are clamoring for a change. They are not satisfied with the most prosperous conditions ever experienced in this country and which have no parallel in all the world.

They want to rip up the Tariff.

It is to be expected that the Democratic organization to an extent would favor this, because they foolishly imagine there is no other issue that appeals to the Democrats but the Tariff. They forget that in the South greater industrial development than ever dreamed of is in progress and that there is less sentiment for Free-Trade in that section that ever before. But they expect Republican support and to abetment they are getting it.

While Governor Cummins, of Iowa, the rallying point for the Tariff revisionists, has been almost entirely silent of late, down in Massachusetts some members of the Legislature have sighed a memorial to the President and Congress asking for an extra session of Congress to take up the matter of revising the Tariff

Possibly these members do not stop to consider the effect a session lasting through the summer, rippling up and changing the Tariff schedules to which the business of the country is adjusted, would exert. It wouldn't take them long to find out.

They Are Friendly.

The people of Thief River Falls have taken hold of the matter in earnest to help to get a line of boats running on this river to carry freight and passangers up and down the river. A committee of farmers from up this way interviewed the business men of that city last week and they took stock and donated to the boat company something over $800. The farmers were highly pleased with the assistance, not only for the finacial part of the assistance, but for the friendly feeling between them and the city, in which they do their business, and we feel confident, that the people of Thief River Falls will find that their generous assistance to the people living tributary to their city to provide a way to get their produce to market will be bread cast upon the waters that will return to them in the future.

D. N. Winton of the Thief River Falls lumber company has tendred the farmers all the assistance he could, in offering the the free use of his boats, to help them to get their produce down the river, and it surely can no longer be said the Thief River Falls are one hearty and we think, but that we are WE, and are united to get together boat.

Congressman Steenerson as a member of the committee on post offices and post roads, has proven himself to be the right man in the right place. He as a member of the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads was first to agitate the abolition of special railway mail subsidies to railroads in the south and southwest. This subsidy of $167,000 per year was kept out of the appropriation bill thru his efforts and for the first time since the railway mail service was established this item has disappeared from the bill. He was also the first to advance the reduction of railway mail pay upon the routes where the fraffic was dense and where it has been demonstrated by overwhelming evidence that the railway mail pay is excessive. The redaction is the appropriation for the next fiscal year as estimated by the Department to amount to saving to the peoples of the united States of five million dollars. It can be truthfully said that the people of the ninth congressional districet of Minnesota have a representative that does something besides draw his salery.

Missers. Cahill and Koch, who purchased the Courier last November, have decided that the cares of country newspaper work are too onerous, and on Monday the plant and business was surrendered to the former proplietor John E. King, who came up from St. Paul to keep the machinery in motion. Both of the gentlemen and their families are moving back to St. Paul, although Mr. Koch has a position in view at Duluth, and is going there to see how he likes it.—Red Lake Courier.

Glass Eyes for Animals.

Glass eyes are now made for horses, cats and dogs, as well as for human beings. These animals use a larger eye than man, and several are ordered from abroad at the same time, as a new one is necessary about once in six months. The edges become rough and produce irritation, from the acids of the secretions affecting the enamel.

Raw Animals.

With a heart attuned to nature study a little Hungarian girl in the Canadian northwest exclaimed: "Yah, teacher. It's certain beautiful on our prairie, where the birds and the small sheep run about raw."

The true strength of every human soul is to be dependent on as many nobler as it can discern and to let depended upon by as many inferior as it can reach.

The world which took out days to make, is like to take 6,000 to make out.—Browne.

Power of Habit.

Agility of Hares and Rabbits.

Interesting figures on the relative agility of hares and rabbits are given in a volume by J. G. Millais. "When running at ease," he says, "the length of the hare's stride is about four feet, but under conditions of fear its length is said to be and twelve feet, while some authors think that it can reach ten fifteen, twenty or twenty-five feet in height. Correspondingly it has been jump on to a five foot wall, but seems to be accustomed to clear a height of from six to seven feet. The stride of the rabbit is about two feet. When necessary it can make leaps of six or seven feet, horizontally. About three feet is the highest that a rabbit can attain to over a fence, but by the assistance of a furze bush, etc., it will frequently clear considerably more. Rabbits have been observed to leap a height of six feet, and the head, held as high as possible, and the forepaws, of the hind legs raised above the element at each stroke. The shoulders and front part of the body are buried beneath the water, while the rump and tail are high and dry."

You will never get on the sunny side by waiting for the world to turn round. —Atlanta Constitution.

So Forgetful.

"Why do girls wear engagement rings?"

"On the same principle that a person ties a string around his finger—so they won't forget they're engaged."

His Modest Claim.

A claim for damages against a railroad company is so often a license for exorbitant charges that a simple bill, such as was received by an Alabama railroad company many years ago, even apart from its humorous aspect, is refreshing. It ran as follows:

The —— and —— Railroad company to John Smith Dr.

July 18, 1837.—To running your Locomotive into my wife; as per Doctor's bill for caring for $25.00
To smashing ban box and spoiling her hat 1.00
To upsetting my deer horn (wagon) and breaking it 5.00
To hitting me 2.00
$33.00

There is authority for stating that the claim was paid immediately.—Scrap Book.

Her Chilly Retort.

The late Dr. —— of Malden, after pouring forth the story of his undying love in the most touching manner for over an hour to a young woman who he hoped would become his fourth wife, was refused the second time. He started for the door, but, looking around, he said in a most thunderous tone, "By heavens, you are the coldest woman I ever saw!"

The young woman looked up and answered sweetly:

"Oh, no, doctor; you have seen three colder than I!"—Boston Herald.

A Curious Notice.

This curious official notice was once published in Germany: "At the request of Herr Wilhelm Lelgeon of Inasbruck the seaman, Johan Ferguson, who was drowned in May, 1880, on a journey from Stockholm to Hamburg to the Kolser Friedrich, is hereby called upon by the courts to appear and report himself on or before April 1, 1881, under pain of being declared dead."

FAMOUS ARCHERS.

Stories of Wonderful Skill With Bow and Arrow.

The expression "drawing a long bow" does not of necessity mean the telling of a falsehood. It sometimes refers to a wonderful story, which may be true enough, but which is so marvelous as to require a firm trust in the veracity of the narrator to enable the hearer to believe it. Some of the longest bows of this sort have been drawn about bows and arrows.

These stories began long ago. Virgil in the "Aeneid" tells of four archers who were shooting for a prize, the mark being a pigeon tied by a cord to the mast of a ship. The first shot hit the object, the second cut the cord, and the third shot the pigeon as it flew away. The fourth archer, having nothing left to shoot, drew his bow and sent his arrow flying toward the sky with such speed that the friction of the air set the feathers on fire, and it swept on, like a meteor, to disappear in the clouds.

The stories told of Robin Hood's archery, illustrated by his wonderful performances by Locksley in Scott's "Ivanhoe," are also a decided strain upon a sensible person's credulity. The famous story of William Tell, doubted by many persons, is believed by others to have a foundation of fact. There was a Dane named Foke of whom the same story is told. William of Cloudesley, an Englishman, is said to have shot an apple from his son's head exactly in accordance with the story.

Most stories of bows and arrows relate to the accurate aim of the archer, and a Frenchman, Blaise de Vigenere, tells one that shows the tremendous force with which an arrow may be propelled if the bow be strong and long enough. According to his own account of the matter, he saw Barbarossa, a Turk, admiral of a ship called the Grand Seliman, send an arrow from his bow right through a cannon ball.

His Suggestion.

"That young woman is not intelligent, eligible or even decently courteous."

"Oh, but her father is worth a million dollars."

"Then I think she should be required to display a notice to that effect."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Queer Play in Baseball.

Here is a play in baseball that happened long ago. Perhaps it never will happen again. Did any one ever hear of a base runner leaving from first base on a line drive that was caught by a third baseman and when the ball never left the third baseman's hand? The play happened in this way: Andy Moynihan was playing third base for the Pastimes of Chicago in 1868 when a skirmish was held. The Occidentals of Peoria were the opposing team. In the first inning, with a runner on first, the batter drove a liner straight over third. Moynihan shoved up his hand, the ball struck it and stuck fast in the hand. The crowd cheered. An instant later they saw something was wrong. Moynihan, writhing with pain, was running around third base. The base runner at first saw something was the matter, and ran down to second. Then he ran to third and finally trotted home dumbfounded.

The trouble was that the ball, striking Moynihan's hand, paralyzed the nerves. The ball was stuck tight in his hand. It was five minutes before his fellow players could pry his fingers open and get the ball out.—Chicago Tribune.

Where Snow Falls.

If you are not a lover of snow, go to Malta, which is the nearest spot where you are certain of complete immunity. If you are fond of it, the suburbs of St. Petersburg will furnish all you need to ask, for there you may be sure of it for 170 days in the year. The happy medium is supplied by Copenhagen, with thirty days, while Palermo, Rome and Venice, with one, two and five days respectively, may be recommended to those who merely care for snow as a casual and fleeting guest.—London Chronicle.

Liquid Metal Polish.

One of the most important processes used for waterproofing dress materials is on the lines of the old oilmnin process. In this case the factor used is rosin dissolved in a large bulk of petroleum spirit. The fabrics to be proofed are passed through a bath of this solution and dried to drive off the solvent. Following this, the goods are treated by pressing with hot polished metal rollers. This last process melts the small quantity of rosin which is deposited on the cloth and leaves each single fiber with an exceedingly thin film of rosin on it.

Kept Awake.

"How are you getting on with your music, my dear?" inquired a lady of her niece.

"Well, of course," replied the niece diffidently, "it wouldn't be proper for me to compliment myself, but some of the neighbors have said they have stayed awake at night for hours listening to my playing."

The Meaning of Easter

The True Gladness of the Easter Day

By Rev. William Byrne.
(Catholic Vicar-General Archdiocese of Boston.)

EASTER Sunday is the day on which the church commemorates the resurrection of our Lord from the dead.

By raising Himself from the dead, Christ triumphed over all His enemies and gave the most convincing proof of His divinity. He foretold His resurrection. "The Son of Man shall be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." (Matt xii. 40.) Speaking of the temple of His body, He said: "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." (John ii. 19.) "On the third day He shall rise again." (Matt. xx. 19.) "I lay down my life that I may take it again. I have power to lay it down and take it up again." (John x. 18.)

The resurrection of Christ was a miracle; that is, something beyond the power of any created being to effect. Christ by His divine power recalled His soul to His body, and arose from the tomb glorious and immortal. He appeared frequently to His apostles and disciples after His resurrection; and to cure the doubting mind of St. Thomas, allowed him to touch the wounds.

The true significance of this festival is well expressed in the gradual and sequence of the Easter liturgy. "This is the day the Lord hath made; let us rejoice and be glad. Christ, our Pasch, is immolated."

"Let Christians offer praise to the Paschal victim. The Lamb has redeemed the flock. The sinless Christ has reconciled sinners to his Father. Death and Life waged a wondrous conflict. The Lord of Life by dying lives and reigns."

The resurrection of Christ is the model of our spiritual regeneration and the pledge of our immortality.

The Hope, Memory and Reality of Easter

By Rev. Albert Parker Fitch,
(Of the Congregational Church.)

THE Resurrection, which we celebrate on Easter day, means one of two things to most people. It is either a memory or a hope. To the young into whose souls the wise years have not ground their experience of pain, their proof of the utter unreasonableness and malignant cruelty of life, if this life here were all, to them Easter is a far-off fading memory which has no especial significance for to-day. Jesus' resurrection is an infinitely remote event, a magical wonder. It occurred under other skies, in a distant land, amid a wornout and forgotten civilization. To be sure there is historical evidence for it; but they accept it, if they accept it at all, with about as much vividness of perception as they accept the death of Alexander or the assassination of Julius Caesar.

Then, to older men and women, the resurrection is not so much a memory as a hope. It is a hope born of a desperate necessity. We remember little children who sleep in tiny graves to-day and our hearts demand that they be Easter graves. We remember great souls, passed on now, to whom we gave our worship in our youth. We have lived beside them and seen their deathless effort, their far-reaching aspiration, their virtue, strength, wisdom, power, light—all the persistent heroism of the soul. And then, when the highest station had been reached, when the noblest song was quivering at last upon their triumphant lips, we've seen it all end. Virtue, strength, wisdom, power, light, all vanished! Nothing left but dust to dust, ashes to ashes, rotteness to mother earth. And, seeing all this, the resurrection is not a fading memory to such souls, o, no! It stands for a desperate hope. There must be something beyond. Somewhere, sometime these shall live again.

But to the Christian, to that happy man whom Jesus has found, the resurrection is not a memory and not a hope; he forgets both of these in his joy in its present reality. The Easter assurance of immortality is not a far-off promise, it is a present gift; not a future hope, but an immediate possession. For God has come into him and taken possession of him, and he is living for the things of God in the eternal light and power of God, and no is already one of the immortals.

Albert Parker Fitch

The Question Answered By the Resurrection

By Rev. Reuben Kidner.
(Of the Episcopal Church.)

THE meaning of the resurrection is that it confirms the belief in the immortality of the soul, which all mankind everywhere have held. Socrates, just before the end says to his friends: "But that which I some time since argued at length, that when I have drunk the poison I shall no longer remain with you, but shall depart to some happy state of the blessed." On an ancient Greek tomb we read: "Mother, leave thy grief, remembering the soul which Zeus has rendered immortal and which decaying to me for all time, and has carried now into the starry skies. This is another Greek utterance: "Dying, thou art not dead: thou art gone to a happier country. And in the tales of the blest thou rejoicest and thou shalt not hunger or thirst any more. Yes, and thy gods are thy light, and glory is ever upon thee."

Thoughts like these occupied the minds of the blest end wisest long before the Christian era. Intimations of immortality abound in all literatures. The resurrection is not a bolt out of a clear sky. It is rather a stage in a process of evolution. It builds upon that which has gone before. It adds to what is best in life known. It confirms what was surmised. It gives form and shape to shadowy, but persistent and indestructible hopes and longings. The thought of the ages prepared the way for belief in the resurrection, and, when it happened, millions were ready to believe.

An Easter Day

Out of the tomb of night a day has risen; be sure of it, you who live your own; do not hurry, for in time it is like all other days; neither delay, for NOW is passing. Early turn your face to the dawn and from its fresh waters wash all the stains of night, then should the noon be dark with storms, your smile will still wear the rose tints of the morning. This new day can be saved only by spending it; therefore, in its care be enduring; in its confusion be patient; in its sorrow be trustful; in its trial be noble; in its peril be heroic. Step safely, among human hearts and leave so much of kindness along life's pathway, that gladness shall spring up bearing tribute in the cool eyenide of the world's glad Easter.

Fashionable Bodices for Wear at Evening Parties

For theater wear this spring there are lovely new models in bodices that, like those of the past winter, must show some connecting link between them and the suit in touches of the cloth or silk of which the suit is built. Some of them have the Dutch neck, but as these necessarily demand a scarf of some sort for the street, this neck is rather more popular for reception or evening theater frocks.

Lett us with davoutness hope that the revival of this Dutch neck will be restrained to the house, where only hse it any place. It won't be, you know. We'll see it frequently on the street with a necklace of "pearls" so large that no one but an American duchess could possess them. At least, let's not any of us be transgressors!

Here are drawings of four especially nice bodices, all of which have palatinted cloths in their make-up, and over which ara to ha put the short-waistad jackets that ara seen in tha spring model suits to complete tha toilst.

WAIST OF WHITE FAILLE.

Pretty blouse of white faille, made with narrow box plaits, which are ornamented with fagoting. Four plaits in the center extend the entire length of the blouse; the others open out over the bust.

The sleeves are made and trimmed to correspond.

IN BRAID-TRIMMED WAISTS.

Designs Give Ample Scope for Elaborate Ornamentation.

Some of the braid-trimmed waists are wonderfully fetching, and give ample scope for extravagant elaboration, with ample linen. For example, there in a stunning model in an up-town shop which would directly come under that observation, says the New York Evening Post. It in of deep, creamy white, with the shoulders laid in six tiny tucks, each tuck some five inches long. Through the center there runn a three-inch box-plait, which is slashed at intervals for the insertion of a soft tafteta tie. At either side and extending slightly over the shoulders are bretelles of the waist fabric, hack and front, which are shaped to the waist and are tucked smoothly in the girdle. Around the base of the collar, down the sides of the front plait and outlining the bretelles, is a half-inch fancy braid of loose mesh which is laid over dark blue silk, matching that of the tie and the girdle. The sleeves are laid in several very straight little gathers at the shoulders, and again at the tops of the cuffs which, coming just below the elbow, give the three-quarter effect to the sleeves.

There is more or less comment among leading modistes, and perhaps particularly among the retail shops, as to the position the wash silk waist will have in the spring list. Some really beautiful designs are shown and equally pleasing models, but for some unfathomable reason the American woman does not seem to take kindly to the wash silk blouse. It seems to be a golden mean between the severe, tailored linen and the soft lingerie, and my lady prefers the severity of the one or the extreme chiffoness of the other, with no happy medium of the silk blouse order.

GREATEST DAY IN YEAR.

Reasons Why Easter Should Be Remembered with Gladness.

In very early times Easter was always spoken of as the "great day," and such it surely is, the very greatest day in the year's calendar—a day that brings with it eternal hope to the sorrowful, a blessed peace to all mankind and crowns the glad springtime with the promise of life everlasting. Not for 52 years has Easter come so early ne this season.

Perhaps some of the department readers will be glad to preserve the table given below, showing the date Easter will come on for the next four years. Calculations for Easter bonnets mey thus be mnde some time in advance: 1908, April 19; 1909, April 11; 1910, March 27; 1911, April 16.

Easter Breakfasts.

Tha custom of entertaining at Easter is becoming very popular, especially after early church, the repast being finished by 11 o'clock for the benefit of the guests who wish to go to that service, it being a foregone conclusion thet every one attends some church on this especial Sunday for reasons both temporal and spiritual. It is quite the proper thing to do, and co-called "society" is always well represented. At this 9 o'clock breakfast the hostess hns an opportunity of serving some delicious egg dishes, with evergreen appropriate to the occasion, and beautiful spring flowers.

Hunting the nest of the Easter rabbit is looked forward to in Germnny by the children with the sama eagerness as our little ones hang up their stockings at Christmas.

While the chicken shares the honors with tha rahbit, it is always tha latter who sits on the nest for which tha children hunt with such avidity. The parents hida thin nest with great care, so often the entire morning is consumed before it is discovered with the treasured eggs, each containing a gift. Some of the eggs are made of cotton; others are the real shells carefully emptiad of their contents.

OVER $1,000 A YEAR AND "LIVING."

That Is the Story of a Michigan Farmer Who Lives in Western Canada.

Olds, Alhorta, Dec. 10, 1906.
Mr. M. Y. McInnes, Detroit, Michigan:
Dear Sir and Friend—It will he four years next May since I came to Olds, and have lived here ever since.

Since I came here wheat has run from 25 to 45 bu. per acre, oats from 65 to 115, that I know of. I raised that last year, 115 bu. to the acre of the finest oats I aver saw, and oats that I sowed 21st day of May this year went 72½ to the acre and weighed 41 lbs. to the bushel. My barley went 40 bu. last year and 50 this year, and was not sown until tha latter part of May. I had 3 acres of potatoes this year and sold 700 bushels and put 270 bu. in the cellar, and no bugs to pick.

We have a fine Government Creamery at Olds. Our cows made $41 per head and I didn't feed any grain; only prairie hay, so you see we are doing well. We have the patent for our homestead now and am very thankful that we came to Alberta. We have made a little over $1,000 each yeor besides making our living. I would not go back to Michigan to live for anything. If I had my choice of a ticket to Olds or a 40-acre farm in Michigan I would take tha ticket and in two years I could buy any of them 40-acre farms. This is the country for a poor man, as well as a man with money.

I will close, thnnking you for our prosperity, I remain yours truly,

CLAIMS TO CURE ALL ILLS.

Scotch Minister Announces Discovery of Remarkable Germicide.

A claim of an astounding nature is put forward by a minister whose field of work lies within the bounds of the city of Glasgow, Scotland. He has discovered a germicide by the application of which he can cure every kind of infectious, loathsome, and incurahla disease, even when considered, humanly speaking, hopeless. He has demonstrated to his own satiefaction that hospitals for infectious diseases are quite unnecessary, and that surgical operations except on the battlefield or in railway or other accidents, are totally uncalled for. No one operation is needed, according to him, for appendicitis, for example, as it can be perfectly cured by the germicide. The discoverer of the germicide has published a list of the names of 60 patients, with their addresses, whom he says he has cured, or is in process of curing, even in some cases, after they had received their "death warrant" from medical practitioners.

FIFTEEN YEARS OF ECZEMA.

Terrible Itching Prevented Sleep—Hands, Arms and Legs Affected —Cuticura Cured in 6 Days.

"I had eczema nenrly fifteen years. Tho affected parts were my hands, arms and legs. They were the worst in tha winter time, and wera always itchy, and I could not keep from scratching them. I had to keep both hands handaged all tho time, and at night I would have to scratch though the bandages on. The itching was so severe, and at times I would have to tear everything off my hands to scratch the skin. I could get rest or sleep. I had severel physicians treat me but they could not give me a permanent cure. I then used cuticura and stop the itching. After using the Cuticura Soap, one box of Cuticura ointment, and two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent for about six days the itching had ceased, and now tha sores have healed entirely. I am much better in my life than I do now. Edward Worall, Band 20th U. S. Infantry, Fort Crook, Nebraska."

Varnish Secret Lost.

The Cremona varnish disappeared about 1760, and no far the recipe has not been rediscovered. Whether it was a gum or an oil or a distillation from soma plant or a chemical is not known, nor how it was mixed. Many theories regarding it have been advanced from time to time, and Dod, who died in 1830, claimed to have rediscovered it. He employed others to make his violins, but always varnished them himself. His varnish is very superior, and his violins command high prices. The varnishing and polishing of a violin are done usually by a woman. It requires time and practice, for tha finest instruments are given over as often as 30 times.—March Circle.

FRESH AIR ESSENTIAL TO PREVENT CONSUMPTION.

Dangerous to Neglect Even an Ordinary Cough or Cold—Simple Remedy is Effective.

"Good food, fresh air and rest; keep your windows open winter and summer."

So we are told by the great scientists who are certainly doing wonders in reducing the death rate from Tuberculosis. They also warn us not to neglect a cold or cough, and it is most important that this advice he followed. While tho cough or cold may not bring consumption, it is better to be on the safe side and take no chences.

Horo is a simple remedy that will break up a cold in twenty-four hours, and cure any cough that is curable: Glycerine, two ounces; Virgin Oil of Pino (Pure), one-half ounce; good Whisky, a half pint. Shake well and use in teaspoonful doses every four hours. The ingredients can be secured from any good prescription druggist at small cost, but must be pure to effect the desired results. For this reason it is always best to purchase the ingredients separately and prepare tho mixture at home.

Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) should he purchased only in the original half-ounce vials put up for druggists to dispense. Each vial is enclosed in a round wooden case, with engraved wrapper, with the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure); guaranteed under the Food and Drug Act, June 30, 1906. Prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon. Imitations and oils sold in bulk pay dealers larger profits, but they are dangerous to health and should nevar be used.

New Danger for Burglars.

A phonographic device that will call the police by telephone adds a new hazard to the dangers of the burglar's profession. The instrument is made to force a window or door with which the proper connections have been made an electric current operates a phonograph in tha garret. The machina calls up central and nske for the police station. The phonograph then informs the officers of tha robbary, giving street and number, and repeats this information as long as the receiver is down. Meantime, tha intruder, all unconscious that an alarm has been rung in, virtually walks into a trap, and if tho call is promptly responded to is soon in the lockup.

The Danish minister of agriculture, Ola Hansen, is one of the most popular and democratic of the public men of that country. His daughter, desiring to learn practical housekeeping, decided, with her father's consent, to enter as a servant. His master, desiring to honor the father, offered to send her home in his own carriage, but the girl declined, preferring to go by train. She took a second-class ticket and traveled in the company of a number of soldiers. Arrived at the station, she thanked the officer in charge of the party for his kindness to her and left the train. Next day the officer received a letter from the minister of agriculture thanking him for his courtesy to his daughter.

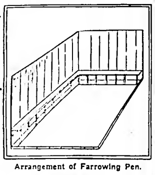
TWO YEARS IN BED

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Cured Stubborn Rheumatism When Other Treatment Gave No Help.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been curing the most stubborn cases of rheumatism for nearly a generation and thousands of grateful patients have given testimony that cannot be ignored.

Mr. Robert Odhert, a machinist, living at 231 Cameron Street, Detroit, Mich., had a very distressing experience with rheumatism for about two years. His case in the following statement: "About the year 1887 I felt the effects of rheumatism which gradually grew worse until I was compelled to give up work for a time. The years of '97 and '98 I was confined to my bed most of tha time. I was under doctors' treatment but found no relief. My limbs were swollen from the hips downward and red blotches appeared all over them. Frequently they pained me so that I had to bind them tightly with stripe of linen. This sometimes relieved the pain but at other times failed to do so. At times I had to crawl on my hands and knees, using crutches. During these spells I suffered greatly from pain around my heart which I attributed to the rheumatism.

"At last my mother wrote me and asked me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I did and in a short time I found myself getting better and have had no trouble since. I may here add that I consider myself perfectly cured as I have not had the least sign of the disease since and feel better now than I ever did. For these reasons recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to any one affected the same as I was."



Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent by mail, postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents per box or six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

THE FARROWING PEN.

Put a Rail Around the Outer Wall to Protect Little Pigs.

Careful hog raisers find it advisable to construct a rail about the outer wall of the farrowing pens that the pigs may have an opportunity on occasion to get away from the mother sow. Such a rail is not designed to protect the pig from the vicious sow, but rather to keep the hog from coming closely in contact with the outer wall and perhaps lying down on some of the litter before they are able to get away. With such a rail as shown in the accompanying illustration, taken from Montreal Herald, the pig has a chance to keep out of danger's way. The most successful hog raisers use these rails to a greater or less extent, and many of them refuse to permit a sow to farrow in a pen that is not so provided.

MATCH UP THE HORSES.

Try and Have Them Even as to Gait and Pulling Power.

This does not imply that those of the same markings or same color are to be worked together. Matching farm teams is more difficult than matching driving teams. A slow walking horse should never be put with a fast walking one, for you will have to constantly urge the slow one, and this soon irritates the other one. Match gaits; match temperaments, and match horse power. These are the essentials to keep in mind when matching up the team for heavy work. Never put a young horse to very heavy, steady work, such as plowing, alongside an old staid horse, says the Indiana Farmer. The youngster is apt to do more than his share, in spite of all you can do to equalize the work. When breaking a colt I have always found it best to put it alongside a steady, even-tempered horse that is not easily "rattled." Such a mate will soon give confidence to the colt, and he readily falls into work without much trouble. A correspondent says, give the colt some light farm work at first, such as plowing or harrowing. That is risky. We would never hitch a colt to a harrow. One never knows what they are going to do, and a harrow is a mean thing to get a horse mixed up in. Would rather give the colts the light driving, and as they become seasoned give them some heavier work. Match up the colts as soon as possible, and when the teams are matched up, don't change them around unless for good reason. Horses have to learn how to pull and work together.

Coal Tar Prevents Gnawing.

A writer in Rural New Yorker gives this as a remedy for preventing horses gnawing their mangers and halter ties

"I have found that by painting the woodwork with coal tar the worst wood gnawing horses would never bite it afterward. The tar should be put on while hot. An old broom or whisk brush may serve as a paint brush. I have also found a way to cure a horse of biting his halter strap or rope by boiling the rope in water in which a bar of cheap washing soap has been dissolved. This remedy tried on several horses which I have owned never failed. One horse, when I first got him, would bite a heavy rope in two almost as soon as tied. A small soaped rope cured him completely. This was nearly ten years ago, and it has not been necessary to tie him with a chain since."

Look Out for Water Holes.

If you have any water holes around the place, look out that the sheep do not fall in or get pushed in. If they do, with all their wool, the heavy ewes will hardly be able to get out as they did in the fall, and though they may not drown, they will get chilled and die.

The Oat Crop.

The oat crop must be put in early—just as soon as the ground is in fit condition to disc and harrow. Early sown oats stand a better show of getting ripe before the very hot weather comes on. Oats relish the cool, moist days of spring and early summer, but cannot stand excessive heat.

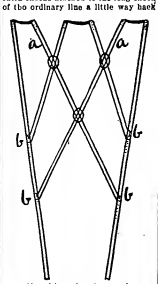
Get It on the Fields.

Don't throw the manure out of the side of the stable and allow it to lay there until spring, every snow and rain washing out the most valuable part of it. Bed all stock freely, and get every forkful of manure out on the fields as soon as possible.

Sliced beets, turnips and carrots should be fed with the grain ration.

HORSE BREEDING PROFITABLE.

Why High Prices Hold Firm Throughout the Country.



Every day indications are visible which point to the increasing value of horses as a market product. During the Illinois state fair, at Springfield, this past fall, a pair of driving horses, bays, without any action, but looking like fair roadsters able to pull some weight, changed hands for $500, and the pair looked to be sold for about $100 more than they were worth, to discriminating judges, yet one of the most astute dealers in the trade got them.

For a pair of draft mares that were shown in the farm team class, $625 was offered by the same dealer and refused promptly. This same dealer seemed to think that prices are going steadily upward, for some time at least. He stated that he did not know where the end will come, but that the consumption of horses is so great that the supply, though increased will hardly go around. He also stated that because wagon horses have been high all summer, many farmers have sold themselves short on team power and will have to buy in the spring. He said that grain is and has been high, hay is scarce and high, and that even if a farmer had to pay $30 or $40 more in the spring for a horse than he receives now, he will be making money by the transaction. He says that next spring there will be such a demand for horses of from 1,200 to 1,400 pounds weight that prices will soar into the clouds. He predicts that wagon horses will then sell on a parity with drafters. There is not lack of similar evidence, says the Horse World, in all parts of the country, to show that horse breeding will prove extremely profitable to such farmers as have any taste in that direction.

THREE ABREAST.

Directions as to How the Lines Should Be Arranged.

Some are puzzled to know how to arrange lines for three horses worked abreast. Our illustration shows how it is done. The letters a-a represent extra checks atached to the long check of the ordinary line a little way back of the attachment of the first check (b b), but not too far back, or in turning the long check might swing over the rings on the center horse. The long checks, cautions Country Gentleman, should not be put through the ring on the hames, but only through the ring on the back band.

LIVESTOCK NOTES.

A pet lamb is a fine—nuisance.

Don't forget to break a patch for turnips this spring.

Make the ewe that loses her lamb raise some twin or orphan. The ewe and lamb will both be benefited.

It is a good plan to clip the wool from around the udder before lambing time as it gives the lamb a better chance.

A few lambs in the yard will keep down the weeds and also the flower beds and garden, "if you don't watch out."

Lamb and ewe should be in a pen by themselves until they know each other and the lamb is strong enough to look out for himself.

See that the lambs get the first milk as soon as possible after they get up. If they are strong they will get it without help, but if one is weak he may need help.

Keep the colts out doors just as much of the time as possible. It may make them look rough but they will feel very much better and be hardier for the exercise and fresh air.

The juniors will not do their best if coddled or pampered. Don't overfeed nor underfeed; just give them a fair shake and they will soon be making hogs of themselves.

We are rapidly growing to regard hogs as cleanly animals, capable and willing to live apart from belly-deep filth, and apt to drink pure water and enjoy good pasture if they can get it.

Discard Wood Floors.

Careful hog raisers are getting rid of plank floors in the sleeping quarters and also the feed floors. Wood floors become saturated with urine, they made a fine place for rats and mice, and many suspect that here is the breeding place of many hog diseases. Cement floors may cost more to start with, but they are lasting, more sanitary, and by looking up the matter some, one can build the floors himself.

Detective's Parable.

Hilary K. Adair, the well-known detective, was complimented in Galveston, Tex., on an arrest that he had made. The arrest had been mysteriously achieved and Mr. Adair was asked to explain it. This, though, he refused to do.

"There are so many ways of catching criminals," he said, laughing. "You know what the old man told his wife? She first said to him:

"'Don't talk, John. You can't say I ever ran after you.'

"'True,' the old man assented. 'And you can't say the trap ever runs after the mouse, either, but it gathers him in just the same.'"

DURING THIS MONTH.

Excellent Advice Which Our Readers Will Benefit By.

Now is the time to get the rheumatic poisons and foul acids from the blood and system, states an eminent authority, who says that Rheumatism and Kidney trouble are caused by the blood, which often becomes sour from excessive acids, and also tells what to do to make it pure and healthy.

Get from any good prescription pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon, three ounces Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Mix by shaking in a bottle and take a teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime.

Just try this simple blood cleaner and tonic at the first sign of Rheumatism, or if your back aches or you feel that the Kidneys are not acting right. Any one can easily prepare this mixture at home.

BUTTON THEIR OWN WAISTS.

New York Women Have Surmounted Great Obstacle.

Marvelous as it may seem, New York women have lately discovered a way of fastening their waists up the back without calling for assistance. Thought not lacking in generosity, they became so tired of the outstretched palm of the chambermaids that they now feel that it is time to guard their pockets. The Gotham woman discovered that if she put her blouse on hind side before, with the sleeves hanging free, it could be fastened from top to bottom, with the exception of the hooks at the neck, and then turned around and the arms slipped into the sleeves without unduly straining the fastenings. So simple! So strange that no one had thought of it before. Or is it possible other women have used the plan and meanly kept it to themselves? Will the waist that buttons in the back now have a new lease of life?

Coincident Inventions.

Almost at the same time two different inventors in different places have announced their success with electrical devices for seeing at a distance. They are J. B. Fowler and William H. Thompson. In Fowler's device four wires are required to accomplish the combined effect of distant vision and hearing. Details of the operation are withheld, however, on the plea of getting out a patent. Each inventor uses the name "Televue."

GOOD NATURED AGAIN.

Good Humor Returns with Change to Proper Food.

"For many years I was a constant sufferer from indigestion and nervousness amounting almost to prostration," writes a Montana man.

"My blood was impoverished, the vision was blurred and weak, with moving spots before my eyes. This was a steady daily condition. I grew ill-tempered, and eventually got so nervous I could not keep my books posted, nor handle accounts satisfactorily. I can't describe my sufferings.

"Nothing I ate agreed with me, till one day I happened to notice Grape-Nuts in a grocery store and bought a package, out of curiosity to know what it was.

"I liked the food from the very first, eating it with cream, and now I buy it by the case and use it daily. I soon found that Grape-Nuts food was supplying brain and nerve force as nothing in the drug line ever had done or could do.

"It wasn't long before I was restored to health, comfort and happiness. Through the use of Grape-Nuts food my digestion had been restored, my nerves are steady once more, my eyesight is good again, my mental faculties are clear and acute, and I have become so good-natured that my friends are truly astonished at the change. I feel younger and better than I have for 20 years. No amount of money would induce me to surrender what I have gained through the use of Grape-Nuts food." MAN OF DELICATE NERVES.

Rosenthal, the Pianist, Made Much Trouble in Hotel.

Rosenthal, the pianist, is one of those entitled to have his crankiness termed "the eccentricities of genius," says the San Francisco Chronicle. When he inspected his rooms at the Majestic upon his arrival very late the other night, he went softly to the adjoining doors, and placing his ears close to the cracks, exclaimed, in broken English, "Zgodd, no sounds pass thees." After nodding his approval of the grand piano and the furniture he frowned at the tan-colored window shades. "Must be green." He was assured that a change would be made especially for him the next day.

At five o'clock in the morning Rosenthal, clad only in his pajamas, came scurrying excitedly down stairs and into the office, where the drowsy night clerk was nodding at the desk.

"Ze street cars! Noise! Must stopped! Nervous me! I cannot sleep."

The clerk hurriedly sent for Manager Gustav Mann, and Mann spent two hours telling Rosenthal funny stories in German trying to divert his mind while the clerk was upstairs squaring the mangement for waking a guest on the Gough street side and ordering him to move at once to the Sutter street side as a gas pipe had burst under the floor and had to be repaired!

PE-RU-NA A MEDICAL COMPOUND

In any medical compound as much depends upon the manner in which it is compounded as upon the ingredients used.

First, there must be a due proportion of the ingredients. Each drug in the pharmacopeia has its special action. To combine any drug with other drugs that have slightly different action, the combination must be made with strict reference to the use for which the compound is intended. The drugs may be well selected as to their efficacy, but the compound ENTIRELY SPOILED BY THE PROPORTION in which they are combined.

It takes years and years of experience to discover this proportion. There is no law of chemistry, of pharmacy, by which the exact balance of proportion can be determined. EXPERIENCE IS THE ONLY GUIDE.

In compounding a catarrh remedy Dr. Hartman has had many years' experience. In the use of the various ingredients which compose the catarrh remedy, Peruna, he has learned, little by little, how to harmonize the action of each ingredient, how to combine them into a stable compound, how to arrange them into such nice proportions as to blend the taste, the operation and the chemical peculiarities of each several ingredient in order to produce a pharmaceutical product beyond the criticism of doctors, pharmacists or chemists.

WE REPEAT, THAT AS MUCH DEPENDS ON THE WAY IN WHICH THE DRUGS ARE COMBINED AS DEPENDS UPON THE DRUGS THEMSELVES.

The compound must present a stability which is not affected by changes of temperature, not affected by exposure to the air, not affected by age. It must be so combined that it will remain just the same whether used in the logging or mining camps of the northwest or the coffee plantations of the tropics.

A complete list of the ingredients of Peruna would not enable any druggist or physician to reproduce Peruna. It is the skill and sagacity by which these ingredients are brought together that give Peruna much of its peculiar claims as an efficacious catarrh remedy.

However much virtue each ingredient of Peruna may possess, the value of the compound depends largely upon the manner and proportion in which they are combined. The right ingredients, put together rightly, is the only way a medical compound can be made of real value.

ON SECRET SERVICE

By COL. JASPER EWING BRADY

Outwitting the Russian Government

Passing rapidly over the intervening years and reserving some exceedingly thrilling experiences of Col. Cheney for future telling, we come to '95, '96 and '97, the period just ante dating the Spanish-American war.

Some of Cheney's cases had been for the state department and he stood very high in the estimation of the federal government. He was a man mature in years, rich in experience and as evenly balanced as a perfectly made machine. He was a close and intense student of current events and while he was an ardent partisan in politics he never intruded his beliefs to the detriment of his work. His detective service company was all powerful and a potent factor for good. Its ramifications were world wide and its workings were under the guidance of the master mind of Cheney. In 1897 he was 57 years old. Few grey hairs had made their appearance and he really looked like a man of 49. He was as forceful and virile as he always had been. Guthrie, Lonergan and others had grown up in the business and in 1893 he incorporated his company and made these two equal partners with him. As he expressed it when he presented them their stock, "You see, fellows, I haven't a kith or kin to leave to, and anything to when I'm gone and I'd hate to think of this company busting up, so I've made you both equal partners with me. You've both been my standbys and—why, hang it, I'm near to tears." Which was true. So were the other men.

Cheney's vision of his younger days whereby he saw a home had faded away as years passed on. They were just dimly apparent now. Somehow visions of men at 50 are more roseate than those of 57.

Keeping in close touch with affairs national and otherwise Cheney knew that sooner or later the United States was going to invite Spain to leave the western hemisphere. The invitation would be declined and Spain would be driven out. As early as '96 the United States began active, though unknown to the public, preparations to do her part. Several delicate governmental missions were entrusted to Cheney. Trips to Cuba, conferences with the members of the junta, inspections of certain persons and firms. Cheney was aware what was going on at all times and when war did come he knew he would be appointed chief of the secret service of the army.

The government awoke to the fact that it had been standing still for years so far as information as to what the other powers were doing was concerned. It began to send army and navy men to foreign countries to gather and collate matters military, but there were a number of things civilians could get as well as soldiermen and sailormen.

Cheney received a note from the secretary of state's private secretary early in '96 asking him to come to Washington. Two days later Col. Cheney walked into the stately old pile known as the state, war and navy department. The secretary of state received him as cordially as his diplomatic and official nature would admit.

"Col. Cheney," he said, "I've sent for you because a man is wanted to do some very delicate work for the government."

"Abroad?" asked Cheney.

"You anticipate me; yes, abroad," replied the secretary. There was a slight touch of asperity in his tone. Secretaries of state do not like to be anticipated. Cheney merely smiled and murmured, "pardon me." He was not awed one bit by the greatness of the personage in whose presence he was standing.

"The president wants to see you at two o'clock to-day. Two o'clock, Col. Cheney—sharp!"

"The 'sharp' was unnecessary, Mr. Secretary. I served some time in the army and promptness has always been a strong point with me. Good morning."

"One moment, colonel, please." The great personage's tone softened a bit. He began to realize this calm grey-eyed man was above the ordinary. "After the president has finished will you please come back? I will have your papers ready."

"You are assuming I will go, then?"

"Of course you'll go—because the president asks it—because you will be serving your country by so doing."

Score one for the secretary. He struck Cheney fairly and squarely. Patriotism was Cheney's long suit. Many a time he had drunk the toast, "My country, may she always be right; but right or wrong—my country." He smiled and said:

"Yes, Mr. Secretary, I reckon I'll go."

"Thank you, colonel."

At two o'clock Cheney appeared at the White House. Evidently he was expected because within a moment of the time his card was taken in a gentlemanly secretary came out and said:

"This is Col. Cheney?" Cheney nodded.

"The president will see you in a moment." Cheney was not oppressed by the constrained air of officialdom. A few moments later a tiny bell rang and the secretary led the way down three short steps to the inner sanctum of the White House. "Col. Cheney," said the calm brown-eyed, smooth-faced man advancing with outstretched hand. "Mr. President," replied Cheney, taking the profferred hand.

"Sit down, colonel," said the president. A cigar was lighted and the atmosphere soon lacked restraint.

They talked for nearly two hours. The president unfolded all his plans and ideas. Information was wanted. Information of government—of the navy—of the army—of everything of interest other nations were doing.

"Particularly, Col. Cheney," said the president in closing, "do I want information of Russia. That's a big country and there is a great feeling of unrest there. It is rumored the army is disloyal, the navy ready to rebel and the peasantry ready to rise in their wrath. And I fancy you will have the greatest difficulty in obtaining this information in Russia, because they are so strict with foreigners, especially Americans. But I think you can do it."

"Mr. President," said Cheney quietly but earnestly, "I'll find out what you want or die trying," and he meant every word of it.

"Look out for their 'Third section.' I've heard it's pretty alert, colonel."

"All right, sir, I'll keep my eyes and ears open."

A short time later Col. Cheney again stood in the presence of the august secretary of state. The secretaries of war and navy were also there by appointment. It was after dark, and the clerks had left the old building when the conference broke up. Cheney had all his passports, financial papers and instructions. The instructions were verbal; his passport was made out in the name of James E. Bradley, journalist. At certain places in Europe and Asia, United States ambassadors and consuls would have funds for him. He was to spare neither time nor expense—the government wanted information—especially from Russia. Cheney had a week in which to settle his affairs in this country. A day later he was in Chicago and confided only to Guthrie and Lonergan, where he was going.

A swift steamer sailing from New York carried Cheney on his first trip abroad. Duty and pleasure were to be combined, but duty would come first. Six days later he landed in Southampton and was soon in London.

At this time the relations between England and the United States were very cordial and there was no need of concealment or disguise, and Cheney's seven days in the English metropolis were very pleasant. He was entertained at the St. George's and Service clubs, and made thoroughly at home in Scotland Yard. His fame as a detective had preceded him, and Mackenzie and others made his stay enjoyable. But when Cheney sailed from Dover to Calais his name became "Bradley" and until he again set foot in the United States he retained that nomme de guerre—because it was war. France held not much startling military information; St. Cyr, the French military academy, was behind West Point. Germany was full of advanced military ideas, and very carefully did Cheney inspect the German machine. He saw a review of 30,000 troops, and the kaiser himself was present. Cheney's report from Germany was full of meat. He stood on top of the Mont. St. Jean on the field of Waterloo, and gazed down over the plain to a point where the emperor and Ney had a consultation on the afternoon of the memorable June day when the shake of a peasant's head caused the downfall of the empire. To the left he saw the road over which came Blucher. The sunken road of chain was outlined; Hougomont and Nivelles were there, too, and Waterloo, the greatest field in history! Cheney was much impressed here and also at Brussels, where he walked through the hall in which "there was a sound of revelry by night."

Spain was visited, and Cheney noted the entire lack of military preparation. He went aboard war ships with impunity. The Almiranto Oquendo, the Cristobol Colon, and Maria Theresa were visited and inspected. Later these ships were reduced to scrap iron by Sampson's fleet at Santiago. Portugal was suffering from military dry rot. Italy was full of activity from end to end. The ever-present controversy between the Vatican and state was apparently forgotten. Military everywhere—and for what? The answer is still wanting though the activity continues.

Austria offered a fair field for investigation. The Austrian army was great on show and parade, but as a practical military machine it wasn't much. The navy of Austria was nil, although Cheney was much impressed with the gondola fleet on the Grand canal in Venice. "Great for pleasure," said Cheney, smilingly to himself as he leaned on the railing of the Grand hotel and watched the pleasure laden boats glide by. After Austria came Russia—Russia, the most despotic autocratic government in all the world; Russia the home of anarchy, the breeding ground of nihilism; Russia where human life wasn't worth a cracker; Russia the home of the knout and all the horrors of dungeons in dank and dark places; Russia with its Siberia to the eastward where thousands of poor, downtrodden human beings were annually starved and beaten to death because they dared, if only in thought, to oppose the shriveled bit of intellectuality called the czar. It was irony to address him as the "Little Father." Cheney knew his work would not be of easy accomplishment in Russia; he knew all about the celebrated "third section," or secret police. They had their agents every place in the world—even the United States held many of them. Every foreigner entering Russia is under surveillance from the time he enters until he leaves (and numbers of them do not leave). Cheney knew this. He knew all his cunning would be required to outwit this dreaded third section, but he felt equal to it. He knew if he was detected seeking military information his life would pay the forfeit. Mails, telegraphs, railroads, all means of transportation were under governmental control. Before leaving Venice, Cheney destroyed every scrap of writing he had save his passport and a small letter of credit. He would observe and find out all he could in Russia, but the making of notes and transcribing his report would be done in neutral territory later on. He was just a plain American citizen on a trip. Journalism was a chance profession, to be used as a pleasure more than a livelihood. He was rich (that was true), and fully conscious of his danger, Col. Jack Cheney took the Imperial express, a de luxe train, and shortly afterward he was at the border. The train stopped, the cars were opened and inspected by a horde of customs officers. Across a fence was Russia; now they were in Austria. Presently a distinguished looking individual, resplendent in a green and gold uniform and hung with medals and decorations announced:

"Pardon, ladies and gentlemen; but owing to some unavoidable circumstances which cannot be controlled, we shall be compelled to detain you a short while. We regret it, but it is unavoidable."

Cheney looked the man over carefully, and then carelessly lit a cigar. No one was allowed to leave the cars, but gazing out the window he saw several men in plain clothes looking over passports, baggage and individuals. It was evident some one was being looked for.

"'Third section,'" murmured Cheney to himself as he smoked and read. An inspector came in and said:

"Your passport, monsieur, please?"

Without raising his eyes from his book he handed the inspector the little leather case containing his passport. It was carefully read and handed back with a polite "Thank you." Cheney could feel he, too, was being looked over, but never turned a hair. Two hours were consumed—and as Cheney afterwards learned, two men had been turned back. A few moments more and they were in Russia. That night Cheney stopped in Warsaw, but nothing untoward happened there. Poor down-trodden Poland contained no military secrets of note.

Moscow was Cheney's next stop, and here the trouble began. He had hardly been in the Anglo-Russ hotel ten minutes before there was a knock on the door of his room.

"Come in," he said.

In came M. Dobrowsky, as shown by the card. Dobrowsky looked like a Parisian fashion plate.

"You are Mr. Bradley?"

"Yes, sir," replied Cheney. "Won't you sit down?"

"Thank you," said M. Dobrowsky, sitting on the edge of a chair, holding his silk hat over his knees. "Mr. Bradley," he continued, in perfect English, "Gen. Trepoff, whose office I represent, has asked me to interview you."

"Is Gen. Trepoff an editor?" smilingly asked Cheney. He knew he wasn't.

"No; ah! no, Mr. Bradley. Gen. Trepoff is military governor here in Moscow." Cheney knew he was a prefect of police as well.

"Oh," said Cheney, with the same inscrutable smile on his face, "and what does Gen. Trepoff want of me?"

"Merely wants to know, Mr. Bradley, what you are doing here. That's all."

"At present, Mr.—er—Monsieur Dobrowsky, I am doing nothing at all. I only arrived yesterday."

"But how long are you going to stay?"

"That's a question, sir. I don't know."

"Yes, thank you," said M. Dobrowsky, bowing himself out. Carefully Cheney looked out of the window. He saw his visitor leave and, in passing a man standing across the street, he made an almost imperceptible sign.

"Watched," muttered Cheney. "Well, let's see who wins out."

A little while later he took a walk, going up to look at the Kremlin. A mirror cleverly arranged in the end of his walking stick revealed the fact that he was followed by three men.

"They must think I'm damned important," he mused.

When he returned to the hotel he found his suit case had been inspected. Everything had been replaced, but his trained eye noted at once one or two slight discrepancies.

"So that's their game," he thought.

His sleep was undisturbed that night and next morning he again took a stroll and drive around the city. Multitudes of sentinels forbade his finding out anything about ports, troops or military matters. He reached his hotel about 12 o'clock and found his friend Dabrowsky awaiting him. Three of Dabrowsky's men had shadowed him all morning.

"Again, Monsieur Bradley, I greet you."

"So I see," said Cheney dryly. "Howdy?"

"Gen. Trepoff would feel honored if you will call on him this afternoon at three."

Cheney was about to tell Dabrowsky if Gen. Trepoff wanted to see him he could come to the hotel, but his better judgment indicated it would not be well to antagonize the general.

"The honor is mine, Mr. Dabrowsky. Say to the general I'll be there."

Cheney was there, and was ushered into the presence of Trepoff. Trepoff, whose name afterwards became a synonym of everything that was cruel; Trepoff who afterwards met death at an assassin's hand. He was a distinguished looking gentleman, be-whiskered, be-uniformed and bemedaled. His cordiality was extreme and his English perfect.

"Monsieur Bradley, I am honored."

"The honor is mine, general," said Cheney, taking the proffered hand and sitting down.

"I am informed you are a journalist, Monsieur Bradley?"

"Yes, general."

"And the nature of your visit to Russia at this time is to collect and collate articles?"

"Yes, general."

Cheney wanted the general to do the talking.

"What kind of facts and information do you want, Mr. Bradley? Perhaps I can help you get them."

"You are most kind, general; but I won't bother you."

"You are going to write of physical Russia or political Russia?"

"Maybe both, general."

"What periodicals and papers do you write for, Mr. Bradley?"

Cheney smiled. "Well, you see, Gen. Trepoff, in America I am what is known as a 'tramp journalist.' I have no regular connection—I write an article and sell it as I can."

"Isn't that a precarious living, Mr. Bradley?" The general's question was impertinent and personal, but Cheney knew his ground.

"If that was my only living, yes; but I'm not poor, general; I have an independent competency of my own. Munro & Co., No. 7 Rue Scribe, Paris, will honor my draft to-day for £10,000. I'm not poor, general."

"Assuredly not. How long do you intend staying in Moscow?"

"Two or three days. It's an interesting place, the Kremlin particularly so."

"And then—"

"Well, general, I hardly know. St. Petersburg, to be sure. Maybe Odessa and Sevastopol."

The interview ended and three days later Cheney left for St. Petersburg. He was under surveillance and knew it. Moscow didn't yield him any information whatsoever. St. Petersburg must do better or the Russian visit would be nil. There was military activity, lots of it; Cheney could feel it in the air; but what was it? He called on the American ambassador, was made welcome, and then tried for his information. Wherever he turned he was watched, he knew it. It was irksome to him, he hated it. Through the instrumentality of one of the under secretaries of the American embassy Cheney was given the courtesies of the Imperial club. "Here," thought Cheney, "I will be let alone." Not so, however, because wherever he turned outside he was watched. And even in the club some of the servants were members of the "Third Section."

One evening Cheney was sitting in the club smoking his customary cigar, and mentally cursing the people that were keeping him from achieving his end. All at once he felt a light touch on his shoulder. Quickly turning he found himself gazing into a very frank pair of blue eyes. A friendly hand was outstretched and a pleasant smile was on the face of the man. He was a Russian, surely.

"M. Bradley, you look lonely."

Cheney took the proffered hand and in the shake received a Masonic grip. Masonry in Russia is without the pale of the government, and Cheney was not sure but what the grip was given by mistake; but again it was given, and this time more pronounced. At last here was a friend.

"I am Count Yarmoleff, Mr. Bradley. For several days I have noticed you. Particularly have I noticed your gold watch charm. Sh—yes, I am a Mason. It's tabooed here, but in England, where I was an attache, I took my degrees—only three of them, but enough to appreciate the benefits of Masonry."

"Well, I am glad to meet you, count," replied Cheney, with an easy grace. "I was lonely—damned lonely, if you will pardon the ultra American expression."

The meeting was most opportune. At first Cheney thought Yarmoleff might be a "Third Section" man, but subsequent events proved he was not. He was just a royal good fellow, who was first attracted by Cheney's watch charm and later by his strong personality. An inquiry at the desk revealed the name "Bradley;" the Masonic hall did the rest. The count was more than cordial and in course of the evening said:

"You must see the review of my regiment to-morrow, Bradley."

"Your what?" said Cheney.

"My regiment, the Tenth Imperial Hussars! I'm colonel of it, and the Czar reviews it to-morrow."

"Why, count, I shall be delighted." Here was a chance! Yarmoleff as colonel of the Imperial Hussars was a member of the military council; military information could be obtained as wanted. The stars of luck were shining brightly. But there were those "Third Section" men—what of them? Almost every day Cheney was summoned before the prefect, and that day he had learned Gen. Trepoff had come to St. Petersburg. Cheney made up his mind to a bold move. His engagement with Count Yarmoleff was for eleven the next morning. At 10:15 he stopped at the government police office on the Nevsky Prospect. He sent his card in Gen. Trepoff and was received immediately.

"Ah, my dear Mr. Bradley, I am glad to see you. It is an honor."

"Thank you, general. I came to-day before I was sent for. Ever since I landed in Russia I've been under the surveillance of your men and every day I've come up like a lackey and reported to your minions, either here or at Moscow. Now, general, I'm sick and tired of it. Everywhere I go one of your men follow me! It must cease right now or I shall go to the American ambassador and claim the protection of my government. Do I make myself clear, general?"

"Perfectly, Mr. Bradley," said the general, rising. Both men stood facing each other and the situation was tense. The Russian bear was being bearded in his own lair.

"In these times, Mr. Bradley, we watch every one—and we do more than that on occasions."

"Oh, yes, I know, general. Siberia and all that; but I am not intimidated. At eleven I have an appointment with Count Yarmoleff. If the surveillance continues I shall ask him to accompany me to my embassy and then to the foreign office."

At the mention of Yarmeloff's name Trepoff's manner softened. Yarmeloff was a noble, a man of note, and Trepoff was a sycophantic man. If this American was a friend of Count Yarmeloff's it might be well to draw in.

"I am sorry Mr. Bradley, that you have been troubled. I will see that it ceases instantly. You will understand, I am sure, that extreme care is necessary." More profuse apologies, and Cheney left. The surveillance did cease and thereafter Cheney's progress was unimpeded. He saw the review of the Tenth Imperial Hussars; he saw Cossacks and Guards regiments galore, and after the review was over Yarmeloff presented him to a number of notables.

That evening while dining with the count, Cheney judiciously put a few questions, intending to draw information military. Yarmeloff had had several glasses of wine and was mellow with affection for Bradley.

"Ah, my dear Bradley; you must come down to my estates near Yaroslav. Next week I have quite a distinguished party there. Grand Duke Vladmir will be one and others of note. You will enjoy yourself. You will come? Yes?"

"Thank you, count, I will come. Maybe I can get a good descriptive story out of this: I am a writer, you know."

"Yes, you may, but I fear not. You see all of the gentlemen will be military men, but while the council meets you can enjoy yourself on the place. We will start to-morrow."

Cheney saw the American ambassador that evening and the next day went with his friend to Yaroslav. The estates were magnificent—the castle grand and everything was done for Cheney's comfort. Vladmir and the other generals arrived. Makaroff and Rojestvensky for the navy came also. Cheney smoked many cigars, read a few books and kept his eyes and ears open. He learned all. It was only '97, mind you, but even then Japan was being discussed. Troops in great numbers were being rushed across Siberia into Manchuria. Port Arthur was being strengthened. Japan was not held in very high esteem by Russia, and the great bear would crush the little yellow man by sheer force of numbers. Cheney secured all the information necessary and reluctantly he bade his host good-by, promising to return later on. Odessa was 1,000 miles away, and Cheney made for that point by easy stages. Again came the ugly surveillance of the "Third Section." His steps were dogged continuously. Three days must he wait for a steamer to take him to Constantinople. On the second day the air of Odessa became oppressive. Cheney's hunch began working overtime and he scented trouble. He sat in his room overlooking the quay, striving to evolve some plan whereby he could get out of Odessa without waiting for the regular boat. Men were watching him from every side. Looking up, he saw a large white-hulled man-o'-war gliding into the harbor. From her gaff flew the Stars and Stripes.

"An American man-of-war," said Cheney. "Thank God for that!" After the salutes had been fired he saw a launch put off from the ship and head for the shore. His suitcase was all packed and when the launch was about to land he threw open the door, and there was a man waiting for him! It was no time for parley. Cheney dropped his suit-case and quick as a flash his right arm flew out. It was a clean upper-cut and one portion of the "Third Section" went down in a heap. With a bound Cheney was over him and out on the street. It was all done so quickly the men on watch were off their guard. Cheney was on the wharf as the launch came in. A young ensign was in command, and Cheney in a very few words told him who he was. In 15 minutes Col. Cheney was aboard Uncle Sam's good ship and Russia had been outwitted.

Sporting Gossip.

Again a young billiardist—this time Calvin Demarest, a youth of 19 from the west—has electrified the followers of the game by winning the national amateur championship at 14.2, in the recent tournament in New York city. This amateur promises to create as much of a furor at the game as the late Frank C. Ives, and more recently William F. Hoppe, although the latter two were of the professional class. In every phase of manipulation of the ivory balls with the willow cue the lad who represents the Chicago Athletic association displays a technique and skill which have brought no end of controversy among the wiseacres, both amateur and professional.

Besides taking the championship, the young amateur captured the prize for high single average, high grand average and high run.

That one so young in years and to the game should at one session at the table eclipse the world's amateur record average with 27 3-11, and also count a high run of 115 carroms, in a measure tells the story of his execution and skill. This is all the more remarkable when it is taken into account that 12 months ago Demarest made his first appearance as an aspirant for national honors. Even then he showed such mastery of the ivory globes that he was placed second to Edward W. Gardner, winner of the championship, and captured the high grand average prize of the tournament at the Chicago Athletic association with 12.07. His improvement has been so marked that during the recent meeting at the Liederkranz club such experts as Maurice Daly, George F. Slosson and Edward McLaughlin predicted that he could now give Hoppe a hard match.

The method of training by which Demarest has attained his proficiency is without its duplicate in the history of billiards. He had his first experience about three years ago. Before that time he had watched the ivory globes cavort around the table, but had never played. His interest was so keen that Perkins became convinced that with a systematic course the boy could be developed. The marker of the Chicago Athletic association, Perkins, partly assisted by the wizard Jacob Schaefer, brought the young amateur to his present state of billiard perfection. It was John W. Gates, who regards Demarest as his protege, who got Schaefer to take the boy under his wing, and the latter has imparted to the youth his dazzling rapidity and his sureness in playing the difficult masse shot.

Demarest's skill is another exemplification of the time-worn adage that "sticking everlastingly at it brings success." He is a slave to hard and careful practice. His training is another indication of what careful training backed by painstaking application and an adaptability for the game will accomplish even for one young in years. In Chicago they class Demarest as the foremost amateur in America.

Perkins was the first to impart the knowledge of carroms to the boy. It was a grueling beginning, according to Demarest, as for a period of half a year his only practice was with a fairly heavy cue, about 24 ounces swinging the willow wand with the right and left hands, but never touching a ball. It was in a sense imaginary billiards. He merely formed bridges and worked for a graceful and easy swing of stroke. But it achieved its object, as can be easily seen by his perfect action when in match play.

Under this method Demarest was brought to a state of methodical and mechanical perfection in the manual work of his arms and the swing of the cue. After that had been attained the carroms and the angles with the ivory spheres followed, and it was then that Schaefer supplemented the training accomplished under the eye of Perkins.

It is conceded by all of the experts that Demarest is hardly a finished product as a billiardist, but that his game is remarkable and displays wonderful possibilities.

Maurice Daly believes that Demarest will achieve better results when he has learned to play the carroms with more delicacy of touch, and arrives at a stage of his career when he can accomplish big runs by nursing. In this he is upheld by George F. Slosson.

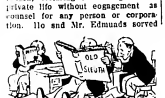
QUITTING THE SENATE NOT A POPULAR HABIT

WASHINGTON.—People do die in public office, of course, but resignations are so rare that the retirement of Senator John C. Spooner of Wisconsin continues to be a topic of interest where the politicians gather. The old-timers have brought to mind the fact that voluntary leaving the senate in late years is far more infrequent than it was in the earlier history of our country.

The last resignation from the senate of a member who retired to go into business was that of George F. Edmunds of Vermont, who in 1891 resumed to practice law. He is still at it in the city of Philadelphia. Mr. Edmunds had served continuously in the senate for a little over 25 years and retired to seek his fortune at the age of 62.



Mr. Spooner retires for the same reason, declaring that he goes into private life without engagement as counsel for any person or corporation. Ilo and Mr. Edmunds served long as members of the judiciary committee of the senate. Both are great lawyers and both were statesmen of the first class.

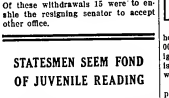
Statistics applied to present conditions are not dull. In fact, they are filled with interest. Out of the 59 congresses to date there have been but five in which there were no resignations of senators. These were at a comparatively early age. The rule of theso resignations was that the senators needed more money than the government pays, or that they might accept somo office with a larger salary and greater distinction.

In the first 50 years of the senate's history there were 124 resignations. In the next 50 years but 47 resigned. Since tho end of the 100 years of senate history, omitting the southern secession relating to 'oin tha secession movement, there have been 24 scanators to lay aside their togas. Of these withdrawals 15 were to enable the resigning senator to accept other office.

JUST off the rotunda of the capitol in a little nook that is an especial object of interest to visiting tourists when congress is in session. It is the capitol terminus of the underground railway to the congressional library. Books are constantly arriving over this subway line for senators, representatives and supreme court judges. They are delivered on book written order.

One would get a rather startling impression of the class of books the collectors on Capitol hill are partial to from a casual inspection of the list of books that are drawn out in their names. For instance, the scholarly Henry Cabot Lodge of the old bay state, according to the record, recently took out such instructive and chilling productions as "Jimmy the Bowlblack," "The Boy Captive" and "Little Joe," by James Otis. Mr. Foraker of Ohio is charged with several volumes by "Old Sleuth" and "The Starry Flag," by Oliver Optic.



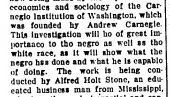
STATESMEN SEEM FOND OF JUVENILE READING

Mr. Tillman, if the card tells the truth, has been perusing Thomas Bailey Aldrich's "Story of a Bad Boy" and some of Mr. Clark Russell's thrilling sea tales, including "The Frozen Pirate."

Mr. Aldrich, the tactical leader of the Republicans, has been mixing Old Sleuth with Bottle Dimple stories and tales of Indian adventure.

"Uncle Joe" Cannon, the speaker of the house, evidently is fond of detective stories, having called for "The Clique of Gold" and several of Gaboriau's works.

It would appear from circumstantial evidence that nearly every member of both houses of congress and most of the learned judges of the supreme court are confirmed readers of juvenile literature, but such is really not the case. The pages and messengers are the ones who read this class of books. They get a new story or number to sign an order and then fill it out for the book they want



STUDY OF THE NEGRO AS SLAVE AND FREEMAN

AN important investigation of the negro in slavery and freedom is now being made by the department of economics and sociology of the Carnegie institution of Washington, which was founded by Andrew Carnegie. This investigation will be of great importance to the negro as well as the white race, as it will show what the negro has done and what he is capable of doing. The work is being conducted by Alfred Holt Stone, an educated business man from Mississippi, who is a thorough, impartial and candid student of the economic development growing out of negro slavery and the work of the negro under conditions of freedom.

Mr. Stone has outlined a treatment, which is reasonably exhaustive, relating to the economic life of the American negro, without trespassing on either the political or social aspects of the topics. He recognizes the difficulty of treating the one as separated from the other two topics, but the desirability of such a method is believed to more than outweigh the difficulties involved in its execution.

This investigation will ha compre hensive in its scope, and it will be at least a year before such progress has been made as will justify a report on this important subject.

SCULPTOR'S WORK OF 15 YEARS IS REJECTED

ALTHOUGH nearly 19 years have elapsed since the project for a statue to Gen. Philip H. Sheridan in the national capital was proposed by the Army of the Cumberland, the statue is as far away as ever. The statue committee has rejected the work of J. Q. A. Ward, canceled its contract with him and will begin all over again.

This action was taken by the committee some time ago, but did not become public until recently. Mr. Ward has been at work on the statue for nearly 15 of the 19 years, and has made models, none of which has been approved by both the artist and the committee. A similar fact about it is that he did make one model which satisfied the committee and was approved by them, but Mr. Ward himself did not consider it good and destroyed it.

Meanwhile the statues of Hancock and Logan, provided for in 1891, are standing here in public squares. Both were completed years ago. Sheridan died in 1888. In 1889 congress authorized a statue, appropriated $40,000 and created a commission to take charge. In March, 1891, congress made a further appropriation of $10,000 for the statue, making the total $50,000. The Army of the Cumberland raised about $8,000. In April, 1892, the commission contracted with Mr. Ward to make the statue for $30,000, making an advance payment of $2,500.

Two of Mr. Ward's statues already ornament the city. They are those of Garfield and Thomas and are generally regarded as among the finest of the many statues of the nation's heroes in the capital city.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

MADE FORTUNE IN STOCK CRASH

According to the most authentic accounts, J. Breckf. Walker, formerly of Chicago, made more than $2,500,000 in the recent disastrous stock slump in Wall street. Mr. Walker, who formerly was in the brokerage business in Chicago, has been in business in New York six years, living in Lakewood, N. J.

Many conservative ones who predicted ten years ago that Walker would wind up in a pauper's grave because of his recklessness, expressed surprise at his success. He is said to have been so unsuccessful at Chicago that his father, former Judge Edwin Walker, refused to furnish him money with which to speculate.

Walker had fitted up an apartment at a Lakewood hotel before he began his fortunate campaign. With him was J. J. Townsend, a Chicago broker, who assisted him in executing orders. Two telegraph operators were kept busy giving orders to the operators and answering the six telephones in the clothes closet that served for a telephone booth.

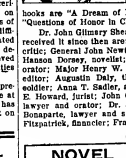
Mr. Walker possesses a phenomenal memory. He carried on all the details of his bear campaign without the assistence of a secretary, bookkeeper or clerk. He carried all his details in his memory and never took the trouble to note down his orders. One Wednesday, when his transactions amounted to more than 200,000 shares, he made a single memorendum. He was doing business with 22 firms in New York city and ahroad, handling many stocks at the same time.

Single-handed Walker battled against at least a dozen powerful cliques. Next to his wonderful memory, coolness and self-control are his strong characteristics. While hundreds of thousands of dollars were pouring into his lap he appeared to be not a bit more concerned than if he were being meaeured for a suit of clothes.

WILL HANDLE BIG SAGE FUND

Robert Weeks De Forest, chairman of the board of trustees which will disburse the $10,000,000 Sage fund which she has established to cure ignorance, poverty and vice in the United States, is a New York attorney noted for his many good works in behalf of humanity.

The "Sage Foundation," Mr. De Forest explains, will be a sort of clearing house for future charities to be promoted by Mrs. Sage and others. He says:

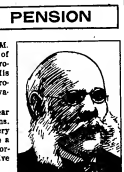


"It will be used for the general improvement of the social and living conditions in the United States and will include necessary research, publication, exhibits, the establishment and maintenance of charitable and beneficial agencies and the aiding of such establishments as already may be organized.

"We will in no way conflict with the several funds now in operation, such as Rockefeller, Carnegia and Phipps foundations, representing a totel of $23,000,000."

Only the income of the $10,000,000 is to be used and Mr. De Forest estimates that this will amount to $450,000 a year.

Mr. De Forest has been president of the Charity Organization society of New York since 1888. He was the founder and first president of the Provident Loan society, the first philanthropic pawn-brokery. He was made chairman of the Tenement House commission of the state of New York in 1890. He is a manager of the Presbyterian hospital in New York. He was made first Tenement House commissioner of the city of New York in 1891.



NOTED WOMAN HONORED

Miss Katherine Eleanor Conway, editor of the Boston Pilot and poet and essayist of note, who was awarded the Laetare medal for distinguished service in the cause of the Roman Catholic church by the University of Notre Dame, was born in Rochester, New York. She was educated in the schools of the Sisters of Charity and of the Religious Sisters of the Sacred Heart, and graduated with high honors from St. Mary's academy, Buffalo. While still a girl she published her first poem, and was in her teens when she began work on a Rochester paper. In 1876 she became a member of the staff of the Buffalo Catholic Union and Times, and in 1880 its assistant editor. Her first published volume was "Christian Symbols and Stories of Saints." Among her other books are "A Dream of Lilies," "Making Friends and Keeping Them," and "Questions of Honor in Christian Life."

Dr. John Gilmary Shea received the first medal in 1883. Others who have received it since then are: Patrick J. Keely, architect; Eliza Allen Starr, art critic; General John Newton, civil engineer; Patrick W. Hickey, editor; Anna Hanson Dorsey, novelist; William J. Onahan, publicist; Daniel Dougherty, orator; Major Henry W. F. Bronson, soldier and scholar; Patrick Donehue, editor; Augustin Daly, theatrical manager; General William S. Rosecrans, soldier; Anna T. Sadlier, author; Dr. Thomas A. Emmett, physician; Timothy E. Howard, jurist; John Creighton, philanthropist; William Bourke Cockran, lawyer and orator; Dr. John Benjamin Murphy, surgeon; Charles Jerome Bonaparte, lawyer and statesman; Richard C. Kearens, jurist; Thomas E. Fitzpatrick, financier; Francis J. Quinlan, surgeon.

NOVEL OLD AGE PENSION

Sir Richard John Cartwright, M. P., K. C. M. G., P. C., has attracted the serious attention of Canada's leading thinkers and politicians by advocating an old age annuity in the Dominion. His remarkable proposition was listened to with profound respect and consideration by the house of the upper house of parliament in Ottawa.

At the very outset Sir Richard made it clear that he was not at all in favor of old age pensions. There was no excuse for it in Canada where every wage earner had it within his power to acquire a competence for his old age if given a fair opportunity. What was now proposed was to give every man this opportunity.

Sir Richard Cartwright declared that he had given the matter careful consideration for several years and was convinced that the Dominion could, at little or no expense, afford every wage earner in the country the chance of obtaining at a reasonable cost an annuity guaranteed by the state for his old age. He said that to make such a scheme a success three things were necessary:

It must be absolutely safe, necessitating government backing. There must be absolute freedom from forfeiture. There must be no possibility of anticipating the benefits.

Sir Richard computes that a payment of half a day's wages a week will give the average man an annuity of $300 a year from the age of 65 until death.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

SAGE FUND TO BE USED IN FIGHT ON POVERTY

NEW YORK.—It is announced by one of the group of men who will have much to do with expenditure of the income of the $10,000,000 fund Mrs. Russell Sage has given to charity that the money will be spent largely in a practical struggle with poverty. The purpose is to improve the "social and living conditions" and high-browed visionaries need not apply. In speaking of Mrs. Sage's purpose, this authority said:

"We used to think poverty arose largely from defects of character. Now we know it may arise from vastly different causes and that an upright, average citizen may find himself 'up against it.' He needs a boost.

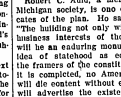
"Here is a poor scrubwoman, middle-aged. She makes five or six dollars a week. She has a lawyer of us unless I grave. She takes out some insurance the real purpose of which is to provide a decent burial for her. It is a good thing. But why should this woman ha compelled to pey euch a sum as will allow the company, taking all the other patrons together, to put up a magnificent $15,000,000 building and pay big salaries, dividends and all that? The Sage foundation trustees could, if they choose, give insurance at a reasonable cost.

"Again, here is a decent young fellow, say 25 years old, with a wife and children. He develops tuberculosis. The trustee of the Sage foundation, under their charter, would send that man away and take care of his family until he got well.

"Still another field of activity that might be found is seeing that the poor get as much for their money as the rich do for theirs. Take the man who buys his coal by the pail. Every one knows he pays twice as much for it as the men who buys by the ton. The trustees of the Sage foundation might decide to establish coal yards where coal by the pail could be purchased as cheaply as by the ton. Many other ways of practical charity stand open to the trustees."

SUBWAYS MEAN A SAVING OF MILLIONS TO WORKERS

NEW YORK wage-earners will save $25,000,000 a year by means of the rapid transit subways which are to be opened next summer.



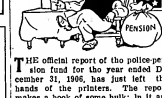
This total represents only by saving in rent, carfere and time. They will eave much more in the matter of health and in general peace of mind.

But such savings cannot he reduced to a cash basis, although they will represent a large cash gain in the decrease of doctors' bills, drug bills and other expenses which accompany congested residential conditions in Manhattan.

Another item of saving might ha calculated from the reduction of social extravagances when there is a wider distribution of Manhattan's population throughout suburban districts. And still another gain will come from the increased business which can be transacted by quicker communication between all parts of the metropolis. Thousands of persons will be able to do more business in the same time. They will make more money. Then money will circulate more rapidly and general business will be stimulated.

The $25,000,000 which will be saved each year in carfare, rent and time is a definite quantity. It will be divided among the persons who readjust their residential surroundings to the new transit conditions. It will affect 700,000 people directly, because they will travel over the new express lines every day. It will affect 1,700,000 indirectly, because they are dependent on the first 700,000. The total number of persons affected will be 2,400,000.

New Jersey will get the largest benefits from this year's new tunnels, because the suburban sections in that quarter of the rapid transit zone are more advanced than those in northern and eastern sections.



STATE SOCIETIES PLAN PERMANENT FAIR HERE

A PERMANENT national fair to contain exhibits from every state in the union and to be housed in a $14,000,000 building in this city is planned by some of the state societies having headquartere here. The project contemplates a continuous exposition, including the best features of world's fairs of the past and luxurious clubrooms for the state societies.

Congress will be asked at its next session to appropriate $5,000,000 toward this enterprise, and each of the state legislatures will be asked for $200,000. The leaders in the movement, which began with the Michigan society, say they have been assured of support by many members of congress and by several state legislators, and believe they can carry it through.

Robert C. Auld, a member of the Michigan society, is one of the advocates of the plan. He said recently: "The building not only will serve the business interests of the state, but will be an enduring monument to the idea of statehood as conceived by the framers of the constitution. Once it is completed, no American citizen will die content without seeing it. It will advertise the existence of our commonwealth, too often forgotten beyond the metropolitan limit."

THE official report of the police-pension fund for the year ended December 31, 1906, has just been put into the hands of the printers. The report makes a book of some bulk; in it are presented the total receipts and expenditures in detail for the year.

There are a few names in the long list which once were a power in the city's affairs, not only as to police matters, but in other directions as well. There is Thomas Byrnes, one time chief, who retired from the force when Roosevelt was commissioner, and who is credited with being possessed of a large fortune which he accumulated in Wall street, where he was piloted to success by the late Jay Gould and other magnates of the street in those days.

Another old-timer, long since forgotten by the public, which once he "ruled" from No. 300 Mulberry street, is William Murray, also said to be beyond the reach of the gnaid and hungry wolf, which he was able to shoo so far from his bungalow that, unlike the ex-chief of the guard and his pension fund's contribution to his exchequer in the same at Byrnes—The other of the list of $2,000 pensioners is John McCullagh. McCullagh, while never such a leave in police affairs, so far as notoriety goes, was counted a tiptop man, and one of whom the department has no reason to he ashamed. These three—Byrnes, Murray and McCullegh—draw the highest pensions paid out of tha fund, tha total disbursements of which were $1,400,242.10, a great sum for even this rich municipality in disburse in charity, if such it may be called.

FORTUNES ARE PAID OUT IN PENSIONS TO POLICE

ATTEMPT TO RESCUE "BOSS" RUEF FEARED

EVERY MAN OPENLY IDENTIFIED WITH PROSECUTION GOES ARMED.

"Gun Play" Is Expected—Guards Ordered to Shoot Prisoner First If Liberation Is Tried — Spreckels Willingly Paying for Probe.

San Francisco, March 30.—Since the capture and arrest of Abraham Ruef at the Trocadero, a month ago, rumors have been rife that an attempt would be made to rescue him by force from Ellsor Biggy and his guards, either during a session of court or while Ruef was being taken to or from court from his prison chamber in the St. Francis hotel.

An officer prominent in the bribery graft investigation was asked Friday if it is not true that every person identified with the prosecution is going armed and was questioned about the significance of this. He said:

"Though I think the matter should not be exploited, it is a fact that every man openly identified with the prosecution of the bribery charges and grafters is 'going heeled' and that some of the more prominent of them are employing body guards. Though it may sound sensational to those not familiar with the local situation, it is a fact that for a month we have been keeping a special lookout for an attempted rescue of Ruef, and we shall be happily surprised if these investigations and impending prosecutions end without gun play.

Started Several Times.

"Several times when Ruef has been in Judge Dunne's court on one or other of the preliminaries that precede a trial a sudden movement toward the prisoner of men, some of whom we know to be reckless of personal consequences, has been checked quickly and quietly by the interposition of officers and deputies in the employment of the prosecution.

"We know that should Ruef be rescued—a seemingly impossible feat—it would not be a difficult thing to take him so securely right here in San Francisco, that to find him again would be practically an impossibility. The prosecution knows this, the elisor knows it, and neither is taking any chances.

Told to Shoot Ruef First.

"It is stating a literal fact to say that each of Biggy's seven guards is instructed, in the event of a serious attempt at rescue by force, either in court or elsewhere, to shoot Ruef and turn their attention to his would-be liberators afterward. Ruef has been acquainted with these orders. As he is not the type of a man to consent to any plan of escaping through force, it is only his rough and reckless friends on the outside who would attempt to devise such a coup. Ruef might try to regain his liberty by strategy, but not otherwise."

Spreckels Paying Willingly.

Rudolph Spreckels, who by packing the prosecution in the graft investigation with his fortune made the present investigation possible, gave out a statement Friday, in which he said:

"Contributions from citizens to the fund of $100,000 guaranteed by me before the commencement of the bribery graft investigation are coming in steadily, though slowly. They are in amounts ranging from $20 to $1,000 and more."

"In the event that the ultimate total of subscriptions falls short of the $100,000 guaranteed, you will make the deficit good?" Mr. Spreckels was asked.

He replied: "I certainly will, and if it costs more than $100,000 to complete this prosecution, that will make no difference. Those engaged in its furtherance will never be hampered by lack of funds, no matter what the bill may be.

Hope to Get High Officials.

"The work of investigation will not be suspended until every bit of retentiveness has been fully exposed. We fully expect to land behind the bars of the penitentiary every giver of bribes and the 'higher up' the offender the more vigorous will be his punishment.

"We do not, however, expect to send every bribe-taker to prison. Some of the miserable men who sold themselves to the corporations must be granted immunity in return for their testimony, which is worth a great deal more to us as evidence of the guilt of high corporation officials than their own incarceration would be."

In conclusion Mr. Spreckles said: "Every department of the city and county government will be thoroughly examined into before the investigation is completed, the police department along with the others. No one will be neglected, so act of officials will be overlooked."

BREWERY WORKERS GO OUT.

St. Louis Beer Makers Strike for increased Wages.

St. Louis, March 30.—In an effort to enforce demands for increased wages made by members of the United Brewery Workers' union, about $50 brewery workers walked out of the 23 breweries in St. Louis Friday.

In East St. Louis, Ill., 40 brewers in the two breweries walked out when the St. Louis strike was declared. The strikers are members of the St. Louis Brewers' union. None of the other classes of labor in either of the two breweries is affected.

HILL STOCK ISSUE VALID

GREAT NORTHERN'S $60,000,000 INCREASE IS UPHELD.

Minnesota Supreme Court Reverses Lower Tribunal—No Need to Consult Railway Commission.

St. Paul, Minn., March 29.—The state supreme court Thursday upheld the Great Northern railroad in its contention that it had the right to issue $60,000,000 additional stock which was authorized by the board of directors several months ago. The issue was enjoined through the intervention of Attorney General Young, who held that the railroad company should first go before the state railroad and warehouse commission and submit to an examination to show the necessity of the issue. The contention of the state was upheld by Judge Hallam in the Ramsey county district court, and he ordered an injunction to issue. The supreme court reverses that decision.

The opinion of the court was unanimous. Chief Justice Start delivered the opinion, the syllabus of which follows:

1. The terms and conditions upon which corporations may be created, the powers and capital stock they may have, and the purposes for which they may increase their capital stock and the conditions and limitations thereof are exclusively matter for legislative action which cannot be delegated.

2. The state having created railway corporations for public purposes, the legislature has the right to enact statutes regulating the increase of their capital stock. Such regulations tend to prevent secrecy of operation and accounts by such public agencies and the issue and sale of fictitious or watered stock, which is a felony in this state.

3. In the exercise of this right the legislature may enact a statute providing generally for what purposes existence of facts that bring the case within the statute, to allow the proposed increase or otherwise to refuse it.

5. Any statute, however, which attempts to authorize the commission in its judgment to allow an increase of capital stock for such purposes and on such terms as it may deem advisable, or in its discretion to refuse it would be unconstitutional, as an attempt to delegate legislative power.

6. Section 2372, R. L. 1905, relating to the increase of capital stock of railway companies, does not violate article 1, section 11, of the state constitution, or article 1, section 10, of the constitution of the United States, which forbid the enactment of any law impairing the obligation of contracts. It does, however, violate section 1, article 3, of the state constitution in that it delegates to the commission legislative power. Order reversed.

MAY AVERT RAIL STRIKE.

Knapp and Neill Start for Chicago to Try Mediation.

Washington, March 29.—Chairman Martin A. Knapp of the interstate commerce commission and Charles P. Neill, commissioner of labor, will leave this evening for Chicago, where they will hold a conference with representatives of conductors and trainmen and officials of western railroads entering Chicago in regard to the dispute over the question of wages which threatens the result in a disastrous strike unless a satisfactory adjustment is effected.

Chairman Knapp said that the visit of himself and Mr. Neill will be simply in the direction of mediation and conciliation. The request that these efforts at mediation and conciliation came from the railroads.

ASYLUM FOR JENNIE BURGH.

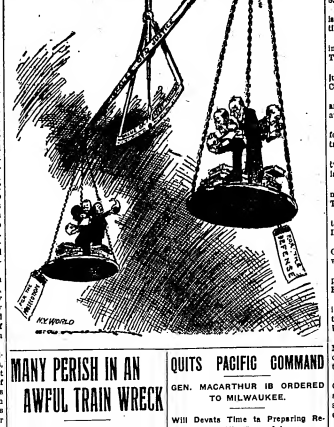
GREAT FIRE IN VIRGINIA.



Tobacco Factories Burned in South Boston—Loss, $1,000,000.

Danville, Va., March 29.—A disastrous fire broke out in South Boston, Va., 21 miles northeast of here, late Thursday afternoon, and destroyed tobacco factories and other buildings, threatened the destruction of the entire town and entailed a loss estimated as high as $1,000,000.

Nephew of Gen. Lee Dead.

Colorado Springs, Col., March 29.—Hamlin P. Lee, a veteran of the Mexican and civil wars and a nephew of Gen. Robert E. Lee, died here of heart failure, aged 87 years. Although closely related to the southern general, and a Virginian by birth, Mr. Lee fought with the union army. In the late 70's Mr. Lee went to Leadville and was the discoverer of the famous Robert E. Lee mine.

EXPERT TESTIMONY.

MANY PERISH IN AN AWFUL TRAIN WRECK

SOUTHERN PACIFIC OVERLAND STRIKES OPEN SWITCH NEAR COLTON, CAL.

Twenty-six Are Dead—Muncie, Ind., Man One of the Victims—Others Mostly Italians—One Hundred Injured, Some Fatally.

Colton, Cal., March 29.—A disastrous wreck on the Southern Pacific occurred one and one-half miles east of this town Thursday afternoon, when the west bound Sunset express from New Orleans for San Francisco ran into an open switch while going at the rate of 40 miles an hour, and ten of the 14 coaches were derailed with frightful results. Twenty-six people are known to have been killed, and the final list probably will total much higher than that number. The injured number about 100, many of whom are seriously hurt and may die.

The wrecked coaches were hurled in every direction. Four of them were smashed into splinters. Most of the dead were Italians from New York and New Orleans, going to San Francisco. They occupied the smoker and day coach.

Two Americans Killed.

But two Americans are known in have been killed, although several of those among the injured will probably die within a few hours.

George L. Sharpe, of Muncie, Ind., was instantly killed. The baggageman of the train, whose name has not been ascertained, was also killed. Engineer Clarence S. Wormington end Fireman Victor Crebb both jumped, but failed to get clear, and were caught in the wreckage. They were terribly burned and scalded. John Golden, the train conductor, was in the Pullman section of the train and escaped injury.

The derailment of the train was caused by the crew of a switch engine leaving a switch open. It is said that the engine passed through the switch a few minutes before the Overland appeared. A switchman named Morrison was in the yard. After the switch engine had passed on to another track the engineer asked the fireman if he had re-thrown the switch. The fireman recalled that he had neglected to do so, and the engineer whistled frantically for Morrison to close it. The signal was not given in time, as Morrison did not reach the switch before the Overland had plunged through and been derailed.

SPAIN MAY HAVE HEIR SOON.

King Alfonso Advised to Curtail Visit to Cartagena.

Madrid, March 30.—The physician who are in attendance upon Queen Victoria have reason to believe that she may be confined sooner than has been anticipated, and it has been recommended that King Alfonso curtail his visit to Cartagena.

All the preparations for the advent of the new member of the Spanish royal family have been completed. A nurse has been brought out from England.

Old Warship Marion to Be Sold.

Washington, March 30.—The warship Marion, one of the last of the old iron ships of the navy, built just after the close of the civil war and bridging over the time between the timber ships and the vessels of the modern navy, has been ordered to be sold at public auction and stricken from the naval lists.

Arrested for Embezzlement.

Lynn, Mass., March 30.—William O. Hadley, former manager and treasurer of the Hadley Cement company, was arrested here Friday afternoon on a charge of embezzlement of $2,200 from the company. He was later released on bail.

QUITS PACIFIC COMMAND

GEN. MACARTHUR IB ORDERED TO MILWAUKEE.

Will Devote Time to Preparing Report an His Tour of Inspection in the Orient.

Washington, March 30.—Lieut. Gen. Arthur MacArthur has been relieved from the command of the Pacific division and ordered to Milwaukee, Wis. This action was taken at the request of Gen. MacArthur who has found it impossible while discharging the manifold duties of commander-in-chief of the important military division with headquarters at San Francisco, to carry out his scheme of completing the elaborate report he was charged to make by this war department upon the results of his long trip of inspection in the orient. It is probable that the completion of this task will consume all of the remaining years of Gen. MacArthur's active service. His successor in command of the Pacific division has not yet been named and it is probable that in view of the approaching abolition of the military division plan and the return to the old system af department command no designation will be made at present.

Gen. MacArthur has been stationed at San Francisco for the last four years. He went there as commander at the department of California; two years later he was made commander of the Pacific division.

ROUMANIA QUIETING DOWN.

Disorders Are Decreasing, But Many Are Leaving Country.

Bucharest, March 30.—The situation in Roumania appears to be quieting down, but large numbers of refugees still continue to make their way out of the troubled districts.

An official report issued Friday relates that all is quiet in Moldavia, the only fresh disturbance recorded being in the Trotush valley, in the Neamtz district, whither troops have been dispatched. The agitation in the districts of Oil, Romeo, Mehedintz and Teleorman has become somewhat threatening, but the situation in the Dolj, Buzer and Ramnio districts has improved. No further disturbances have been reported from the districts of Braila, Argesh, Gorj or elsewhere.

The governments of Anatria and Bulgaria have sent steamers to various Roumanian ports on the Danube to convey their respective subjects to neutral territory, and Roumanian escaping from the disordered area also are availing themselves of these vessels. The refugees crossing the Danube into Bulgaria are for the most part Greeks and Jews.

TONIC FOR MOTHERS

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Are Safe and Reliable—A Favorite Household Remedy.

Motherhood may be the crowning blessing of a woman's life or it may bring grief and sorrow. Mrs. M. J. Wight, of 170 Seventh Street, Auburn, Maine, relates her experience after the birth of her daughter in 1901, as follows: "I was all run down at the time the baby came and did not impove in health rapidly after. I was pale, thin and bloodless. My stomach distressed me being full of gas all the time and my heart fluttered so that I could scarcely breathe.

"Finally I remembered that a friend had recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to me so I commanced using them. I gained in strength rapidly while the baby throve also. When I expected my next child I started taking the pills again as a tonic and strengthener and had no such difficulty as before. I got up better and my strength came back much sooner.

"A year ago last winter I had an attack of rheumatism in the hips which went from one hand to the other. The joints swelled up and were so stiff I could not move them. The pain extended up through my arms and shoulders. I felt sick enough to go to bed but did not do so. This attack lasted far several months, I tried several remedies but finally came back to using the pills which had done me so much good before and found that they benefited me almost at once. I have not been troubled since."

All druggists sell Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, or they will be sent by mail post-paid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectndy, N. Y. Send for book of cures.

Best Violin Strings.

The best strings for violins are of Italian maks and are from the intestines of spring lambs, killed in September. The process of drying and bleaching of the woods and strings by the hot Italian sun, rather than by any artificial heat used in other countries, accounts in a great measura for the superior quality of both materials. This intense heat is also the reason for the slow distillation of the oils used by the Italian makers, which also remained at a high temperature, and the varnish, slowly soaking into the woods of the violins beneath the heat of those Italian summers, praduced, in part, the mellowness of tons that gives to a Cremona instrument its value, often a price of 200 or more years.—March Circle.

Home af the Icebergs.

Almost all the icebergs seen in the north Atlantic during June are supposed to be of the coast of Labrador, formed from the ice fields that had filled the indentations of that coast during the previous winter, and the icebergs come from further north in the vicinity of Baffin Land, those of August coma from still further north, and though fewer in number than those of the earlier months are larger in individuality. From the coast of Labradar may be seen an endless procession af these huge mountains crafts of the north and taking their way majestically southward until they loss identity in the warmth and climate of the south Atlantic.—Maine Journal.

Tantalizing Man.

"I see by the paper," said Mrs. Dilks at the breakfast table, "that a delegation af women suffragettes is coming to this country."

Mr. Dilks made no reply.

"And they're going to invade Washington and make a speech to the president, and all."

Dilaks still silent.

"I declare," snapped the lady, "You're the most tantalizing man in existence. There you sit like a statue, never saying a word to ehaw that you don't know what you're talking about."

Keep your feers to yourself, but shars your courgas with athars.—Stevens.

A FRIENDLY GROCER.

Dropped a Valuable Hint About Coffee.

"For ahout eight years," writes a Mich. woman, "I suffered from nervousness until I was driven down in bed with nervous prastration.

"Sometimes I would get numb and it would be almost impossible for me to speak for a spell. At others, I would have severs bilious attacks, and my stomach was so distarbed that when I would walk fast or sweep.

"I have taken enough medicine to stock a drug store, but got little or no benefit. One eveoing-our grocar was asking husband how I was and he urged me to quit coffee and use Postum, so he brought homo a pkg. and I made it according to directions and it was very good and I commenced to take on fresh and become interested in everything about the house.

"Finally I was able to do all my own work without the least sign of my old trouble. I am so thankful for the little book, 'The Road to Wellville.' It has done me so much good. I haven't taken medicine of any kind for six months and don't need any.

"A friend of ours who did not like Postum as she made it, liked mine, and when she learned to boil it long enough, her's was as good as mine. It's easy if you follow directions." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Farmers Dig for Gold.

Winona—Gold has been discovered in this county, within a few miles of St. Charles. The ore was found on the Gainey farm, and it is said that there is a tract of fifteen acres in which pay dirt is plentiful.

The farm belongs to the family of Deputy Boiler Inspector Gainey. The first ore was discovered some time ago, and while the family was convinced that there was gold present in considerable quantities, before announcement of the find was made samples of the ore were sent away for assay. The result, which has just been received, shows that the metal runs in good pay quantities.

The first investigation indicated that a tract of about seven acres contained the pay dirt, but with further prospecting it developed that there is good ore to be found in fifteen acres. Those interested are prepared to carry on development work on a large scale and will soon have arrangements to that end completed.

The find of course has caused practically all the farmers in that section, and they have left the more peaceful pursuit of agriculture and have turned prospectors. Spring work is being neglected while they dig holes in their farms in the hope of finding fortunes.

Beaten and Robbed.

Ada—William Nichols was attacked and badly beaten by three holdups who secured $5, but overlooked a roll of $215 which Nichols had in an inside pocket. Nichols was on his home from work when three masks with masked faces suddenly confronted him and demanded his money. The holdup men did not produce revolvers and as Nichols had a weapon he drew it and opened fire. The bandits fired no fight and Nichols emptied his revolver after them, but without effect. The first time over the head Nichols with it until he was insensible. When searched the robbers did not find what loose change he had, but apparently were frightened away before they discovered the other money. Nichols thinks he can identify the assailants.

Explosion Burns Two.

Hibbing—Daniel Previck and Thomas Ryan were seriously burned in two explosions of gasoline stored at the Previck clothing works. Previck was severely burned about the face and hands and probably will not recover. He was working on a steam shovel and had a can on a pile of brush to build a fire under. Taking a can of gasoline he poured a large quantity of the fluid on the can and set fire to it. He then containing the gasoline was ignited, and the burning stuff scattered over Previck's face and hands. Ryan, who is a blacksmith's fireman, was filling a lamp from a gasoline can and at the same time smoking his pipe. A spark from the pipe exploded the can and he was severely burned about the face and hands, but will recover.

Train Kills Team.

Mankato—Ed. Klitzke, a well-known farmer of Penn township, near Winnebago City, narrow escape from instant death. He drove to town in the morning, attended to some business and in the evening started for a load of wood for the church in Penn township. When three miles out of town he began to cross the railroad track at a crossing, when a special freight train struck and killed them, hurling them 150 feet or more. The accident happened at 11 o'clock at night. Klitzke was unhurt, having escaped death by a couple of seconds.

Laboratory Not Ready.

St. Paul—It is feared that the chemical laboratory established by the state in connection with the department of agriculture in this part of the country will not be ready by May 1. It was announced some days ago that a laboratory would be established in the Twin Cities, but as yet no capital has been set apart for its use. There was difficulty, however, in securing available to manage such a laboratory and, so far as local authorities know, little has been done toward setting up the apparatus.

Fire Exposes a Fraud.

Cloquet—The Great Northern station at Swan River was burned recently, the fire exposing an interesting fraud. Some years ago, the entire town, the body of a supposed petrified Indian woman was dug up near Cass Lake. It was shipped to Swan River and never called for. Charges accumulated and the express company stored it in the Swan River station. After the recent fire nothing remained of the "corpse" but some cement and the iron in the frame.

Fat Stock Show.

St. Paul—South St. Paul will have a fat stock show this year, probably late in the fall or early winter. The South St. Paul live stock exchange at a meeting decided favorably upon the report of a committee which has been investigating the subject for some time. The show will take place late in the fall, so as not to conflict with the state fair, but the date has not been decided. A committee was appointed to make arrangements for the exhibition.

Missed Shot is Fatal.

Virginia—A missed shot was responsible for the death of John Kasilka and the injuries of Werner Kuusela, employed in the Larkin mine near here. The men were about to leave the pit for the day and had lighted fuses in three holes. Two of the charges exploded and the men rushed back to see what was wrong with the third.

They reached the spot just as the dynamite exploded. Kosilka's body was blown to pieces, Kuusela had an open knife in his hand and the force of the explosion drove the blade into his side. He was seriously hurt, but will recover.

The State Fair.

St. Paul—Important action of much interest to the farmers of Minnesota was taken by the Minnesota State Fair management recently, when it was decided to materially increase the amount of premium money offered to county exhibits and to individual exhibits of farm products.

The total of $2,000 heretofore offered for county exhibits has been increased to $2,600, and the state has been divided into two divisions so that hereafter the newer northern counties will not have to compete with the old southern communities. The counties of Chisago, Anoka, Wright, Meeker, Kandiyohi, Chippewa, and Lac qui Parle, and the counties north of them, will constitute the Northern division, and the counties south of this row, excepting Hennepin and Ramsey, which are barred from competition, will be the Southern Division.

Further, the money will be divided after a new plan. The sum of $1,250 is set aside for each division, and this will be divided into five premiums: $200 for first; $275, second; $250, third; $225, fourth, and $200, fifth. Two more premiums of $50 each will go to the most beautiful display and the best arranged exhibit; the entire ten exhibits being considered in this competition.

A somewhat similar plan has been adopted in the distribution of premium money for several sweepstakes and collections classes in the form and grain divisions of the premium list. In the "collection of threshed grains," the "best exhibit of small grains," the "collection of corn husked and in stalk," and the "farm exhibits," instead of offering $100 to be divided pro rata, each exhibitor whose display scores 75 points or more will receive $15, while the four highest will receive $8, $6, $4 and $2, respectively.

The object of this change is to encourage numerous exhibits. Under the pro rata division of $100 it has been found that when many exhibitors are present the amount received by each is so small as to discourage further exhibition. Under the new plan each exhibitor who makes a really good exhibit will receive $16, while the best four will be given additional money as well as ribbons.

In corn the premiums have been nearly doubled. Instead of first, second and third of $3, $2 and $1, there are four premiums for each lot—$5, $3, $2 and $1. Other changes made throughout the division of agriculture have been made with a view to betterment.

These changes are due to the recommendations and arguments presented forward by J. M. Underwood, of Lake City, superintendent of the division, who is earnestly desirous of improving the farm displays at the state fair. Mr. Underwood and the board of managers feel that Previck's face and hands. Ryan, who is a blacksmith's fireman, was filling a lamp from a gasoline can and at the same time smoking his pipe. A spark from the pipe exploded the can and he was severely burned about the face and hands, but will recover.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, March 28—Reductions in passenger and freight rates which will aggregate $4,000,000 a year, are offered by the railroads to the legislature for a settlement to all pending difficulties, not only in the way of contested and pending bills, but in the settlement of the cases now pending in the courts which promised to be dragged out through several years of litigation. Both branches of the legislature have passed two-cent passenger fare bills. These bills are in conference committees of which L. O. Lommen is chairman for the house delegation, F. H. Peterson chairman for the senate. The overtures of settlement and virtual surrender have come to this committee. The conference committee told the roads the committee had no jurisdiction to accept or even negotiate a settlement but would submit the proposition to the legislature. Accordingly, a resolution has been passed by the house, and is now pending in the senate, to permit the conference committee to negotiate with the roads, and report to the legislature not later than April 2. The settlement offer of the roads is a grant of nearly all demands on the part of the state. In brief, the document which the attorneys of the various lines are now preparing, may be summarized into the following points; a maximum rate of 2½ cents, with family mileage books at 2 cents, good until used, and unused portion redeemable in cash. Interchangable 2,000 mile books at 2 cents, good until used. All round-trip tickets at 2 cents, return coupon to be good at any time and without restriction. Voluntary reduction in existing commodity rates by the railroads, amounting to two-thirds of the sweeping reductions recently ordered by the railroad commission. Roads will dismiss injunction suits pending in the United States court. The roads will recognize the power and authority in future of the state railroad commission in making rates. There will be no withdrawal of special excursion rates.

The house committee as a whole, has recommended two important bills for passage after lengthy debate; the first one for the creation of agricultural industrial schools to be established at central points for the benefit of each of the state. Speaker Lawrence Johnson today left the chair to conduct the campaign on the floor for the bill and finally carried his point. The second important bill, is the so-called Mueller bill, because it follows the law of Illinois, to permit municipalities to absorb public service corporations, street cars, gas and electric plants.

St. Paul, March 27—After six hours of acrimonious argument and voting, the senate this evening by one vote killed the famous Hackney semi-centennial appropriation. During all this time the fate of the bill was never certain for an instant, in fact not until the very last man had cast his ballot on the final roll-call, making the vote 30 for and 31 against the bill, and the Wright county senator's explanation of his vote by saying: "Gentlemen, I know that the vote I am about to cast will defeat the appropriation of $1,000,000 for a semi-centennial exposition in 1918. But I am not what I believe are the desires in this matter of the people I represent, and I vote 'no' on this bill.

Then the air castles of the big show planned for the state fair grounds in the friendly city of Hackney, half-formed plans for making not only the eyes of this country but the world turn all turn to Minnesota in 1908 were obliterated. It was 7 o'clock in the evening. The senate had been sitting on the proposition all morning and all afternoon and had refused to adjourn for supper till the question matter was disposed of. There was a burst of applause from the opponents of the bill, while others of the day had admitted their own defeat. Then came adjournment and enemies and opponents of the bill, but one and all friends of its author, J. M. Hackney, crowded around him to express their good will toward him and to congratulate him on the noble, straight-forward and over gentlemanly campaign and fight he had made to put up in the interests of the bill for a big exposition in the inter-city district which he is representing for his first term.

With the exception of one hour on the day, the entire time was put on the exposition bill in the senate. But in that one hour, the W. A. Nolan reciprocal denominage bill of the house was taken up and passed by a vote of 51 to 9. There was not an attempt made to even amend the bill, though it was criticised severely in addresses by Senators George R. Layborn of Duluth and J. C. Ames of Minneapolis.

The house today passed the agricultural school bill, the measure for which the speaker has worked unstintingly and a number of changes have not been a single horse stolen in Olmsted county. Of the sixty-one cheater members thirty have died or moved away.

Willmar, Madison, Marshall, Morris, Clayton, and Wadena. There is prospect that when the bill reaches the senate the number of agricultural schools will be decreased.

A number of bills were introduced in the house. One interesting measure is a rather uninteresting bill, by J. S. Gates of Kenyon. It provides for a mercantile tax on all persons in goods and merchandise, a license as it were. Retailers are to pay $2 a year plus 2 mills on each dollar of average volume of state business. Wholesalers are to pay $10, and 3 mills on the dollar of carriage.

The joint committee on local property taxation, has prepared a report opposing the proposed iron ore tonnage tax as unconstitutional, unwise, and a measure which would likely prevent the contemplated establishment of large steel plants in this state as is contemplated by the United tates Steel corporation.

St. Paul, March 28—The legislature has given its consent to listen to a proposition from the railroads for a compromise of all pending disagreements and suits between the public service commission and the state. This consent was granted today in the passage by the senate of the resolution adopted previously in the house, authorizing the 2-cent fare bill conference committee to receive the offer of the railroads, and submit it to the legislature.

The resolution did not pass the senate without a struggle. It was brought up by Senator F. H. Peterson of Moorhead who made a long plea for passage of the resolution without amendment; that by so-doing time would be saved and the railroads treated fairly. The most strenuous opposition to the resolution came from Senator Seward of Marshall who insisted no proposition should be listened to, but a straight 2-cent fare bill passed.

"It's a blackmail," said the member from Marshall with energy, "I came here to vote for a 2-cent fare bill, and so long as God, I am going to do it."

Olo O. Sageng of Otter Tail branded the resolution as "the worst kind of a proposition" and urged that it be adopt." Senator Moonan of Waseca offered an amendment to the resolution that would have declared that the legislature did not care to listen to any proposition that did not carry with it a straight 2 cent fare of a flat two cent passenger fare. This was voted down and the resolution adopted just as it came from the house, by a vote of 48 to 12.

A bill introduced in the house by T. J. Brady places a tax of 8 per cent on the gross receipts of life insurance companies. One by J. A. Gade provides that cities would establish a tax at the rate of 5 per cent. The house passed a number of bills on the calendar today. Among them were, the Hardy-Dunn senate bill establishing a state hospital for crippled children at St. Paul; the Carl bill of the house, providing a uniform method for the purchase of paper in all of the standard busbel; the C. W. Glotfelter measure prohibiting railroads from bringing animals into the state unless such animals were certified to be in healthy condition; the Wright senate bill to protect settlers soldiers of the Indian uprising in 1862.

Both house and senate adopted resolutions recognizing and eulogizing the valuable services of the members of the state capitol commission and thanking them in the name of the state.

The senate adjourned until 2 p. m Monday. The house is so far behind in its work it decided to only adjourn till the morrow.

St. Paul, March 29—The house not for a short session this morning. The attendance at the session was light, the probably because of its being Good Friday, and very little was done. After the reading of the journal of Wednesday the upper house having adjourned till Monday afternoon.

During the morning, the house passed three important railroad measures which were reported in last Thursday for passage. One by L. C. Spurrier, relating to rates and permits one member of the railroad commission to hold hearings and transact business in matters except those pertaining to the reasonableness of rates. The other by Senator by A. J. Backus of Zumbrota. One prohibits roads from abandoning any track or switch without permission of the railroad commission or the railroad commission. The other requires roads to file blue prints and detailed statement of estate of all new lines before such lines are put into operation.

A bill which will be appreciated in the large and unsettled counties especially, was passed. It was introduced by L. C. Spurrier of Ada, and permits the county treasurer to move about the county to such centers as may be decided, to collect the county taxes, and that the county pay pay his traveling expenses.

Commissioners of counties are given 4-year terms by a bill introduced by J. T. Lommen of Comstock. It provides that present county officers shall serve till 1911, permitting the treasurers and auditors thereafter to be elected alternately terms.

No More Horse Thieves.

St. Paul—The anti-Horse Thief Society of Olmsted County was disbanded last week. The society was organized in 1879 and was effective in putting an entire stop to the operations of bands of "rustlers," who had stolen numbers of horses in Olmsted county.

From the time of the organization of the society to the present there has

New Flax a Success.

St. Paul—The new variety of flax distributed by the Minnesota experiment station last spring has proven of great value to the state. About one thousand bushels of this flax was distributed to about 270 farmers in various parts of the state. Each man was allowed four bushels or less, for which he paid $2.50 per bushel Forty-eight reports were returned in which the new flax was compared with, or grown under similar conditions with, common varieties.

ONCE ON A TIME.

Once on a time, there lived a man,
A man, and lover, who asked the fair
And dear one, who held his heart in thrall,
To go with him, out—no matter where—
And—history has it, the maid replied
And—told the man, she had "nothing to wear!"

But now—when a woman is asked to go
She says to the man: "How ideal why, yes!
And I'll wear my yellow lace gown . . perhaps
The black one is prettier—or I guess
I'll wear your favorite blue—serge, please,
De try and help me to choose a dress!

"My last two new ones—but, never mind—
You admire me in grey? I think, I seem Too much like a nun . . . I might wear
—oh, no—
Mauve makes me look old. I know you'll scream
If I mention scarlet! My white gowns?—
well—
One of my white gowns is just a dream—

"But white is so common. This pink foulard
Is a dear little beauty. Still, I don't care
To wear it too often—my allegreen is sweet!"
And the poor man marvels, with wondering stare,
If there ever lived, anywhere under the sun,
A girl who lied nothing to wear!

"Indeed! Why?"

"Oh, well, you know, didn't you tell me that Saturn has a ring?"

Lands Re-Opened.

Department Of The Interior United States Land Office Crookston, Minnesota April 8,1907.

Prior to November 10, 1906, certain lands, including the ceded Chippewa and Red Lake Lands in this district, were open to settlement and entry. On that day an order was issued, withdrawing such lands from settlement and entry. That order has been rescinded and all lands subject to entry prior to November 10, 1906, are now subject to entry, the only difference being that to the issuance of the receipt by this office the reservation will be made providing the lands may be subject to taxation for right-of-way and cost of drainage, to be paid before the issuance of the final receipt. All persons who had acquired preference right of entry by reason of contest, or having the right allowed them to make an additional or an amendad or a second entry, and who could not assert that right on account of the Withdrawal of the lands, will have thirty days from the date hereof as preference right within which to make such entry.

Boat Meeting.

The boat meeting at the school house last Saturday was very well attended and a full report made by the Committee chosen to get shares in Thief River Falls. The report was accepted and a full list of the names of the contributors read. It was also decided to accept the offer of D. N. Winton, to let the COmpany have the free use of one of his boats to run with their new boat, and take the freight and Wanigan up the river for their Co. It was also decided to make the new boat, that is being constructed a little larger.

They Both Laughed.

Oscar Nesland and Alfred Quam tried the water in Lost River, on their way home from the lumber woods last Saturday, just to see if it was warm enough to start on the log drive. Oscar tried the water ice first and when he broke throu and went in up to his waist Alfred stood on the bank and laughed to see him crawl out, but he came out safe on this side of river, and now it was up to Alfred to cross the same place. He shouted to Oscar to just watch him and learn how to cross thin ice. So he got down on his hands and knees and started to crawl across the ice, which went fine until he came near the place of Oscars mishap, when the ice broke under his hands and he went up to his knees head down, and feet up, then it was Oscars turn to laugh. Alfred struggled out of the water but has not said any thing about "showing" Oscar how to cross thin ice since.

Silvering Mirrors.

Mirrors are usually silvered by coating the glass with amalgam. For this purpose a large, perfectly flat stone is provided, and upon it is evenly spread a sheet of tin foil without creas or flaw. This is covered to the depth of one-eighth of an inch with clean mercury. The plate of glass, perfectly cleaned from all grease and impurities, is floated on to the mercury by sliding, so as to exclude all air bubbles. It is then pressed down by loading it with weights in order to press out all the mercury which remains fluid. This is received in a gutter around the stone. After about twenty-four hours it is gently raised upon its edge, and in a few weeks it is ready for frames.

His Perseverance.

Henry Arthur Jones, the noted English playwright, was giving the students of Yale an address on the drama. "Your American vernacular is picturesque," he said, "and it should help your playwrights to build strong, racy plays. But neither vernacular nor anything else is of moment if perseverance is lacking. No playwright can succeed who is like a pal I know. I said to this man one New Year's day, 'Do you keep a diary, Philip?' 'Yes,' he answered. 'I've kept one for the first two weeks in January for the last seven years.'"

His Good News.

"I have," said a lawyer as he entered his unbelieved client's cell, "good news at last."

"A reprieve?" eagerly exclaimed the prisoner.

"No, not a reprieve, but your uncle has left you £500, and now you can meet your fate with the satisfying feeling that the noble efforts of your lawyer in your behalf will not go unrewarded."—London Tit-Bits.

Honest.

Boarder (on leaving)—Madam, you are one of the most honest persons I have ever met. Landlady—I am glad to hear you say that, sir. Boarder—Yes; your honesty is conspicuous by the very front of your establishment. Your sign says, "Boarders taken in."—London Telegraph.

If we fail to conquer smaller difficulties what will become of us when assailed by greater?—Thomas à Kempis.

You will there get all the satisfy sought by waiting for the world to turn round —Alfonzo Chesterfield.

Advanced.

"Is your daughter going to make her debut this season, Mrs. Parvenue?"

"No, indeed! Mme. Fabbi attends to all that. We don't have to do our own sewing by hand."—Baltimore American.

A Misplaced Pulpit.

A French Protestant pastor was the guest of a Scottish preacher at a manse. One morning slipshod herrings were served at breakfast. The French pastor asked the meaning of "sipper." His host replied that it meant "to preserve." On taking his leave next day the French pastor, writing his host's hand, said, "May the Lord sipper you, my good friend."

The Eternal Problem.

"I once lost an Irish servant," remarked a German lady who was relating the trouble she had in keeping help. "Because I could not convince her that 'mick' is a German name for a fly. Ons day my little baby daughter was yelled in their near a window which opened on the street. Where Bridget was at work. The window was closed and a number of flies were busily buzzing their heads against the panes in an endeavor to escape to the outside. They attracted baby's attention, who called out to me to look at them, at the same time saying, 'Mick, mick, mick.' Just then Bridget turned to speak to the baby and heard these words. And even today Bridget is firmly convinced that I instructed the baby to make fun of her."—New York Herald.

A Quick Play in Baseball.

Here is a play in baseball that happened long ago. Perhaps it never will happen again: Did any one ever hear of a base runner scoring from first base in the third? Well, it was done by a third baseman and when the ball never left the third baseman's hand! The playshappened in this way: Andy Moynihan was playing third base for the Pastimes of Chicago in 1868 when a skirmish game was held. The Olcotonians of Peoria were the opposing team. In the first inning, with a runner on first, the batter drove a liner straight over third. Moynihan allowed the ball to pass his left side and struck first in the infield. The crowd cheered. An brilliant catch they saw something more exciting. Moynihan, writhing with pain, was rubbing around third base. The base runner at first saw something was the matter and ran down to second. Third he fail to third and finally pulled home unmolested.

The incident was that the ball, striking Moynihan's hand, paralyzed the nerves. The ball was stuck tight in his hand. It was two minutes before his fellow players could pry his fingers oped and get the ball out.—Chicago Tribune.

Where Snow Falls.

If you feel you are a lover of snow, go to Alaska, which is the warmest spot where you are certain of complete immunity. If you are fond of it, the residents of St. Petersburg will furnish all you need to ask, for there you may be sure of it for 100 days in the year. The happy condition is supplied by Kamchatka, with thirty days, while Fairbanks, Boise and Yreka, with each two and five days respectively, may be recommended to those who merely like to have a little natural and lasting frost.—London Chronicle.

Light Meat Polish.

Take eight ounces of Spanish whiting, which must be perfectly free from grit, and put in one quart of gasoline. Shake up the whiting and gasoline thoroughly. You will notice the whiting settles immediately, leaving the liquid as clear as water. To remedy this add, further, to make it a better polishing agent, add to each quart of the mixture thirty-two drops of oleic acid—no more, no less. Shake again, and the whiting will not settle. Apply to gold, silver, nickel, brass, glass or tin and if metallic surface with a piece of cotton flannel, rubbing well. Polish with a piece of same cloth.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Waterproofing Dress Goods.

One of the most important processes used for waterproofing dress materials is to the tulle of the old dilemma process. In this case the fabric used is rosin dissolved in a large bulk of petroleum spirit. The fabric to be proofed is put passed through a bath of this solution and dried to drive off the solvent. Following this, the goods are treated by pressing with hot polished metal rollers. This last process melts the small quantity of resin which is deposited on the cloth and forms each single fiber with an exceedingly thin film of resin on it.

Kept Awake.

"How are you getting on with your music, my dear?" inquired a lady of her niece.

"Well, of course," replied the girl confidently, "it wouldn't be proper for me to acknowledge it myself, but some of the neighbors have told me they have stayed awake at night for hours listening to my playing."

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 20, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

While a large number of the citizens and business men of Thief River Falls took an interest in assisting the farmers boat Co., the newspaper men thought it would be a good time to spring one of their dirty flings at THE SUNBEAM and its editor, We will not say more this week but, will say our pencil is warm on the point and we are ready for a little fun at any time. Open your mud battery at any time gentlemen, we are ready, but we want it distinctly understood, that the Red Lake River Transportation Company are one party and the SUNBEAM and Hunt are another. Is that not plain enough. If it ain't we will state, that we have nothing to do with the running of the Red Lake River Transportation Company and they don't run this paper.

Some men and newspapers go along through life and scarcely ever offend anybody, for the reason that they never express an opinion of their own on any subject, but in reality such men and newspapers are of little use to the state and nation. If some men and newspapers had never advanced any new ideas or expressed any opinions contrary to those of others, this old world would not have advanced to its present high state of civil sation. It should not be a newspaper's purpose to willfully offend anybody, but it should not hesitate to advocate that which it considers is right, and fair and of general benefit, regardless of who or what class of individuals it may offend.—Otberg Journal.

"BUTTON BUTTON"

Who Has The Button?

The stealing of the county seat is not a petition from the vaults of the county Auditors office at Red Lake Falls, it all undoubtly air up quite a muss between the the people of the two Falls. We understand there is some ills ne being attached to Auditor O'Brien for the loss of the petition, but we can't see why he is to blame, as it appears that the attorneys of both sides had free access to all the records in the case, and it would be useless to try to make a six year old school boy believe that Auditor O'Brien would allow a columbus cent smack thief any opportunity to steal valuable records from his office.

Now who stole that petition? It is a well known fact, that this county seat removal scrap has been a sour-se of some good "fat picking" for quite a large number of lawers, and that their day was passed as soon as this last wrecking of the Commissioners was had; for then the whole matter would be up to the people, and they would be out of o job. Now what would be more natural than that they should "mislay" the petition among some of their other papers and be unable to find it when they wanted it. Of course as soon as the petition is lost, we mean "mislayd," the business of the lawyers, on both sides reopens at the old stand, for another two years active business, while the poor devil that pays the expenses can go down in his pockets and dig up the price of a new petition and a trip for it and the attorneys to supreme court.

There will be no more quarling over the petition for the removel of the county seat to Thief River Falls, for empty is the pigeon-hole, "baby has gone."

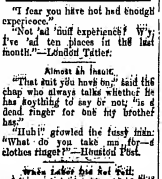
The Plummer Pioneer, remarks, that the attorneys may decide to carry the pigeon hole where the county seat removel petition used to lay before it was stolen, to the supreme court.

If the stealing of the county seat removal petition was done by a partisan of Red Lake Falls, he has done more harme for his home town than has been done before. The people of Red Lake county will not countenance work of this kind. The petition should be given a fair hearing and stealing it will do more harm than good. Such work may prove a temporary gain but will loose in the end.—St Hilaire Spectator.

THE SPANISH ESCURIAL.

It is a Marvelous Specimen of Ancient Architecture.

The Escurial, the palace of the Spanish king, so architectural marvel, formerly described as the "eighth wonder of the world," is now seldom spoken of even by those who are ready to go wild over much less pretentious structures. The cornerstone of this "Spanish St. Peter's" was laid by Philip II, in 1563, but it was 302 years (1865) before the monstrous building was pronounced finished. It was built by Philip in fulfillment of a vow to "erect the finest monastery in the world" should his forces be successful in their great battle with the French. That battle was fought at St. Quentin on Aug. 10, 1557, St. Lawrence day, and in order to honor that saint as well as to fulfill his vow the king had the foundation of his great memorial laid off in the shape of a gridiron, the implement of torture upon which the goodly Lawrence is reputed to have suffered martyrdom.



To those who have never visited the Escurial the size of the gigantic structure is beyond comprehension. It is 740 feet from north to south and 580 feet from east to west, the square towers at each corner rising to a height of over 200 feet. Within this enormous building are the king's palace, a cathedral, a monastery of 200 cells, two colleges, three chapter houses, three library buildings, five large halls for dormitories, three hospitals and over 5,000 other rooms. In order to make St. Lawrence's gridiron complete, the building is built in quadrangular form with seventeen rows of rounds of massive stone structures crossing each other at right angles, these forming the gridiron's ribs, the double bitar 4 wing 470 feet in length. The church, which is a part of this vast pile of masonry, is 351 feet long, 230 feet wide, with a dome 330 feet in height. It is estimated that the building cost $50,000,000.

Not Daunted.

"You will understand, sir," Dr. Price-Price began, "that I cannot undertake to cure your case without a diagnosis."

"That's all right," interrupted Nuritch haughtily. "I spose that's the professional word for 'fee in advance.' Name yer figger!"—Philadelphia Press.

More Than Enough.

"I fear you have not had enough experience."

"Enough? Why, my dear sir, I've had ten places in the last month."—London Tatler.

Almost an Insult.

"That suit you have on," said the chap who always talks whether he has anything to say or not "is a good finger for rub ing brother has."

"Huh!" growled the fussy fellow. "What do you take me for—a clothes ringer?"—Houston Post.

Wide Ladies Just Sell Still.

A home missionary who visited Hiding prison took occasion to have a heart to heart talk with one of the convicts.

"Don't you know, my friend," said he, "that crime never brings success? It is only achieved by hard labor."

"I did six months of it at a stretch once, and I didn't seem to be makin' much of it."

His Commander.

A story is told of General Sir Alfred Horsford, who believed in a spiritual deity. A soldier once sought his permission to marry, saying he had two good conduct badges and $25 in the savings bank. "Well, go away," said Sir Alfred, "and if you come back this day next in the same mind you shall marry, for love has mercy." On the anniversary the soldier repeated his request. "But you pray, sir, for a year, want to marry?" "Yes, sir, very much." "Sergeant major, take his name down. Let you may marry. I never believed there was so much constancy in man or woman. Hold face. Quick march!" As he left the room, turning his head, he said: "Thank you, sir. It isn't the needs obtain."

Facts Love.

Welcome to the proud the plain structure, strong in its weakness, his little arms move irresistibly than the soldier's, his line touched with persuasion, while Chatham and Pericles in manhood had not. His unexpected lamentations when he lifts up his cry of hish, he more beautiful the sobbing child, the face all fluted over as he tries to swallow his vexation, soften all hearts to pity and to mirthful and clamberin compassion.—Selected.

A Precise Answer.

"Lawyers are supposed to be the most literal minded men," said an intelligent member of the bar, "but every now and then confided to relate a practice will encounter witnesses who can give them points in the matter of literal answers. An Irishman was called to testify in a damage suit arising out of the death of a man 'at the hands of a bull,' so to speak.

"Are we to understand, sir," asked the prosecuting attorney, 'that the deceased, Patrick Flannigan, was your father?'

"He was till the bull killed him," was the reply.

AN ART REBUKE.

Edward Rosewater, founder and editor of the Omaha Bee, had a sister very fond of art. He stated once that illustrated stamped work; he called impressionistic pictures that were merely impressionistic sketches and he called portraits that bore no likeness to their originals. A young painter whom Mr. Rosewater did not like painted a portrait of a mutual friend.

"That is portrait of Smith!" the sitter exclaimed. "It doesn't look like him at all."

"Oh," the artist exclaimed, "I must try for a likeness, you know. I tried for an effect—an effect in grays."

"I know a man in New York," said Mr. Rosewater, "who had his portrait painted last year. It cost him $4,000, and he was very proud of it. When it came home he viewed it for an hour.

"'Well, Mary,' he said, 'how do you like this portrait?'

"'Sure, sir,' said the cook, 'it's lovely. It's beautiful. It's divine.'

"And of course," said his friend, 'you knew who it is?'

"'Oh, of course I do, sir,' said the cook. 'Of course, sir, directly he spoke she knew drawing master by the picture, studying it more and more closely. 'Of course, sir, I knew it was you or the likeness—'"—Harper's Weekly.

The Artist's Model.

An amusement of a well known Parisian sculptor was to have a model in a state of consumption, with the idea of the patient's carriages following. One day a friend was announced, but the sculptor was not ready to receive him. The visitor was surprised to see the model receive a blow in the face from the sculptor, who, however, kept on with the work as if nothing had happened. Surprised at such treatment of a model, the visitor remonstrated with the sculptor. The artist listened attentively, and then, in a quiet, composed tone, he remarked: "Excuse me, sir, but I was not quite satisfied with the model's face. I have gone carefully into the cast and now succeed in how it should be. You, of course, a gentleman. Therefore you would never have committed such a breach of good manners as to put a rope to have taken place, therefore no attendant could possibly have struck you. You would, sir, accord to be a product of your fancy. Let us dismiss it."

THE CLOCK

BY CHARLES S. REID

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

It was an enlarged edition of the typical grandfather's clock. It stood also feet in the corner of my sleeping room, 18 inches thick and 30 inches wide at the base. The lower part of the case had the appearance of being a cabinet, but if an opening ever had existed in it the fact did not now appear. At the request of a maiden aunt I had bought the clock at an auction sale of the effects of my late grandfather, and had stored it here, until my aunt should elect to move her property, for there was little of the antiquary about me—my tastes were modern.

But as the days passed, the clock seemed to take on a kind of personality, its dingy face assumed an expression that was almost life-like, though the manifestation was a frown instead of a smile.

While at work during the day the clock would pop up in my mind, grimly serious, dejectedly striving, as if for the gift of speech; and at night in my dreams it had a part.

Three months had passed—and it was the night of the 18th of April, to be exact—having become a still more insistent feature of my daily thoughts and nightly dreams, the old clock one night suddenly caught and held my attention under a hypnotic fascination I was unable to break. I had come in late, a quarter to 12 o'clock by my watch—the old clock in the corner had not ticked off an hour in 60 years, and the hands had stood at 12 midstunted through all the six decades.

Having dropped into a convenient arm chair a few feet away, I had turned my eyes toward the time-stained dial; and at that moment the clock had begun to strike, one, then, three, each sound clear and distinct, until 12 had been struck. Then the clock ceased from my view as completely as a rainbow disappears from an evening sky, and I found myself transported, though what manner of conduit I had no means of knowing, to an old-fashioned home in the country.

A mansion stood in the background, a rare old garden of elms, shrubbery and vines in the foreground. Near a fountain in the grounds sat a vision of loveliness such as never before had crossed my view. This was a girl not yet over 18. In a moment I could have thrown myself at her feet and declared my soul consecrated to her worship, so fair was she, so innocent in the soft expression of her large liquid eyes. Her glance was troubled, and I longed to approach her to offer my sympathies.

Presently a man came from the house—he was about middle-aged and was dressed after the fashion of a colonial gentleman. A large kindness beamed from his face, but there was a peculiar sternness in his manner. As he approached the fountain the girl arose as if to creep away. But he laid caught sight of her and called. She stopped and turned toward him. Then her lips moved faintly as if in protest, when he came up and took her hands in his. In the man's eyes I could see the fire of a deep passion; and something seemed to tell me that these two in the garden to each other stood as guardian and ward.

Presently the man caught her in his arms and pressed his lips to her forehead hungrily, as if he would fill the cravine of a famished soul with the drop of sweetness from her fresh white brow. Then he released her, and the two turned away together a few yards to a division in the walk, where they parted, unconscious of a look of fierce vindictiveness that followed them from an older woman's face which had pushed out from among the shrubbery near the fountain.

This was a middle-aged face like the man's, but the features were unfeatured, hard, miserly to friendly advancement. From the eyes gleamed the green lights of a jealous soul. This older woman was angular in form, and she had a mouth and chin that denoted unyielding determination.

From this scene in the garden, the stereopticone abruptness, I was introduced in one in the house. The man was preparing for a journey, which, apparently was to be of some length; and the older woman was assisting in the preparations. The time was night, and the lights were not very liant. Eventually the man bade the woman an indifferent farewell and passed out through the hallway, side, he looked up at the moon for a moment. Then he quickly reentered the hall and crept up o stairway that led to the second story. Noiselessly he entered a chamber on one side of the hallway, closing the door behind him. A white figure started up from a window across the floor. The room was flooded with moonlight, and I saw the face of the beautiful girl. In it was expressed no sudden terror that seemed a half mixture with gratification. It was pain and joy, fear and delight, resistance and love; and such a face!—my own heart uffered itself a willing sacrifice at the altar of such beauty.

The man crossed hurriedly in the girl's side, seized her in his arms and caressed her passionately. And now the door opened for a second time, and the face that appeared, like that of the Medusa, seemed to petrify the scene before fe. But presently the chimo of a clock in the corner broke the stillness. There were 11 strokes, and I saw the tall, old clock of my groadfather, just as I had seen it in my room for weeks past, the diel figures being clearly outlined in the moonlight. The man released the girl from his embrace and reerossed the floor, passed the tall woman in the doorway, and was goae. Not a lip had moved in speech, but the very silence was pregnant with the tragedy of three lives.

The tall woman had come so farther than the doorway, and had turned back, closing the door behind her, olter the man had departed. The girl fell upon her knees by the bedside and, with clasped hands, turned a white face toward the heavens.

And now, as the first load faded, this scene, too, passed from my vision. But the interval of darkness seemed only to reflect a lapse of time, though whether of hours, days or weeks I could not tell. At any rate, it was the girls chamber which again came into view. The dial of the old clock in the corner showed that it was near midnight; and the moonlight revealed the girl lying asleep on the bed. The hall door opened slowly and softly, and the figure of the tall, angular woman glided into the room. She crossed quickly to the sleeping girl and by a few swift movements had bound her wrists and ankles securely, before the victim realized what was taking place.

A look of intenso horror awoke in the girl's eyes when she saw the face that was bending over her. A handage which the woman had supplied was now tied about the helpless girl's lips. This placed her completely at the mercy of the woman, who now proceeded with the diabolical work which the ingenuity of her jealous rage had planned. Sitting at her back she spread apart the orms and forced the bound wrists down over the left shoulder and her ankles, where they were made fast to the ankle thongs. Then she passed a strap about the neck and under the lower limbs and thus drew her victim's chin down to her knees. Then she went to the old clock and in some mysterious manner removed the front panel in the lower cabinet, exposing to view a hollow space inside. And it was now that, the full horror of her purpose fell upon me, for the victim was lifted hodily from the bed by the women and was forced into the empty cabinet of the clock in her cramped posture. Then the panel was deliberately replaced.

The awful horror of the scene aroused the stoutest indignation of my soul, and I strove with the strength of madness to burst asunder the bonds which seemed to restrain me. In order that I might go to the rescue of that fatally beautiful girl. And the effort did burst the bonds of my singular trance, for I awoke as from a dream, although the chime of the old clock in the corner of my room still vibrated from the lost stroke of twelve, and I was conscious that those twelve strokes indeed had fallen.

The next day I found among some miniatures of my family one that resembled the man I had seen in my vision; and with it I went to my aunt.

"It is the miniature of your great grandfather," she told me.

"What is his history?" I asked.

"He was but of sea about 60 years ago. He had married a second wife with whom he was not congenial. This wife objected to his guardianship of the orphaned daughter of a friend, who was said to have been wonderfully beautiful. And, too, this second wife was objectionable to all the children of his first marriage. She had been a serving woman of low degree and had nursed him through a long illness. And through his gratitude for this service he had married her. It was some time after this marriage that the orphaned girl came into his charge. But from the day of her introduction it appears a spirit of jealousy had been aroused in the wife's bosom. It is said my grandfather acquired interests in South America, in order that he might spend much of his time abroad. The vessel on which he last sailed for that country never reached its destination; and months afterwards it was fonsed by some of the children who took charge of the estate that the big family clock had stopped just at twelve, though less than half run down; and it was unanimously believed that the clock had stopped at the hour of my grandfather's death."

"And what was the fate of the girl?"

"It is said she disappeared. There was none to be particularly interested in her, and none ever knew what became of her, unless it was the wife, who died some years later in a madhouse."

I returned home with peculiar sensations, for I could not understand through what sudden influence these partially corroborated visions had come to my mind. Securing a chisel and a hammer, I ruthlessly tore away the front panel of the old clock cabinet; and there, amid a great wealth of brown hair, was a crouching form of yellowed bones.

Lace Boleros of All Kinds Always Smart and Dainty

The bolero shown in the illustration is mode of Irish crochet lace. It will require of naterial 18 to 21 inches wide, 2 yards, or 1 yard of 44-inch stuff to make this bolero. It is cut in one piece, the fronts being turned over to form the revers.

The all-over lace bolero hores are always smart and dalaty, but they may be fashioned for more general wear of soy soft materials. As attractive one is shown mada of lach-wide baby blua sotia ribbon and Valenciennes lace. Honiton lace, which many home sewers understaad the art of making, is extremely pretty in either a bolero or hertha.

Three pretty berthas are made after the following manaer: In the handkerchief style, falling in deep points, the fullness forming folds, which give an effect of plaits; circular foshion and elongated at the front to form stoles that are so much liked. Points also are used, the fullness forming a simple circular berthа. These may be also foshioned of ribbon and lace. At times they are made of the dress material, with bohy ribbon running around as a trimming. One yard of 18-inch stuff, and three-quarters of 5 yard 21 laches wide, is required in the making of these berthas.

AMUSEMENT FOR A CLUB.

Ingenious Plan Devised by a Cambination of Girls.

In North Wales the children go from house to house during Easter week asking for contributions of eggs. If they are not forthcoming they call out this curious threat:

Pace Egg, Pace Egg, for Easter eve.
If you do not give us one,
Your hen shall lay an addled one,
Your cock shall crow alone.

There is an ancient tradition that some new ortticle of clothing must be worn for the first time on Easter Sunday. A poet of Dorsetshire hos left this ancient saying to that effect"

Eester I put on my new frock coat,
The first time ever I wore it,
With yellow buttons all of brass
That glittered in the sun like glass
Because 'twas Easter Sunday.

This plan for omusement and instruction has been devised by a club of 24 girls ranging in age from 16 to 20. Meetings are held once in two weeks and always in costume. There is one paper of twenty minutes duration, with items of intercst on the subject in question. The rest of the time is given to sociability and refreshments.

The girls have already had a Japanese evening, and a "bachalor maid" affair, when a very bright paper was read on the saloon d'etre for remaining in the state of singla blessedness, and each girl gave her views pro and con concerning this very important subject. The next meetlag, which will be before this appears in print, is to be very appropriate to the month of March, as "Holland" is the subject. Windmills are to be the favors, and the girls will appear in peasant costume and the paper will be an account of a delightful summer outing in the fascinating country.

A typical Dutch luncheon will be served, consisting of potato eaked, sausage, fish pickles, Dutch cheese and pretzels, coffee cake and coffee. Delft china, with quaint little wooden shoes for salt holders and a centerpiece of gorgeous yellow tulips will graco the table. On this occasiba a man for each girl has been asked and there will be clay pipes and steins for these masculine guests. Orange will be the predominating color and a large print of Queen Wilhelmina will adorn the wall.

A Baby Party.

In answer to the request for a baby party, I would suggest that you write the invitations la the baby's aame, requesting him or her, as the case may be, to bring mother and spead the hours between three and five at the address given. Have, if you can get them, the "ready to fill in" invitations which are decorated with children and baby faces and may be purchased by the box at large stationers. Provide a high chair and a bib for each baby, with a dalary rattle for a favor. From the chandelier attach colored balloons, such as are peddled about the streets by balloon men. These floating bits of color will amuse the babies longer than any one article I have ever encountered. When you become time comes fasten a balloon to each go-cart. For refreshments have a bowl of milk and a tiny tumbler at each place, pass graham and oatmeal crackers and any other of the thousand one specially prepared wafers for babies.

For the mothers serve sandwiches, coffee, chocolato, and, if you like, ice cream, although it'ls not necessary.

If it is possible have several older persons to assist jon besides the mothers. The centerpiece should be a white frosted cake, with a wreath of pink rose buds and one tall pink candie, as I judge it is the baby's first birthday. You will find two hours is a sufficiently long time for this party, so from three to five are the best hours hours for the young debutante.

Of course, you must provide plenty of simple toys, balls, clothes pins and rubber dolls will prove most acceptable.

MADAME MERRI.

SLEEVES AND BODICE IN ONE.

Idea That is Favored by All the New Spring Models.

The new spring models continue to show the loose crossing draperies forming sleeves and bodies all in one.

by way of ornamentation, with one of the new double frille down the front and tiny cuffs of the same at the wrist-long sleeves.

A new blouse is built of tinted hatiste or mull, with fine laces of ecru tone, and they keep their color under lauaderings. Others of pale blue or violet mulls, with white lace, are nice, too, and are frightfully expensive at the shops that they simply must be made of home.

All girls should be taught to sew. If ona is to have only a small dress allowance she can have lovely things, blouses and little simple evening gowns, if she knows how to make them herself, often far prettier from their personal touch than those of her friead who has all her clothes made by a cheap dressmaker. She can have prettier things than if she bought ready-to-wear frocks, which must be very expensive to be nice. And then, if-she may have all the money possible to spend on clothes, she ought—and probably does—use her knowledge of sewing in teaching some young girle at the "other end" of town how to make their plain dresses with taste and intelligence.

With Black and White.

The vogue of the black and white costume has brought with it the demand for black spangled galloons, adorable motifs and allovers, with the greatest favor shown the large motife. These are principally used for the decoration of the bodice, particularly when it is filled with white and has a white lace guimpo.

OLD CANNON CAN'T BE BROKEN.

Armament of Old Craft Was Made to Last.

A good story is being told at the Mare Island navy yard concerning a San Francisco contractor who bought all the old obsolete cannon which were sold at the local yard some time ago. The cannon were all of the smooth bore kind, and in order that they might be easily handled for shipmeat to the city all sorts of schemes were tried to eadeavor to break them with dynamite and blasting powder, but they were unsuccessful.

An electric drill machine was even set up at the yards and the cannon were drilled full of holes in order to weaken them for breaking open with wedges, but this was also unsuccessful. The cannon were then taken away and the last heard of them they were corralled in the little inner Point Richmond, where on effort was being made to break them opea with dyaamite again.

The cannon which proved to be so strong were among the armameat of the war craft which sailed the seas in 1812.

GHOSTS PLAY MANY PRANKS.

Grab Rope from Belringer and Cut Down Trees.

Ghostly bappenings have disturbed tha town of Kirkwoll, the capital of the county of Orkney. On Wednesday night, says the London Daily Moil, the wife of the belringer went to St. Magnus cathedrol to sound the curfew at eight o'clock. This is an aacient custom still observed in the burgh. The bell had been tolled for less than a minute, when, it is alleged, a figure suddenly appeared at the woman's side, snatched her beads from the rope and as mysteriously disappeared.

Another morning 20 trees which o few years ago were planted in front of the cathedral were found to have been cut down. The night was a calm one, with brilliant neonlight, and the trees were standing at one o'clock in the morning.

Hundreds of windows have an outlook on the spot, and many people must were still astir at three o'clock in tha morning did not hear the slightest sound outside. Yet on hour later every tree bod been destroyed. The police are baffled.

ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

WORKING ON THE ROAD.

How One Farmer Keeps the Highway Along His Farm in Good Shape.

Acting on an article that I read about the King road drag last summer I went to the creek bottom and cut a cottonwood log eight feet long and ten inches through, split it, made all edges straight, mortised three cross pieces in to hold the split log on edge, just as shown in the illustration in all the papers and laid a board on it to stand on, and the drag was finished, writes a farmer in Field and Farm. It took me half a day to make it without any expense whatever. I attached a chain and put the clevis in a link that made the drag pull at an angle. I do not always want it at the same angle, as when moving now, soft dirt it must be at a greater angle than when just smoothing the roads. I can change the angle some by my weight on the drag while driving.

I plowed on each side of the road, making a back furrow, beginning almost at the traveled track. I put on three horses and found it pulled them hard enough, because the drag was green and dirt soft. Anyone who has not seen the drag work would be surprised to know how much dirt one man can move. I have seen three men and eight horses and a grader costing $300 not moving any more dirt than I can with one team and a drag that cost one-half day's work. I worked half a day on a half mile of road and laid it in pretty good condition. I then used the drag whenever it was rough and rutty. I can go over it once in 30 minutes and once is usually enough.

When the road is once shaped up it can be smoothed over after a rain before any work can be done in the field and not a minute's time is lost so far as farming is concerned, as the water all runs off and the road dries quickly. I find that the drag should be used immediately after a rain. My experience is that it is best used soon after a rain while the road is sloppy, or wait until the top is dried, because stiff mud will not slip from the drag and makes it pull harder. It does not make very much of a load for two horses after a road is once in shape. A fall of snow can be dragged out of the road just as easily as the dirt can be thrown to the middle so that the road does not become very muddy at any time.

I have not actually spent as much time keeping the road smooth as it would take to work out my poll tax and have done it all when I could not work in the field. I also find the drag useful on the farm. It is a good thing with which to drag down gopher hills in the alfalfa fields and it is just as cute in leveling a field for irrigation—much better than a harrow in either case. I believe if I should make another drag I would use a two by 12 oak plank 16 feet long, cut in two. It would be easier made and have a straight edge. It is not necessary to shoe it when first made, but after it has been used a while it needs a strip of iron on the front log to make it take hold.

EXTERMINATING WILD OATS.

Wild oats is the worst weed we have to contend with, writes a Missouri correspondent in the Farmer, so I thought I would write my experience in ridding myself of it. Three years ago I rented a farm which had a large amount of wild oats. I sowed corn about the fifteenth of May, but as it was a cold spring the corn did not grow very fast, but the wild oats did, and by the time the corn was ready for cultivation the oats formed a thicket. I plowed some of it under and cultivated the best of the corn as well as I could. The next year I disked the corn ground as soon as the frost was out and let it lie until about the middle of May, when I plowed it good and put it to corn again. That was the last I saw of wild oats on that piece of ground. I think millet is just as good or better than corn, as you can sow that as late as July.

The Ideal Way.

An ideal way to produce milk is in a ventilated stable where the air changes at least once an hour, and where, in winter, the cows can stay 22 out of the 24 hours.

HELPING ALONG HIS MEMORY.

Husband Willing to Do His Best to Follow Instructions.

Mr. Morse is an undemonstrative man and an absent-minded one as well. In these two respects he in a trial to his wife, who is exactly his opposite. "James," she said as she bade him good-by when he was about to start for Chicago, "you remember to hunt up Cousin William and find out all about Aunt Sarah? It is so many years since I've heard from any of that family."

"Yes, my dear."

"And do you suppose you will remember to put on your overcoat if the wind changes, so as not to catch one of your dreadful colds?"

"Yene, my dear."

"And you will try to remember that you have plenty of clean collars, so you needn't go about looking as if you had no wife to see to you?"

"Yes, my dear," said Mr. Morse, as he turned to take up his bag.

"And, James," said Mrs. Morse, tearfully, "do you suppose you will think of me every day while you are gone and I am here at home?"

"My dear," responded Mr. Morse, with his mind on catching the train, "I will certainly make a memorandum to do so."

BLOOD GETS SOUR.

Every Family Should Make Up This Home Mixture and Take Now.

At this time of year, says a well-known authority, the Kidneys become weak, clogged and inactive, failing to filter out the poisons and acids, which sour the blood, causing not only foetid and bodily eruptions, but the worst forms of Rheumatism, Nervous and Stomach troubles, Backache and painful, annoying Urinary afflictions.

It is worth anyone's time now to get from some good prescription pharmacy the following ingredients: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after your meals and at bedtime.

This simple home-made mixture will force the Kidneys to normal, healthy action, so they will filter and strain all uric acid and poisonous waste matter from the blood, and expel this in the urine, at the same time restoring the "full blood count"—that is, 95 per cent. red blood corpuscles—which is absolutely indispensable to perfect health.

NIGHTCAPS IN VOGUE AGAIN.

Women Returning to the Fashion of Their Grandmothers.

Fashionable women have revived the use of the nightcap. It was discarded at least half a century ago, except by grandmothers and elderly spinsters, but now, according to the Drapers' Record, it has again become an indispensable part of woman's outfit and is included in all trousseaux. The revival is partly ascribed to the doctors. Their incessant advocacy of well ventilated bedrooms has, in the absence of over door transoms in English houses, resulted in bedroom windows being opened at night, and women who are not robust found the wintry draughts too trying. Another and more distressing cause is alleged by hairdressers. These say that elaborate coiffures are being denied. These are helped by stylish transformations, which are detached at night. To facilitate this arrangement it is said that many ladies have their hair cropped rendering a nightcap necessary. Their grandmothers practiced the same folly. Moreover, the new manner of dressing the hair, which introduces an exceptionally careful process of undulation and is submitted to by women three times a week, calls for the use of the protecting nightcap to preserve the freshness of the coiffure.

FURIOUS HUMOR ON CHILD.

Itching, Bleeding Sores Covered Body —Nothing Helped Her—Cuticura Cures Her In Five Days.

"After my granddaughter of about seven years had been cured of the measles, she was attacked about a fortnight later by a furious itching and painful eruption all over her body, especially the upper part of it, forming watery and bleeding sores, especially under the arms, of considerable size. She suffered a great deal and for three weeks we nursed her every night, using all the remedies we could think of. Nothing would help. We tried the Cuticura Remedies and after twenty-four hours we noted considerable improvement, and after using only one complete set of the Cuticura Remedies, in five consecutive days the little one, much to our joy, had been entirely cured, and has been well for a long time. Mrs. F. Raefenacht, R. F. D. No. 3, Bakersfield, Cal., June 25 and July 23, 1906."

Many Children Take Sacrament.

A notable confirmation took place recently in Dublin, at the pro-cathedral, when Bishop Walsh confirmed the sacrament of confirmation on nearly a thousand children. The actual confirming lasted two hours, and the ceremony was concluded by the administering of the temperance pledge and a strong exhortation to the children to discharge faithfully all their religious duties.

How a Swan River Settler Has Succeeded.

Benito, Manitoba, Nov. 26, 1906.

At Swan River Valley, in May, 1900, a settler took up a homestead on Section 30, in Towaship 34, Range 29 West of the First Meridian, at that time 50 miles from a railway, telegraph, school or church. There is now a railway within two miles of my farm, and all these other advantages close at hand. His story is:

"After making my homestead entry, fee of $10 I had $45.00 total (forty-five dollars) capital. Through doing homestead duties in slack times of the year, I managed to get a start. I am a married man of 28 years of age.

"I built my first house, or shack, and broke up 8 acres, putting five acres in crop the first year.

"This year, 1906, I had 80 acres in crop—65 acres in wheat, 20 acres of which yielded 850 bushels, or 42½ bushels per acre; 15 acres of oats, which yielded 325 bushels, and one stack of oats in sheaf for feed.

One of the Important Duties of Physicians and the Well-Informed of the World is to learn as to the relative standing and reliability of the leading manufacturers of medicinal agents, as the most eminent physicians are the most careful as to the uniform quality and perfect purity of remedies prescribed by them, and it is well known to physicians and the Well-Informed generally that the California Fig Syrup Co., by reason of its correct methods and perfect equipment and the ethical character of its product has attained to the high standing in scientific and commercial circles which is accorded to successful and reliable houses only, and, therefore, that the name of the Company has become a guarantee of the excellence of its remedy.

TRUTH AND QUALITY

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing, therefore we wish to call the attention of all who would enjoy good health, with its blessings, to the fact that it involves the question of right living with all the term implies. With proper knowledge of what is best each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to that end and the use of medicines dispensed with generally to great advantage, but as in many instances a simple, wholesome remedy may be invaluable if taken at the proper time, the California Fig Syrup Co. feels that it is alike important to present truthfully the subject and to supply the one perfect laxative remedy which has won the approval of physicians and the world-wide acceptance of the Well-Informed because of the excellence of the combination, known to all, and the original method of manufacture, which is known to the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs, and to get its beneficial effects always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. and the same heretofore known by the name—Syrup of Figs—which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., that the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

ON SECRET SERVICE

True Stories of Experiences in the State, War, Treasury and Postoffice Departments.

By COL. JASPER EWING BRADY

MISS DODGE, U. S. SECRET SERVICE

Cheney returned to the United States from his round the world trip for the government in December, 1897. He landed in San Francisco and lost no time making his way across the continent to Washington, where he made his report to the government. The president, secretaries of state, war and navy were all interested in this report and a conference was held at the White House the evening Cheney arrived. Briefly, but concisely, Cheney recited the results of his year's trip. Just as he was about to sail from Hongkong for home he had received a message directing him to make a trip to Manila and report on fleet and fortifications there. He knew that meant war with Spain. In making his report, he emphasized the weakness of the Spaniards in the far east. The morale of their army was low, their navy was little better than scrap iron. Cheney was mildly taken to task by the secretaries of war and navy for his conclusions, but subsequent events proved he was right. To Cheney destruction of Montojo's fleet by Dewey was not such a great event, because Cheney had been aboard every one of the Spanish ships; he had seen rust and decay, lack of discipline and inattention. One real good American battleship could blow the whole Spanish fleet out of the water. But the torpedoes! Sure, plenty of them, most of which had been down for years and were worthless. And the forts were in exactly the same condition as the fleet. As has been remarked, the secretaries were a little inclined to be skeptical, but the calm, deep-thinking, brown-eyed president knew Col. Cheney was telling the truth. The president did not say much at the conference; he smoked and listened, but the next day, by special appointment, Col. Cheney lunched at the White House and again went over the most salient points of his report. The president knew and said there would be war, and when it did come Col. Cheney was to be in charge of the army secret service.

"I am at your command, Mr. President," quietly said Cheney.

"I know it, Colonel, and I thank you," replied the president, shaking his hand at parting.

Cheney returned to his office in Chicago and Guthrie and Lonergan were overjoyed to see him. A quiet dinner was discussed at the colonel's apartments, after which Cheney listened to their report. Everything was in ship shape, as he knew it would be. The business was being transacted as he would have it done, and he said:

"Now that you fellows have your hands in so well, you can just keep them there. I'm not going to resume active charge of the work. I'll have my office here and will be glad to consult with you. But my active days in this concern are over."

Guthrie looked solemn, but Lonergan just grinned and said:

"You make me smile, Cheney. You'll give up this work when you're dead, and not before; it's in your blood." Lonergan had a pretty good faculty of intuition and knew whereof he spoke. Guthrie said nothing, but was doing a heap of thinking.

"All right, boys, think as you like, but wait and see."

Public events moved apace; Spain was getting more and more arrogant in Cuba, people were clamoring for the government to act; but the great man in the White House was not ready. He was getting ready, however, as rapidly as he could. He knew more than the people, and the people must wait. Then came that memorable day in February, when some Spanish dastard sent 260-odd American sailors to their doom. That was the deciding straw; before that there was a faint hope that diplomacy might avert the crisis; but with the blowing up of the Maine all hope of peace fled. The country was afire from one end to the other.

Cheney heard of the blowing up of the Maine in his apartments. He knew what that meant and packed his suit case.

"Whar yo' goin' now, kunnel?" said Jeff, noting the preparations.

"Washington, Jeff, and then some place else. I'll get a telegram in the morning." And he did.

A day later he again stood in the presence of the president, and that afternoon he started for Havana. The regular court of inquiry would meet and render a decision, but the president wanted quicker information than would be allowed by red tape.

Cheney reached Havana four days after the Maine was blown up and quietly went to work. Only two men, Gen. Lee, consul general, and Capt. Sigsbee, of the Maine, knew his identity and for what purpose he was there. One fact was firmly fixed in Cheney's mind after he had his talk with Sigsbee, and that was that the Maine was blown up by an explosion under her hull. She had been anchored over a torpedo and some Spaniard or Cuban had touched off the mine. But he wanted proof.

Theoretically, he knew something of ship construction as applied to modern warships. There were two hulls, an inner and an outer shell, and the space between them was filled with some substance. In the Maine this substance was cement. If the explosion came from within the ship this cement filling would all be on the bottom of the bay. If the explosion came from without the ship much of this cement would be blown in the air, and as there were plenty of vessels in the harbor, some of it must have alighted on their decks. Sailors of these ships had probably swept it overboard, but there was a chance that Cheney would find out. The Ward line steamer City of Washington was there the night of the explosion, and was still in the harbor. Cheney boarded this ship and found not one piece of this cement but a dozen, some of them as large as a man's head.

One piece he took with him. In his own mind he was satisfied; but he wanted proof beyond peradventure.

If the Maine had been torpedoed her keel would be bent up; if, however, the explosion of one of her own magazines caused the harvest of death and destruction the keel would be bent downwards. Cheney secured a crew and, putting on a diving suit, went down to see. It was a new experience to him, but he was equal to it. Sigsbee had carefully explained to him the location of magazines, etc., of the vessel, and went with him to the ship. The waters of Havana harbor are black as night and the bottom is soft mud. All one afternoon Cheney worked around this sepulcher of the American sailors. He came up only when he had to, and on his last ascent he brought up a piece of electric cable. That night he sat down and drew a diagram of what he had discovered. The keel was bent up—the explosion had come from the outside. Spain was responsible. The true story of the blowing up of the Maine has never been told, but it is known, and some day in the future the country will know how it happened—and who touched off the torpedo.

Cheney returned to Washington, made his report and from then on was actively in the government service. In April, when the volunteer army was authorized, he was commissioned a colonel and given charge of the secret service. Here his splendid mentality and energy came into play. His sedentary, abstemious life rendered him physically fit for anything. His headquarters were with the army in the field, but he operated solely under the direct orders of the president. His command over his department was absolute, and he ran things with an iron hand. Among his other duties he was required to take charge of and entertain all the foreign military attaches who joined the army to witness its maneuvers. They came from every quarter of the globe, and were given the best of everything. Padget, of the Royal British navy, and Lee, of the British artillery; Von Goetzen, of Germany; Enver Pasha, of Turkey; Shiba, of Japan, all were there, and one morning Cheney heard a familiar voice say:

"I am looking for Col. Cheney."

Glancing up he beheld his Russian friend, Count Yarmoleff.

"I am Col. Cheney, Count. How do you do?"

"You—are—Colonel—Cheney?" said the count, slowly. "Why—the last time I saw you was at Yarvahar, Russia—and your name was 'Bradley.'"

"Yes, count, that's all true. But I was then busily engaged trying to keep out of the way of your 'Third Section.'"

"You succeeded, I see," replied the count.

"Yes, but it was a close shave." Cheney and Yarmoleff thus resumed their very pleasant friendship.

Information was wanted by Spain as to just what the American army was going to do, and numbers of spies were turned loose in Tampa and other points of concentration. It was Cheney's duty to prevent this, and he and his men were kept busy. His organization was perfect, and not a man or woman arrived in Tampa that Cheney did not know about. Many arrests were made and the prisoners sent to Fort McPherson, Atlanta, for safe keeping. Tomas Estrada Palma, afterwards president of Cuba, reported to Cheney and assisted him in his work. Many other Cubans reported, but they were generally all title and no work.

One night Cheney heard of the existence of a Spanish club at Ybor City and, taking one man with him, went over and broke it up. There were about 40 Spaniards in the club when Cheney and his man broke in the door. Quick as a flash Cheney covered them with his six-shooter. His man did likewise and they drove the Spaniards into a corner and held them there. With one hand holding a revolver pointed at the crowd, Cheney 'phoned to Gen. Eppinger for troops. In 15 minutes a company of regular infantry arrived and marched the prisoners off to jail. Some of Tampa's most prominent citizens were caught in that raid.

The war board in Washington was playing battledore and shuttlecock with the army. One day it was going to Havana, the next to Porto Rico, Santiago or Cienfuegos, or where-not. Cervera was at large on the high seas, and until he was corralled the army couldn't go any place. And this war board wanted information about all these places, and Cheney was told to get it. With these multitudinous details piling on his shoulders his time was occupied far about 20 hours out of each 24.

In his own mind he was convinced that the army movement would be either against Havana or Santiago. Of the latter place the government had a good deal of information, but of Havana they were a bit shy. In a general way they knew, of course, of the Morro and Cabanas forts, but of the movement of troops, etc., since the war broke out they were ignorant. Havana could be attacked by the navy from the sea, and an army could come up in rear of the city from Batabano, 40 miles away. Would the Spanish army be ready for such a movement? This was the information Cheney wanted to get. He had numerous civilian employes and officers of the army under his command, but just the right person did not appear. He was not hampered for funds and could pay any price for this information. He offered a thousand dollars or more to several men. Three of them tried it, but the Spaniards were very alert around Havana and naught came of the attempts.

The first man got to Batabano all right, and then his feet became cold and he came back. The second tried to get in from the sea side, but failed. The third man, a bright Irishman named Murphy, landed at Matanzas and approached Havana from the east. He got in the city, but nothing more was ever heard of him. Presumably he was captured, tried as a spy and shot. Spain treated spies differently than America—she shot them. We kept them prisoners, fed them on the fat of the land and after three months let them go.

One morning, about the 10th of May, Cheney sat in his office in the Tampa Bay hotel, when a card was brought to him.

"Miss Frances Dodge," he read. "Wonder what a woman wants with me? Show her in."

"You are Col. Cheney?" The colonel looked up and found himself gazing into a pair of very pretty black eyes. The face and figure that went with them, too, were beautiful. The woman looked like a Spaniard.

"Yes, I am Col. Cheney. What can I do for you, Miss Dodge?"

The young lady (she wasn't over 25) quietly handed him a letter.

"Sit down, won't you, please?" he said, as he broke the seal. Miss Dodge seated herself demurely and waited for the colonel to finish the letter. He read it through once, and then again. The letter was from the secretary of war, introducing Miss Frances Dodge, who was desirous of entering the secret service, and who the secretary thought could be of great use to Col. Cheney. Cheney had used women in his detective service and company many times, and they had done good work, but in war he failed to see where they could be used. And this one, this pretty little dark-haired and black-eyed bit of femininity—what could she do in this conflict of men?

"So you want to enter the secret service, Miss Dodge?" said Cheney, with an almost patronizing smile.

"Yes, Colonel, I do." The answer was tense and earnest and the voice soft and low.

"And what do you want to do, pray?"

"I want to go to Havana." Her red lips parted, showing even white teeth, and she leaned forward slightly.

"You want to go where?" almost gasped Cheney.

"Havana, senor."

"And what do you want to do there?" said the colonel, noting the Spanish used.

"Senor el Colonel," answered Miss Dodge, rising and leaning over his desk, "you want information about Havana; you have sent men and they have failed; now send a woman, she won't fail. Wait, please, colonel," seeing Cheney was about to interrupt. "My mother was a full-blooded Spaniard, and I speak the language like a Castilian. From my looks I could be taken for a native; that is in my favor. Now, Col. Cheney, give me the chance. I can't do less than fail, and that costs you nothing. If I succeed, pay me as my services deserve. You see, colonel, I need the money."

"But, my dear Miss Dodge," expostulated the colonel, "think of the danger attendant upon such an undertaking! Men have failed as you say—"

"A woman hasn't," interrupted the lady. "And, besides, colonel, I am alone in the world. I'm a newspaper woman and am used to taking care of myself."

"Have you talked this over with the secretary of war, Miss Dodge?"

"Yes, I have, and that letter to you is the result. He wouldn't have written the letter if he hadn't believed in me, would he?"

"That's logic. How do you propose getting into Havana in case you go?"

"All I ask is to be put ashore ten miles west of Havana, and I'll do the rest. By May 30 I'll be back here, Col. Cheney, with the information you want."

"Miss Dodge," he said, after thinking hard over the proposition, "I'll give you the chance. You may leave to-night for Key West. A vessel will be there to land you where you desire. You know the risk, you are willing to take it. If you get the information we want I'll pay you $2,500."

"Then you may have the warrant drawn, Col. Cheney, because I'll be back here to claim it 20 days from now."

"I hope you will." He then gave her specific instructions and offered her money for expenses.

"Thank you, Colonel, I don't need that. I have sufficient funds with me."

Cheney arranged for the vessel by telegraph, and that evening Miss Dodge was gone. Three days later he received a telegram from the vessel's commander saying Miss Dodge had been put ashore at night about 12 miles west of Havana. Cheney thought of the young lady a great many times during the ensuing days. He hoped all was well with her, though he was dubious. The Spaniards would not kill a woman, even if she was captured. Miss Dodge was too beautiful for that.

About six o'clock on the afternoon of May 30 Miss Dodge walked into Col. Cheney's office as blithe and fresh as a lark.

"Good evening, Col. Cheney. Where's my draft for $2,500?"

"Well, I am glad to see you back. And the draft is yours as soon as the information I asked for is in my possession. But whether you have the information or not, I am glad you are alive, and well."

"I told you, Colonel, the woman would not fail. And say, Colonel, I've had the time of my life. The Spanish officers are the easiest things I have ever seen. Why, look at this!" She handed him a picture of a distinguished looking Spanish officer. Turning it over, he read: "To my guerida amigo Senorita Teresa Ramirez. Ramon Blanco, Capitan Generale."

"Well, by all that's great! How did you do it?"

Then she told the story. She landed, as was told by the naval officer, west of Havana. Cautiously she made her way to the city. Arriving there about daylight she had her breakfast in a small cafe and then went boldly out to a store and bought sufficient clothing to make a good appearance. Then she went to the Inglaterra hotel, and was soon at home. Her black eyes and naive manner did the rest. Before night she had a dozen Spanish officers dancing attendance upon her. A day or so later there was a ball at the palace. Senorita Ramirez went and was introduced to Captain General Blanco, and he was as easy as the rest. From now on her task was a sinecure. She drove all over the city, walked through the forts and with a camera neatly concealed in her skirts she took views of all the new works.

The road from Batabano was not being fortified, because the Americans were not expected that way. However, towards Matanzas there were earthworks being erected and resistance would be met there. From the west and south, however, the American advance could be made. "It would be policy," said Miss Dodge, "to make a feint from Matanzas, to occupy the Spaniards who expected them that way, and have good-sized forces approach from the west and south."

Cheney was astonished at the military knowledge of this young lady. She was even planning the campaign.

"Yes, but, Miss Dodge, how did you get away after securing all this information?"

"That was where the fun came in, Colonel. The day after I reached Havana I began to look for Cuban sympathizers. There were plenty of them there, but they were keeping mighty dark. Every day or so a number of them were apprehended and shot down by Spanish troops. It was awful, Colonel." Miss Dodge shuddered and paused for a minute.

"One of the waiters in the hotel was a sympathizer. I found it out and cautiously let him know who I was. He was game to the core, and was good assistance to me. After I had all the information I thought necessary I began to plan my 'get away,' as I believe it is called. There was one young Spanish officer named Eduardo Beltran who fairly haunted my footsteps. He was very insistent and made the most violent love I ever saw. The American fleet was outside the harbor mouth blockading the city, and I knew I must reach the ships in order to get away. One day at luncheon I arranged with Jose, my waiter friend, to be on the wharf about nine o'clock that night. He was to have another man with him. I would walk down there with Beltran and when the time was ripe they were to bind and gag Beltran and then row me out to the fleet. It worked beautifully. Beltran came, as usual, and was as sweet as could be. I proposed the walk and he accepted. The town was very gay, and, laughing and chatting, we passed through the crowds to the dock. At just the right moment Jose and his friend appeared. In an instant El Teniente Beltran was bound and gagged and a helpless prisoner. The boat was there and we climbed in. Jose brought Beltran along, too, because he saw if he didn't, and they returned to Havana, their lives would pay the forfeit. It was a good idea to capture a prisoner of war."

Cheney was absorbed in the narrative, and Miss Dodge's bright eyes were dancing with excitement as she resumed her story.

"The harbor was pretty well lighted up by the constant play of the searchlights on the Morro and Cabanas. Several ships in the harbor also threw their lights around the shore line. About three miles out was the United States fleet, and that was our objective. Carefully we rowed along the shore with muffled oars, and almost under the lee of Cabanas we put out to sea. All was well so far. When we were out about three-quarters of a mile the light from Cabanas picked us up. They turned loose two big guns on us and for a moment my heart stood still. I was afraid, Colonel, awfully afraid. But those two men rowed all the harder, and as Spanish marksmanship is proverbially bad we escaped. Mr. Beltran was in the bottom of the boat, bound but not gagged, and how he did swear! The Eagle was on the blockading line nearest to us, and she was working her searchlight. She had heard the firing and knew something was coming out. Finally she picked us up. I was sitting in the prow of the boat waving a small American flag, and presently I heard, 'Ahoy, there!' Jose answered the hail and soon we were alongside. The first thing the officer of the deck said, when he saw me, was, 'My God, it's a woman!' Strange, Colonel, how men say that when a woman suddenly appears in unexpected places."

"Well," continued Miss Dodge, smiling, "there's not much more to tell. The Eagle signaled the flagship and she was directed to take us to Key West. Beltran was as sour as a lemon when he was kept on board a prisoner. Jose and his friend returned to Havana. The next day we were in Key West, Beltran was transferred to the barracks and, after purchasing these more becoming clothes, I came here. That's all, Colonel; have I earned the $2,500?"

"You surely have, Miss Dodge, and to-morrow morning you shall have your draft. You are wonderful—wonderful!"

"No, Colonel, I'm not wonderful. I'm—just a woman."

That night Col. Cheney reported all these facts to the president, over the telegraph wire which ran from his office direct to the White House. The president was delighted and directed Miss Dodge's reward to be doubled.

At nine o'clock the next morning Col. Cheney gave Miss Dodge a subtreasury warrant for $5,000.

Her eyes sparkled as she took the warrant and she said: "Col. Cheney, before I left for Havana I told you the truth in every particular but one. I said my mother and father were dead. My father is, but mother is alive and lives with me in a little place up on the Hudson. I bought the place myself and still owe $1,200 on it. It was such slow work on the newspaper that I determined to try for something big. My managing editor wrote me a letter to the secretary of war and then I came here. Now, just see what this $5,000 means to me."

"But if you had failed, Miss Dodge?"

"The great Richelieu said, 'In the bright lexicon of youth, there is no such word as fail,' and I'm still a youth, Col. Cheney."

The long, dark lashes were wet with tears of joy; the woman was now apparent.

"I'm glad you did not fail, Miss Dodge, more than glad."

POKES FUN AT CEREMONY.

Ludwig Fulda Sees Humor in Americanisms of Lecture Room.

In his "Impressions of America," Ludwig Fulda says this about the Americanisms of the lecture room: "The speaker never ascends the rostrum alone. He is always accompanied by a guard of honor. He is not allowed to mount the tribune at once, but is compelled to sit in a big chair, a sort of coronation throne. While he sits there, like a silent imperator, some well known person, a member of the committee, president of the society or head of a university, steps forward and tells all he knows about the guest of the evening by way of introduction. He tells the life story and enumerates the books which may have been written by the poor enthroned man, who tries in vain to assume a learned expression. The speaker ends by pronouncing the name of the guest in a loud voice. That is the cue for the guest to rise and ascend to the reading desk. In the meantime the man who made the introduction sits down in the vacant chair and remains there until the lecture is over. I must confess that it is not a comfortable feeling to know that while one is speaking the man in the chair, despite all the words of praise which he may have uttered, may be yawning or sleeping."

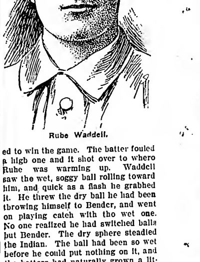
Accommodated Customers.

Quincy Tufts, an old-time dealer in men's furnishings, whose place of business was in the old Herald building, on Washington street, Boston, was celebrated for his extreme courtesy in dealing with trying customers. On one occasion a man whom we will call Mr. A. remarked on this trait to another man whom we will call Mr. B. Whereupon the latter laid a wager that he could ruffle the temper of Mr. Tufts. The wager was accepted, and the two repaired to Mr. Tufts' place of business.

Mr. B. asked to see samples of men's suitings. Mr. Tufts produced piece after piece of cloth, until the supply was exhausted, and Mr. B., selecting one, said, "I will take just 1 cent's worth of this."

Mr. Tufts took a penny from his pocket, and, placing it upon the cloth, with a piece of chalk drew an outline upon the cloth and cut out a piece of it, and with the utmost politeness handed it to Mr. B.

The wager was paid.



"Bile or No Bile."

The following plaintive note was picked up on the bridge in the east end of town: "Dear L.—The reason I didn't laff when you laft at me yesterday in the postoffice was because I have a bile on my face and kan't laff. If I laff it will hurt, but I love you old sweet thing bile or no bile, laff or no laff, you know that. p. m. Burn this up."—Country Newspaper.

Sporting Gossip.

A diminutive chap appeared at Duquesne gardens, Pittsburg, recently and asked for Manager McSwigan. As the latter was busy he could not be seen, so Business Manager Danahey asked the visitor what he could do for him. The little fellow stated that he would like to go upon the ice and do some skating. "The doors are not open until 1:30 o'clock," replied Frank. "Do you want a position as skate boy or instructor?" The midget stated that he wanted neither, but desired a chance to try out the ice as he was going to skate in the races Friday and Saturday. "Oh, you want to enter the races do you? Well, go see Billie Bratton and he will tell you if he can receive any more entries. You know that the entries closed Saturday." Fred Logan, for it was no other than the great speed skater, made no answer, but followed Danahey until they found Bratton. Billy, like Frank, had never met the little St. Johns wonder, so he was at a loss as to what to say. Logan saw the predicament that the two were in and told them who he was. Both almost fainted. "Why, you don't mean to tell me you are the skater that defeated Wood at Saranac lake recently in three out of four races, do you?" gasped Bratton. "I am the Logan that did it," was the reply. "Well, I don't see where you get your speed," stated Bratton, "for you do not look big enough to even carry a pair of skates, let alone skate with them on your feet." But Logan only smiled at the remark. The skater is not over five feet tall and does not appear to weigh more than 100 pounds, but from his actions on the ice one can see how easily a person may be fooled. Logan took an hour's spin on the ice, and the way he sailed around the rink made them all sit up and take notice. He is certainly what is claimed for him, a marvel at speed skating.

Speaking of ninth inning rallies, they are telling a story now on the wit of Rube Waddell that saved the Athletics from a beating in New York one day last season. Bender was in the box. It had been raining part of the day and the ball was slippery. The Indian had been weakening and when that ninth came along they began clouting him. Connie Mack had sent Waddell out to warm up. There were men on third and second, with two strikes and three balls on the batter and two men down. A tally was needed to win the game. The batter fouled a high one and it shot over to where Rube was warming up. Waddell saw the wet, soggy ball rolling toward him, and quick as a flash he grabbed it. He threw the dry ball he had been throwing himself to Bender, and went on playing catch with the wet one. No one realized he had switched balls but Bender. The dry sphere steadied the Indian. The ball had been so wet before he could put nothing on it, and the batters had naturally grown a little too confident. He showed a sudden revival of speed, and the next ball was missed by a foot. Rube's head work had won the game.

Irish athletes have been for some time discussing the question of the handle which is such an important element in what is known as "throwing the hammer." It is proposed to bar certain American innovations in the build and construction of the iron. In the future the handle must be a straight, steel rod with a wooden grip. This, in effect, means a return to the old-time conditions and an abolition of the wire rope handles. Among professionals and aspirants to professionalism this new order received a mixed reception. Edward Barrett, who belongs to a family of Irish athletes and holds records for hammer throwing both in England and Ireland, agrees with the idea of returning to the old style. "Our fathers," he said, "were nature's athletes. We are only mechanical—an artificial lot looking out for some artificial aid to supply what nature refused to give us. I am glad to support the new regulation in the construction of the hammer. Let it be a hammer and not a flying machine. No man admires the inventive genius of America more than I do, but from the commencement I condemned the wire rope handle. It does not give an honest athlete a fair chance."

DEWEY TO LEAVE HOME PRESENTED BY PEOPLE

WASHINTON.—Admiral Dewey and wife are to rent out the home in Rhode Island avenue, presented to them by the contributions of the American people, to live at 1601 K street, the home of Mrs. Dewey before her marriage. The smallness of the dining-room in the gift house is said to be the cause of its abandonment by the admiral and his wife. Admiral Dewey explained that while the gift house is very comfortable, the dining-room is capable of seating only 14 persons, and this fact has prevented Mrs. Dewey from entertaining to any great extent. She is fond of society, accepts many dinner invitations and naturally wishes to return the hospitalities of her friends. She has given a number of dinner parties, but has had to restrict the number of her guests more than she likes to do.

Mrs. Dewey's home in K street is magnificently furnished and it is said that the Rhode Island avenue place will be leased furnished. The K street house was the home of Mrs. Dewey during the lifetime of her first husband, Gen. Hazen of the signal service. Her K street house is much nearer the residence of her mother, and she likes that location better than the house presented by the American people to her husband. The title to the Rhode Island avenue house now stands in Mrs. Dewey's name.

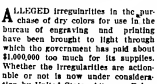
MISS NORA LANGHORNE MAY BECOME PRINCESS

SOCIETY here and in Virginia is deeply interested in a rumor from London to the effect that Miss Nora Langhorne, youngest of the five handsome daughters of C. D. Langhorne of Albemarle county, Va., has captured the heart and received an offer of the hand of Prince Francis of Teck, the good-looking brother of the princess of Wales.

That Prince Francis' family were willing that he should marry a wealthy American has been known for some time, but Miss Langhorne has not a great fortune. Her brother-in-law, Waldorf Astor, and the latter's father, William Waldorf Astor, however, have more money than they know what to do with and are said to be heartily in favor of an alliance that would place them in the innermost circle of English society, which, as is well known, has not taken very kindly to the elder Astor. The latter is already reaping the benefit of the popularity of his daughter-in-law, who was Miss Nannie Langhorne and who at the time of her marriage to young Waldorf Astor was Mrs. Shaw, having married and divorced Robert Gould Shaw of Boston in a surprisingly short time after leaving the schoolroom. It was under her chaperonage that Miss Nora Langhorne made her London debut last season and at once attracted the admiration of the smart world.

Miss Langhorne's sisters are all handsome and popular matrons, just as they were great southern belles. They are Mrs. R. Moncure Perkins of Richmond, Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson of New York, Mrs. Reginald Brooks of Boston, and Mrs. Waldorf Astor. Their father's estate, Mirado, in the mountains of Albemarle county, has been in the possession of the family for many generations, and although somewhat run down since the war, is still a beautiful property.

TEACHING SCHOOL BOYS TO SHOOT WITH RIFLES



PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S ardent wish to make America a nation of sharpshooters is in a fair way of realization. Shooting clubs are being formed in the various states and are procuring arms from the war department; agents are being sent to the Swiss cities for the purpose of instructing the students in the public schools how to load and sight rifles so that the school boys may acquire proficiency in the art of killing.

Not the least startling of the varied progressive ideas incorporated in President Roosevelt's last message to congress was a suggestion that rifles be put in the hands of public school boys and a course in firing at targets be included in the education of American youths. This recommendation was the final chapter in the president's message.

In the Washington schools a brisk competition has been started to determine the best marksman. The boys are tested by firing the guns from standing, kneeling and lying positions. The most expert pupils in the different grades are to meet in competition among all the city students.

In all schools and colleges where military science is taught under federal appropriation a strict course in target work is compulsory.

While the president's idea is generally approved, there are some persons and some organizations very much opposed to it. The Interparliament Art Union, which is working to bring about the peace of the world is antagonizing the president's programme on this particular question, although it regards him as one of its staunchest supporters in the world movement for universal peace. The union takes the ground that if universal peace is to be established by means of international arbitration, it becomes a false step for a nation to be cultivating a warlike spirit among its youths and young men by teaching them to shoot with the idea that they may some time be called on to shoot to kill in battle.

GOVERNMENT MAKES BIG SAVING IN COST OF INK

ALLEGED irregularities in the purchase of dry colors for use in the bureau of engraving and printing have been brought to light through which the government has paid about $1,000,000 too much for its supplies. Whether the irregularities are actionable or not is now under consideration by United States Attorney Baker of the District of Columbia.

The matter has been under investigation by the treasury department for about a year, and has been kept very quiet. It finally transpired through the publication of the hearings on the sundry civil bill before the house committee on appropriations.

For several years the government paid from 45 to 60 cents a pound for these colors. Concerns which had lost in the bidding finally made charges that something was wrong. It developed that the ink used was made by a process invented by a man in the bureau. The government paid 45 cents a pound for "soft black" and as high as 65 cents a pound for a "soft black." When the charges were made last year, Director Sullivan of the bureau made a personal investigation of the manner in which the color contracts were made, and found that a satisfactory black could be produced for 12 cents a pound.

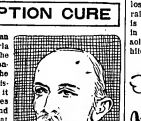
Thereupon the price was reduced, and the saving for the year was more than $[illegible]. The color contracts heretofore had been in charge of the ink expert of the bureau, and the price had been about what is charged by several different ink concerns in the open market.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

UNEARTHED FRISCO GRAFT

"Ellsor" to capture the "Boss" and keep him from the police.

William J. Burns "got the goods on 'Abe' Ruef" and other San Francisco boodlers where all others failed. When gang rule became so rotten in the Golden Gate city that the protests of decent citizens went unheeded; when graft, corruption and boodling was in vain exposed daily in the newspapers, the United States government was asked to send an officer and call an extraordinary grand jury. President Roosevelt sent Francis J. Heney with extraordinary powers. Heney wired: "I must have Burns in 'Frisco."



Burns reached Heney's side. Courts of San Francisco blocked their every move for months. Ruef's hold may be imagined when it is remembered that when his arrest was finally ordered no officer of the police or sheriff's forces would take him. The court had to appoint a special

Burns has handed every important case in his field for the government in the past 18 years and has yet to record a failure. In 1899 he ran down the Philadelphia-Lancaster counterfeiters. These men, Taylor, Bredell, Jacobs and Kendig, bought a paper mill which made exactly like paper exactly like the government's. They put out thousands of $100 bills that were accepted at the United States subtreasuries. They robbed the government of $250,000 in counterfeited cigar stamps, which they used in their big cigar factory in Lancaster. It took Burns a year to get his evidence in this case, but he sent each of the counterfeiters to prison for 12 years.

HAS NEW CONSUMPTION CURE

Emil von Behring, the celebrated German bacteriologist, who discovered the anti-diphtheria serum, has created a sensation in Europe by the announcement that he has a remedy for consumption. In an article just published in the Independent, Dr. von Behring describes his discovery. Holding that consumption, whether it appears early or late in life, is in most cases "the result of germs acquired in infancy," and namely by ingestion, it is his conviction that freedom from infection can be assured only by careful feeding and healthy surroundings in early childhood. Von Behring, however, has something to offer besides means of avoiding infection.

This is his "tuberculactin." Inoculating with this remedy, it is claimed, gives immunity from the disease. Whether those suffering from phthisis can be cured or improved has not yet been determined, but, judging by many experiments on animals, Prof. von Behring is persuaded that in tuberculactin he has discovered a means of increasing the resistance of those who show a hypersensitiveness under the tuberculin test.

As a scientist and medical discoverer von Behring ranks with Pasteur and Koch. He lives on a large medical farm near Marburg; he is a professor in the University of Berlin and a personal friend of the kaiser, who has increased his salary in order to enable him to devote his time to tuberculosis researches on a large scale. On his farm of 400 acres, Prof. Behring has no less than 400 cows, as well as several hundred horses and other animals. The enterprise costs in the neighborhood of $30,000 a year.

SEES CALAMITY FOR RAILROADS

William Wilcox Finley, who recently became president of the Southern railroad, is discouraged about the outlook for the big lines. The two-cent fare agitation in many states and regulation of rates by the federal authorities means ruin, he thinks.

"Legislation," he said in an interview, "intended to regulate railroads will prove to be an obstacle to their development, and will tend to hinder rather than to foster, instead of better, the conditions sought to be remedied."

He foresees a ruinous contest in which every state will enter into a war of rate and envy to see which can impose the heaviest penalties on the unfortunate corporations in an endeavor to secure the largest supply of cars and the best service.

William Wilson Finley has had the valuable experience of a training on roads operating under widely differing conditions. He has been railroad service in the middle south, the southwest and the northwest, and has had the past ten years to apply the knowledge gained in other parts of the country to conditions on the Southern railway. Mr. Finley was born in Mississippi in 1855, and began railroad work when he was 20 years old as a stenographer on the New Orleans, Jackson & Great Northern, now part of the Illinois Central. During the several years he worked his way up on different southern roads until he was appointed assistant general freight agent of the Texas & Pacific. In 1885 he was appointed general freight agent of the Port Worth & Denver City and other roads comprising the "Panhandle Route," which has since been taken over by the Colorado & Southern. The next year he was made chairman of the Trans-Missouri Traffic association, and in 1890 was appointed chairman of the Western Passenger association. He spent the next three years as general traffic manager of the Great Northern, and then went to the Southern as third vice president, from which position he has risen to the post of president.

INVENTS NEW EXPLOSIVE

Hudson Maxim, the inventor of explosives, recently announced that he had perfected a new weapon which makes armor plate valueless. It is a safety detonating fuse that can pass through a steel armor of any thickness and explode as far inside as the gunner wishes.

In addition he said he is now perfecting ballistite, a new smokeless powder, which is not dangerous to handle. Mr. Maxim, discussing the undefended seaboards of the United States, said:

"The tremendous expense of modern warfare makes the unprepared nation the only inviting bait. Poor old China is a case in point. Of what may happen to a nation unprepared to maintain its own peace by being prepared for war. We are relatively as defenseless as China. Suppose some other nation should attempt to force our hands and call our bluff? Thanks to England, she does not call the bluff.

"When the Venezuelan trouble came we put our backs up and showed our teeth. And do you know what the real truth was? Our capacity, our national capacity, for the manufacture of smokeless powder at that time was one charge for one ten-inch gun each day.

"Now as a matter of fact, on our Pacific coast we are absolutely defenseless. The Japanese have 750,000 trained veterans and we have 50,000 veterans—who spend their time in shoveling sand in sailing on officers.

"It's true that we have got behind us the great American genius, but while that is getting to work the Japanese might capture the Pacific slope, land a quarter of a million troops, and occupy California.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

SOCIETY WOMEN HEAVY LOSERS IN STOCK CRASH

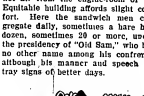
NEW YORK.—That members of the "400" were caught heavily in the recent slump in stock values is stated in the Wall street district on good authority. The aggregate losses of one group of young society men and women have been conservatively placed at $20,000,000.

The head of a family whose ancestor was founder of one of the greatest railroad systems in the country is said to have been 100,000 shares long on Union Pacific. His loss in this stock alone is over $3,000,000. A woman member of the Vanderbilt family also is said to be a heavy loser. A close friend of the young railroad man, also a society leader, is said to have been almost "broke" in the recent crash. He has since sold his new 70-mile-an-hour automobile to get ready cash.

The rush into the market of Thomas F. Ryan is said to have been principally to save from absolute ruin the first named society speculator. That he was successful is said to have been due only to rapid manipulation of large blocks of Interborough and Consolidated Gas.

Stories of the heavy losses reached the street from the clubs most frequented by young men of wealth and old family connections. Many more of such men, it appears, have been sorely hit in the market than had previously been believed.

It is probable not half has been told, for the stories of losses are notoriously modest in showing themselves. The losses of the smart set is said much talk in the financial district. It is freely admitted that the gayety of Newport will be curtailed through the lack of money.



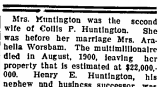
EXTREMES IN CLUB LIFE IN FINANCIAL DISTRICT

WHEN the gigantic terminal building of the McAdoo tunnels under the Hudson river is completed the extremes of metropolitan life will touch elbows in two unique clubs recently formed in the financial district.

One of these is the Railroad club, which will be one of the greatest aggregations of millionaires in the world. Its luxurious quarters will be on the twenty-first and twenty-second floors, whence it will overlook, with a watchful eye the converging tides of commerce flowing into the city through river and harbor and the thousands of miles of railroad which stretch away in every direction from the Jersey shore.

There are no luxurious appointments—and not even a meeting-room, for the "Hot-Air Club" of "sandwich" men, and the only dues are the penalties exacted from the members present to provide beer when the club assembles in a nameless alley on Cedar street, almost within the shadow of its wealthy neighbor.

A "sandwich" man is an individual whom hard luck and an unwillingness to beg compels to parade the streets literally sandwiched between two billboards or carrying an advertising sign high above his head for the modest stipend of one dollar a day. A community of misery has led these luckless individuals to select as their meeting place a sidewalk grating protected from wintry blasts by tall buildings, through which a current of hot air from the engine-room of the Equitable building affords slight comfort. Here the sandwich men congregate daily, sometimes a bare half dozen, sometimes 20 or more, under the presidency of "Old Sam," who has no other name among his confreres, although his manner and speech betray signs of better days.



FEUDAL CASTLE TO BE BUILT ON THE HUDSON

ON the heights of the Hudson, opposite West Point, in Putnam county, one of the most elaborate county houses in America is to be built this summer by Evans R. Dick, banker and broker. The place, when completed, will cost nearly a quarter of a million dollars.

Feudal castles of the Tyrolese and old monasteries are the models on which the Evans home is planned.

While the main part of the castle comprises fifteen rooms there are two additional ones abutting, one for bachelor guests and one for the servants. In its greatest reach the house will be nearly 200 feet long. Each member of the family will have an entire suite, including bedroom, dressing room and bath. To the Evans children one whole wing is devoted. The library will be partly underground in a part of the building planned to give a baston effect.

Throughout the interior the feudal character will be maintained in the fittings and furniture. About the low lying building the Evans estate spreads to 200 acres. The grounds in front of the house, running down to the river, are to be inclosed by high battlemented walls guarded by turrets. The entrance driveway will be from the rear, circling a huge fountain behind the building. At the gate will be a lodge keeper's house in a style in keeping with the feudal estate.

HUNTINGTON WIDOW MAY SOON WED HER NEPHEW

C. P. HUNTINGTON'S widow, it is understood, is going to make another Huntington alliance. Her engagement to her late husband's nephew, Henry Huntington, which has so often been reported only to be denied by the wealthy widow, seems now about to be consummated.

The announcement of a coming marriage will not be delayed long according to news from Paris where she is at present. She has purchased a home there and has commissioned one of the largest furniture and decorating houses on Fifth avenue to fit it up to her fancy. This appears a bit unusual, but the firm in question has an international reputation and is so familiar with her tastes that sending representatives over to Paris is not really a case of carrying coals to Newcastle.

Mrs. Huntington was the second wife of Collis P. Huntington. She was before her marriage Mrs. Arabella Worsham. The multimillionaire died in August, 1900, leaving her property that is estimated at $22,000,000. Henry E. Huntington, his nephew and business successor, was given an $8,000,000 share of the enormous estate, while the magnate's adopted daughter, Clara, now Princess Hatzfeldt, received considerably more than $1,000,000.

Henry Edmund Huntington, the nephew of whom Collis P. Huntington was most fond, has lived for many years in California, where he, of recent years, has been identified with real estate and street railway interests in Los Angeles. He was divorced from his wife, Mary A. Huntington, in April, 1906.

THAW TRIAL WILL PROCEED ON MONDAY

JEROME DECIDES NOT TO ASK WRIT OF PROHIBITION TO DELAY IT.

Acts on Legal Advice—Delmas May Require Two Days for His Argument—State's Summing Up Will Be Brief.

New York, April 6.—The trial of Harry K. Thaw will proceed on Monday morning, when Delphin M. Delmas, the leading counsel for the defense, will begin his summing up address to the jury. District Attorney Jerome decided late Friday not to apply to the appellate division of the supreme court for a writ of prohibition or mandamus to halt the trial. He reached this decision, it was said, after a consultation with eminent counsel.

Mr. Jerome may argue briefly on Monday morning against the confirmation of the report of the lunacy commission which declared Thaw to be sane, but he is aware that Justice Fitzgerald's disposition is to confirm the report, which was unanimous. The district attorney has many witnesses still under subpoena, but it is said he has decided not to call them and will press the trial forward to an early verdict, or what is regarded more likely, a disagreement of the jury.

Advised Not to Appeal.

When Justice Fitzgerald Thursday adjournment Mr. Jerome set about seeking precedents upon which to base his appeal to the higher court. He was at his office early Friday morning and then went to the appellate division building. Instead of applying for a stay of the trial, however, Mr. Jerome sought counsel among his judicial friends, and it is said to his upon their advice that he reconsidered his determination to press the matter.

Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton was on the stand as a witness for the defense when the trial proper was halted more than two weeks ago. In order that the record may be kept straight, he probably will be recalled Monday morning, although he may not be permitted to testify.

Delmas May Speak Two Days.

There was a stipulation in court some weeks ago that each side was to have one day for summing up. It was learned Friday night, however, that Mr. Delmas may speak for two entire days. It is wishes this time it undoubtedly will be granted to him. District Attorney Jerome has stated that his summing up would not require more than three or four hours. He has expressed the desire to make his argument without any sort of interruption for a luncheon recess or adjournment. In will ask that a verdict to convict Thaw of murder in the first degree.

No reference will be made or allowed on either side as to the appointment of the lunacy commission or the nature of its findings. Mr. Jerome will claim that Thaw was sane enough to know the nature and quality of his act when he killed Stanford White, and to know that the act was wrong. This is the definition in this state of legal sanity. Regardless of his expressed personal conviction in the matter, Mr. Jerome told the court Thursday it would be his duty to press the prosecution of the defendant to the utmost.

The trial on Monday will enter its twelfth week if it is confidently expected at least to be its final week. The long delays which have characterized the proceedings of the trial have imposed the extra task upon the attorneys who are to sum up to the jury of making a complete resume of the testimony, so as to freshen the memory of the jurors, who for two weeks will have been entirely out of the atmosphere of the trial. It is thought that a verdict may be reached on Thursday.

DENIES KILLING MRS. GENTRY.

Constantine Says She Committed Suicide with His Razor.

New York, April 5.—The man arrested in Brooklyn on suspicion that he murdered Mrs. Gentry of Chicago, made a statement to the police Thursday, in which he said that he is Constantine, the man for whom the Chicago police have been searching. He said he did not kill Mrs. Gentry, but that she committed suicide in his presence. He said he was willing to return to Chicago and explain to the police there.

Constantine said that Mrs. Gentry killed herself with his razor. He was a white-handed razor, and how she got possession of it, he did not know. After he left the house, Constantine said, he pawned a diamond ring, receiving, he thinks, $80, and pawned a watch and chain and fob for $45. He took the 1:45 p. m. train for New York. He has been in Italy and South America since then.

RAIL STRIKE IS AVERTED

MANAGERS AND TRAINMEN AT CHICAGO REACH AGREEMENT.

Commissioners Knapp and Neill, Sent by Roosevelt, Bring About the Settlement.

Chicago, April 5.—It was announced at 2:25 Thursday afternoon that the general managers of 43 western railways and the committee of the union conductors and trainmen had reached a settlement at 1:30 p. m., and all danger of a strike, which for several weeks has threatened to tie up traffic in the west, had been averted.

The proposition on which the settlement was arranged was put forward by Commissioners Knapp and Neill, President Roosevelt's representatives in Chicago. The managers made a slight additional concession in the passenger service over their recent offer to the men and gained a ten-hour working day in the work-train service. The announcement had been made that the same conditions will apply on a settlement of the controversy between the managers and the locomotive firemen.

The managers acted on the settlement proposal at the Auditorium Annex hotel. Grand Chiefs Morrissey and Garretsen approved it at the Sherman house.

Washington, April 5.—The following correspondence regarding the settlement of the strike on the western railroads centering Chicago was made public Thursday night:

"Chicago, April 4, 1907.—President Roosevelt, Washington: Complete settlement effected, result highly satisfactory. A distinct triumph for government mediation.

"MARTIN A. KNAPP,

"Chairman Interstate Commerce Commission.

"CHARLES P. NEILL,

"Commissioner of Labor."

The president's reply:

"Washington, April 4, 1907.—Hon. Martin A. Knapp, Chairman Interstate Commerce Commission, Hon. Charles P. Neill, Commissioner of Labor, Chicago: Am greatly pleased and heartily congratulate you both.

HERRMANN MEANT NO HARM.

Declares Destruction of His Books Was Done Innocently.

Washington, April 5.—Binger Herrmann occupied the witness stand in his own behalf during the afternoon session of his trial Thursday, the morning session having interrupted by the illness of a juror.

Mr. Herrmann detailed the circumstances of the destruction of his letter books, for which he is being tried. The destruction, he said, took place a few days before he retired as commissioner of the general land office, and was conducted during office hours, publicly, in Mr. Herrmann's office in the general land office.

"I think I indicated how to destroy them," continued Mr. Herrmann, "by simply tearing the leaves in half, after which they were taken from the books and placed in the bottom of a waste paper basket. I did not use for the purpose any knife, and it is only an unnecessary expense to send them across the continent. They simply contain my personal correspondence.

"The last one done in the best of faith and not to destroy anything I regarded as official matter was simply that I had no further use for them. I had had no occasion to refer to them during the six years they had been accumulating. They had answered their purpose, and I considered them as belonging to me as much my property as the coat on my back. I did it in the open day with the clerks all about me."

Kansas City Boycott Ends.

Kansas City, Mo., April 5.—The boycott started Wednesday at the stockyards because the traction commission merchants refused to sell to local packers because they purchased stock from an independent concern, came to an end Thursday when C. W. Armour, president of the Armour Packing company, and Wellington Leavitt of Chicago, representing Swift & Co., appeared at the yards and announced that they would send their buyers into the country if the boycott were not lifted.

Big Woolen Firms Fail.

Worcester, Mass., April 5.—Akers & Taylor, woolen manufacturers in Chagton City, one of the principal manufacturing concerns in Worcester county, have failed. The failure carried with it the Taylor Manufacturing company in Hops Valley, R. I., whose principal owner is Fred S. Taylor, of the firm of Akers & Taylor. The joint failures have liabilities estimated at $200,000.

Dead-Letter Record Broken.

Washington, April 5.—The division of the dead letters broke all records by returning to senders during the month of March 374,279 undelivered letters and packages. In March, 1906, the number returned was 226,438. The record for a single day in the returning branch of the division was also broken during last month, when 14,488 letters were returned on the 28th.

Cut Corn Causes Death.

Chicago, April 5.—Charles Carlson, 50 years old, 816 Central avenue, Austin, died Thursday morning at St. Ann's sanitarium of blood poisoning from a cut inflicted upon himself while trimming corns.

PLOT STORY UNTRUE, DECLARES PENROSE

SENATOR SAYS HE NEVER HEARD OF THE ALLEGED RICH MAN'S CABAL.

Did Not Tell President—Secretary Loeb Says Roosevelt Learned of the Scheme Before the Dinner of the Conspirators.

Philadelphia, April 6. — United States Senator Penrose had this to say Friday about a published report that he told at a dinner in Washington the story of a "rich men's conspiracy" to prevent the selection of President Roosevelt's choice of a successor to himself: "It is absolutely an untruth. I have never said any such thing. It is untrue. I have always been a supporter of and believer in President Roosevelt's administration and all its policies."

The senator was asked: "Have you ever heard of a $5,000,000 fund to prevent President Roosevelt's naming his successor?"

"No, absolutely not," was his reply.

Never Heard of the Cabal.

"Have you ever heard of the combination termed the 'rich men's conspiracy' to thwart the president in the development of his policies?"

"No, I have never heard of any such combination and have no knowledge of it."

"Did you ever attend a dinner of such a character as was mentioned today in the Washington dispatches?"

"No, I never attended a dinner where such a subject was discussed. I could not have done so, anyhow, for I have just returned from the Indian cruise with Secretary Metcalf and Senator Flint of California. I arrived in Philadelphia Tuesday night after a month's trip. During that time I did not look at newspapers or keep in touch with affairs in the United States."

President Told Before.

Washington, April 6.—It was stated at the White House Friday that knowledge of the "cabal" alleged to have been formed to defeat the policies of Mr. Roosevelt came to the notice of the president some time before the dinner at which the whole scheme was laid bare.

Persistent efforts were made at the White House to obtain the name of the person who is said to be responsible for giving out the information of the combination, but Secretary Loeb declined to make this public.

Detroit, Mich., April 5.—Gateman Leonard Zapf, at the Fourteenth avenue railroad crossing, and Conductor John Kissane of the Fourteenth avenue street car line, which was struck by a Michigan Central train at the crossing ten days ago, were found criminally negligent Thursday by the coroner's jury. Zapf for not closing his gates upon the approach of the train, and Kissane in not taking proper precautions before signaling his motorman to cross the tracks. One man was killed and a dozen women injured in the collision.

Colton, Cal., April 5.—Coroner Van Wie Thursday swore out warrants for the arrest of the employes of the Southern Pacific who were held responsible for the wreck on March 28 in which 25 persons were killed and 75 injured. The charge is manslaughter without malice.

Thirty Years for Burglary.

New York, April 5.—Thirty years in prison was the sentence imposed Thursday upon Folke Engel Brandt, who had pleaded guilty to burglary in the first degree.

TROOPS AWE THE STRIKERS

RIOTING AT THE SHIPYARDS OF LORAIN, O., HAS CEASED.

More Strikebreakers and Supplies Are Received and the Workmen Offer no Violence.

Lorain, O., April 6.—With the members of Company B of this city, Ohio National Guard, under orders and sleeping in the armory close to the seat of trouble, and three companies of Cleveland troops under orders and ready to respond to a call here at any moment, quiet prevailed in the fight at the yards of the American Shipbuilding company, the scene of rioting for two days past.

The troops are under orders to respond at the call of the mayor, who has also sworn in a large force of special deputies who are cooperating with the police and company detectives.

Another train load of strikebreakers, numbering from 150 to 200, arrived Friday evening and the men were escorted to the yards under cover of the guns of detectives and special deputies. The strikers were congregated about in squads and witnessed the march of the latest recruits into the shipyards without any offer of violence.

Hundreds of cots and mattresses and other articles of bedding paraphernalia were successfully removed from the freight depots into the shipyards Friday afternoon. Le Marcha declared that over 400 strikebreakers are now inside the shipgrounds and that fully 1,000 more are available and will be brought in within the next few days.

RICH MEN ARE INDICTED.

Wyoming Mine Magnates Are Accused of Conspiracy.

Cheyenne, Wyo., April 5.—The special federal grand jury here has returned five indictments against E. M. Holbrook, president of the Wyoming Coal Mining company, which owns the Monarch and other mines in the Sheridan county, Wyoming; E. T. McCarthy, a former business associate of Holbrook; R. E. Lombardi, a Sheridan attorney, and Robert McPhilamey, a real estate dealer of Sheridan. The indictments charge conspiracy with intent to defraud the government.

Holbrook and McCarthy are reputed to be millionieres. McCarthy is engaged in zinc and lead mining enterprises in Missouri. Lombardi and McPhilamey are charged with taking up coal lands and selling them to the company. They are in this city and have been held in $5,000 bonds. The other two men have not been apprehended.

MAY BE NORFOLK FUGITIVE.

Vancouver Prisoner Answers Description of Alleged Murderer.

Vancouver, B. C., April 5.—F. C. Gould, who Wednesday pleaded guilty in the Vancouver police court to six charges of forging stocks, is believed to be wanted in Norfolk, Va., for murder, marks and descriptions tallying exactly with the description sent out by the authorities. He is accused of killing his roommate in February, 1906. A reward of $400 was offered for his arrest. His favorite haunts lived in Virginia, but denies the charge of the crime.

Wichita Jobbers Win Point.

Washington, April 5.—The freight rate on cotton piece goods from producing points in Texas to Wichita, Kan., was ordered reduced from 96 to 50 cents per 100 pounds, by a decision rendered Friday by Commissioner Prouty for the interstate commerce commission. The effect of the decision is to put Wichita jobbers on a competitive footing with those of Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Chicago.

TORNADO SWEEPS OVER THE SOUTH

FIFTEEN LIVES ARE LOST AND GREAT DAMAGE TO PROPERTY DONE.

Louisiana Towns Suffer—Alexandria Has Fearful Experience, Many Dwellings Being Wrecked—Insane Asylum at Jackson Is Destroyed.

New Orleans, April 6.—Probably 15 lives were instantly blotted out Friday by a tornado which swept across portions of three Gulf states, which was distinctly traceable for a distance of 300 miles and which took about 11 lives in crossing this zone.

The tornado moved from west to east, crossing the southern extremities of Louisiana and Mississippi and striking into Alabama for a short distance. Portions of four towns were devastated and damage probably exceeding half a million dollars was done, for in addition to the places in which the tornado manifested fatal violence, the disturbance did general damage to property, crops and telegraph wires throughout its 300 mile course.

The tornado began at Alexandria, La., soon after one o'clock in the morning, instantly killing four persons there, probably fatally injuring seven and seriously injuring 13 others. Soon after daylight it neared the Mississippi river, instantly killing five persons at Jackson, La., while at Bayou Sara, La., at least a dozen others are reported killed. There was one fatal injury at Jackson. The tornado next appeared at Carson, Miss., where great property damage was done, and the last heard of it was about noon near Selma, Ala., where the inhabitants saw whirling clouds rise into the air as they crossed the river. One death, a negro, was reported near Selma, but not confirmed.

Alexandria Devastated.

Alexandria, a town of about 18,000 inhabitants, had a fearful experience. When the tornado struck the electric lights went out, the crackling of falling buildings could be heard above the noise of the wind, and vivid lightning flashes showed such sights as an empty Iron Mountain passenger train rolling over and over. Immediately after the wind spent its violence a heavy hail storm came on.

Luckily, the main portion of Alexandria escaped the worst of the tornado, which cut a path through the northern part of the town, a residence section. About a score of homes were completely wiped out, 60 were damaged and altogether about 100 buildings were seriously wrecked, including several business houses. The Iron Mountain road lost its roundhouse. A freak of the wind drove a small section of a house into one of the empty passenger couches, wedging these two bodies almost inextricably together.

In the woods about the town the tornado cut down trees and smelt out its path for miles about five miles long. Several houses were blown down at Pineville, and injuries were reported. The hail did much damage to crops.

At daylight Alexandrie began the work of clearing the debris, Mayor Turner organizing a relief movement at noon. The damage was estimated at $250,000.

Insane Asylum Wrecked.

Details are meager from Jackson, La., where the asylum there was almost wholly wrecked with a loss of about $200,000. In addition to three of the inmates, many others were injured. Mrs. Zach Lea's residence was blown down and her husband and daughter Mary was killed while others say she was fatally injured. Two negroes were killed on a nearby plantation, while reports from the surrounding country indicated that there was probably more loss of life among negroes whose flimsy cabins tumbled on the heads of their occupants.

The tornado then struck several passengers on the steamer Betsy Ann, running to Natches, had a thrilling escapade. The boat was reduced to almost a total wreck. While the breaking timbers both from the steamer and from the shore flew through the air, the crew got all the passengers safely ashore. First Mate Abo Crothers had an arm broken, and was also a church, schoolhouse and two business buildings and several cabins. Every building in the path was but 200 yards wide and the wind blew from the southeast.

From Jackson, the storm crossed the state line into Alebome, where it began to lose much of its destructive force.

Peculiar weather conditions prevailed all day throughout south Louisiana and Mississippi. Sudden rains were followed by clear skies and gusts of wind were incessant.

JAIL DELIVERY FOILED.

Los Angeles Prisoners Try to Kill Jailer and Escape.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 5.—Three prisoners in the county jail here, one a murderer, made a desperate attempt to murder the night jailer and escape early Thursday. Two of them were shot and wounded and all three captured.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

J. J. Hill Retires.

St. Paul—James J. Hill retired as the head of the Great Northern Railway Company at a special meeting of the directors in St. Paul, retaining the chairmanship of the board of directors.

Louis W. Hill becomes president of the company and Frank H. McGuigan vice president, the other officers remaining the same.

The changes went into effect immediately.

"I don't retire," said Mr. Hill. "Indeed I see no such work. I shall now do the company's business but as I did in the last five or six years, when I was necessary the increase in the operating staff."

Mr. Hill is president of the company, chairman of the board of directors, and the organization is considered the work of that single man.

Louis W. Hill, first vice-president, actually been in charge of the company's road for almost a year, but with his election to the presidency he becomes vested with the power, taking off part of the work which has been resting on his shoulders.

Mr. Hill, formerly fourth vice-president of the Grand Trunk, with headquarters at Montreal, Can., is in charge of operating matters.

Mr. Hill has been first vice-president of the Great Northern for the last few years. His supervision of various departments during that time has undoubtedly qualified him eminently qualified him to assume the responsibilities of the presidency. His active connection with the road covers a period of almost forty years. The only two years Mr. Hill was not actively connected with the road were a period of two years, during which he looked after railroad matters for his father.

Suicide.

Rather than face trial for [illegible] in his office in Minneapolis, Mr. Kennedy, a member of Noodle county, shot himself through the head. He is still alive, but quite low.

Kennedy, shortly before the shooting, published an editorial in which he admitted the charges which were made against him. He also announced that he would resign his office. He was to have been arraigned before the court for [illegible] of the county auditor's office. He was charged with having received $1,000 from a certain contractor for a contract which he had given to the contractor. Kennedy was also charged with having received $1,000 from a certain contractor for a contract which he had given to the contractor. Kennedy was also charged with having received $1,000 from a certain contractor for a contract which he had given to the contractor.

Kennedy returned this money to the county, but the grand jury at the June term of court returned four indictments against him.

He was arrested at Billings, Montana, after being brought back to St. Peter was admitted to bail.

The cases against him would have come up at the term of court next month.

Bloomberg went into a bedroom at his home, pulled the muzzle of a revolver into his right ear and fired a bullet into his brain.

A few minutes later he was found by his wife and when a doctor was called Bloomberg made a statement to him and the doctor sent a message to Coroner Merrill.

Prize Steer.

St. Paul—Jack Jack, the famous prize-winning Polled Angus steer, which created considerable comment in the state experiment station during the past year, is turned into meat, and is now on exhibition at the Andrew Bosch Co., Seventh and Broadway.

Jack Jack was sold to Swift & Co. March 21, exhibited at their yards for a few days and was admired by a party of legislators.

Jack Jack was bred on the Woodcock farm at Preston, Ill., in November, 1911, and was purchased by the state agricultural college in December, 1913, and shortly afterwards became a winner of prize winning, which needed no better with his taking the Michael honors at the International show.

He was slaughtered this week and his dressed carcass weighed 1222 lbs., a yield of prime meat of 64.42 per cent, and cost Mr. Schoch over $100.

Taxing Bachelors.

Warren—Mayor August Lundgren, who has just been elected for the fourth consecutive time, has undertaken to settle the bachelor question so far as it concerns Warren, at any rate. At a recent council meeting a proposition was made to impose a tax upon all bachelors over twenty-five years of age. Mayor Lundgren, however, persuaded the members of the council, who were unanimously in favor of neither of some kind, to allow him to try persuasive methods before using compulsion.

He has now issued a proclamation in which he offers to make presents of fine residence lots to the first five bachelors or spinsters who announce the selfish state of celibacy for that matrimony, to the profit and advantage, point of the city.

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis—At the close of business on March 20 the state treasury showed a cash balance on hand of $7,449,062.34, which is the largest amount of $1,456,702.85.

Mankato—Joseph N. Bolger, a farmer of Shibley township, Brown county, was obliged to pay a fine of $10 for sending first-class matter through the mails at fourth-class rates. Postoffice Inspector Morris ran the case down.

Margie—Fire completely destroyed the store of Daly & Hayden of this place, entailing a loss of $2,000; insurance, $901. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Delavan—The Cargill elevator at this place collapsed a day or so ago and 10,000 bushels of grain were scattered around. No one was injured. This elevator was erected in 1870.

South St. Paul—C. L. Keyes is elected mayor by a margin of ten votes.

St. Paul—The supreme court holds the constitutional exercise for Judge Young and Judge Atwater.

Brainerd—The next meeting of the Minnesota Educational association will be held in St. Paul.

St. Paul—The corporation attorney rules that the city must be protected by bonds for canopies over sidewalks.

Minneapolis—The money orders paid at the postoffice one day reached the record-breaking total of $5,523. These figures shatter all previous records, as the nearest approach is less by more than 1,000 money orders.

Duluth—A. Brostedt, district passenger agent of the Great Northern, has been appointed district freight and passenger agent of the road at Wisnipeg. He succeeds E. J. Smith, who goes into other business.

Gray Eagle—The First State Bank of Gray Eagle, formerly a private bank was granted a license by Public Examiner Schafer. R. H. Silter is the president and L. A. Mossman the cashier. The bank is capitalized at $5,000.

Le Sueur—Fred Berndt, a farmer of Sharon township, Le Sueur county, brought into town and sold to a horse dealer for $45 a horse fifteen years old that for the last thirteen years had been kept continuously in a barn on Mr. Berndt's farm, and had never been harnessed, nor ridden. He says that he has been no cause for this except the eccentricity of Mr. Berndt.

Otisville—Mrs. Peter Danielson, the last of the nonogenarians, died here, aged 92 years. The only two were Mrs. Erland Pederson, who died in January, at the age of 92, and Mrs. Maxine Holcombe, who died a few weeks ago, aged 94. The three came here in the early fifties from Sweden. They were members of the same church and were great friends.

St. Paul—Governor John A. Johnson has given out the edict that there will be no bonuses until May 1 in the general list of state capitol employees, now that the capitol commission has turned the new state house over to him. This gives the army of janitors, workmen, engineers and others thirty days more in which to hold office than many of them expected.

St. Paul—George Thompson is under arrest charged with passing Confederate bills and two-dollar bills on the Boston restaurant, 677 Wabasha street; F. M. Barrett, 97 West Central avenue, and the saloon of Geo. M. Schultz, 421 Mackubin street. It is said that he made a practice of entering stores where a small boy or girl was in charge and securing the bills in payment for small purchases.

St. Paul—The records of the building inspector's office show the number of building permits issued during March, 1907, was 198, while those issued in March, 1908, were reduced 125. Although there is only a gain of three this year there is an increase of $186,729 in the amount to be expended, that of 1908 being $241,644 while the total for last month was $111,384.

Minneapolis—Desire to get under the Sunday statute seems to be rife now with newly made friends made Michael Marston penniless last Sunday, when he was robbed of $35 by a gang of roughs who, he says, enticed him into the room of a saloon on First street north and made him unconscious by the use of drugs. The robbery was reported to the police Sunday afternoon and the matter was suppressed by the police.

Minneapolis—Hams, bacons and choice meats were stolen from the Royal Provision company, 106 Western avenue in such quantities that the police believe the thieves were used to haul away the plunder. Entrance was gained by breaking in the back door. Meanest Patrolman Harry Jones detected a pair of thieves trying to enter the grocery store of Kolling & Ginsberg, 403 Lake street east, the same night. When he tried to catch them they jumped several wire fences and as his horse could not follow they escaped.

Minneapolis—Nails again failed to agree perfectly with E. Wallace, who has done equally as humane ostrich in a circus sideshow, and he was operated on for a fourth time at the Minneapolis city hospital. Twenty-eight ten-penny nails were taken from the stomach. He is said to be recovering. His taste for articles of hardware is peculiar, and despite the operations he is forced to undergo he does not seem to be able to rid himself of the habit. Nails, pieces of glass and hairpins have been taken from his stomach in the different operations.

Breyer—Pietro Vallasa, an Italian laborer who works at the Canisteo mines near here, was notified yesterday that he is heir to a fortune of 172,800 left by a distant relative in Italy. The relative died intestate some years ago, Vallasa was the sole heir, but it took a long search before he was located. It is not likely that Vallasa had $20 to his name when the news of the fortune reached him. He quietly finished his day's work at the mines, went home and began his preparations for departure. He is not married and says that he will return to Italy, choose himself a wife and purchase an olive farm.

St. Paul—Fern Howard, the girl who stabbed her father with a butcher knife to save her mother's life, has appendicitis and has been taken from the county jail to the city hospital. An operation will be performed. Her father, who was thought to be fatally wounded, is improving daily and his chances for recovery seem excellent.

Faribault—A number of farmers around Faribault are making contracts with the Carver County Sugar Company for tracts of land for beet raising. This company will bring ten or more Russian families here to do the work. It will take from fifteen to thirty acres for each family.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, April 2—The legislature did but two things today, but those two are numbered among the most important actions of the session. The first was the acceptance of the report of the conference committee appointed to transmit the offer of settlement to the railroads of all differences between theso corporations and the state, and the passage of the two-cent fare bill as agreed upon. Action of rio recommendation that the offer of the roads be rejected. The second important action was striking death to the tonnage tax bill in the house, as a result of tho announcement that the United States Steel corporation has decided to establish an immense steel plant in the city of Duluth.

The two-cent fare bill as passed, provides a flat rate of 2 cents per mile for all distances as the maximum rate, permitting the roads at their discretion to make lower excursion rates. For children under 12 years, the rate is 1 cent per mile. Each passenger is allowed 150 pounds of baggage, except children under 12 who are allowed 75 pounds of baggage each. The penalty for violating the act is made a fine not to exceed $5,000, or imprisonment not to exceed five years. Tho vote on the bill in the senate, was 48 to 4. In the house the bill carried 105 to 4.

St. Paul, April 3—Reciprocal demurrage is now up to the Governor for his signature. The house of representatives this afternoon concurred in the few amendments the senate had made to the bill by a vote of 85 ayes, 2 nays. John G. Lennon of Minneapolis explained that he voted against the measure because he believed that without it the business he panied by a stringent anti-rebate law, it would be an aid instead of detriment to retaining. J. J. Dugall of Bemidji stated that since the amendment giving the school fund half the penalties collected had been dropped out of the measure, he was no longer in favor of it, and was for other members who voted against it.

The senate this afternoon had a spirited debate on the permanent tax commission bills substituted by the tax committee for one which had been introduced by George P. Wilson of Minneapolis. The measure was finally passed by a vote of 42 to 17 against. Strong arguments were made in its favor by Senators Wilson, Sullivan, and others. Senator George H. Lauerman offered an amendment to cut down salaries of the three commissioners to $3,600 each, from $6,000 as in the bill. It was defeated, an amendment fixing the salaries at $5,000, presented by Senator Wilson, was adopted. One other amendment of importance which prevailed, gives the commission all the powers formerly held by the state board of equalization.

The senate spent over an hour today debating the Sundstrom anti-pool ette bill. The bill was strongly opposed by Senator Farrington. It received attention that it was almost at aiding the youth of the state, but that it prohibited men, one and all, from being able to secure more than ninety-six cigarettes in Minnesota. He did not believe in cigarettes, he opposed them for boys particularly; but he could think the bill was too much of an infringement on individual rights. Senator Witherstine took the opposite view.

"Two years ago," he said, "I sent communications to the superintendents of the city schools, asking two questions. How many boys in those schools have failed to pass, and how many of such boys are cigarette fiends. The replies came that 2,000 failed, and that all of them used cigarettes."

The senate finally turned down a motion by Farrington to indefinitely postpone, and advanced the bill from general orders to the calendar on a motion of its author, Senator Sundberg.

The house railroad committee met in executive session this evening. The Roekne bill, regulating stock and bond issues of railroads and aimed at controverting the recent affirmation of the supreme court against the state of Great Northern $30,000,000 bond stock issue case, came very near getting a severe blow. The committee was unanimously voted to recommend the bill for indefinite postponement, but reconsidered this action and decided to have the bill referred to the judiciary committee to look in to its constitutional state of health.

St. Paul, April 4—The house today passed the bill to raise the salary of the governor from $5,000 to $7,000 a year. The bill got a bare necessary majority of one vote—60 in its favor, and 59 opposed. There were some interesting explanations of votes. "There is a constitutional provision that none of our illustrious members can be a candidate for this office if they vote for this bill," said Elias Rasche of Madison who voted no.

"I believe in commencing at the other end, and letting the faithful work in hospital nurse who is getting but $36 a month, have an increase," said R. J. Wells of Breckenridge.

Ten thousand dollars a year would not be too much for the governor of the great state of Minnesota," was the way Frank T. White of Elk River explained his affirmative vote.

An effort was also made by the house to pass the bill raising the salaries of district judges from $3,500 to $5,000, but the effort failed. Those who would have liked to raise them voted down by the close vote of 66 to 53. Elmer E. Adams of Fergus Falls put the attack on the bill with an eloquent address, stating at the outset that he believed he was "bucking a stone wall," but, in the end he won the day, the bill being returned to general orders where it is likely it will be amended to cut down the $5,000 figure.

The senate today devoted most of the time to two measures one a bill to regulate the fees of notaries public and the other a measure to provide for the roads to maintain a minimum speed of 15 miles an hour in cities where there are many stations and a great amount of business. The senate committee of the whole, however, recommended the bill to pass in its original form.

The senate spent considerable time debating the McGowan-Fosseen measure, which is an exact copy of the Mueller law of Illinois. It permits cities to condemn property of public service corporations and to issue bonds for the purchase of the same by these cities. The bill was finally recommended to pass, following eloquent appeals in its favor by Senators J. P. McGowan and Manly L. Fosseen of Minneapolis. Several amendments were attached, the most important being a requirement that any municipal ownership proposition must be submitted to the people and carried by a vote of three fifth of all voters before the terms of the bill may be further followed by the city councils.

St. Paul, April 5—The house committee of the whole this afternoon recommended for passage the bill to increase the salaries of members of the legislature, also offset the session following the terms of the present. The attorney general has rendered an opinion that this form of bill is constitutional and also that in voting for it, no member will prohibit himself from re-election. The bill grants an appropriation to each legislator of $500 per year of his term, instead of $5 for each day of the session now allowed, further provides that the speaker of the house and lieutenant governor shall receive $1,000 per year and the have $5 per day additional during session.

The bill repealing the corrupt practice act was passed by the senate today in amended form. Instead of repealing the entire law as was provided upon the amount any candidate may spend, after an election, though a strict accounting of such expenditures is required. Senator Gunderson made a somewhat lengthy speech in which he ascribed this placing of no limit on the amount a candidate may spend, almost entirely to the pernicious man against the unscrupulous.

The senate also passed the Sundgren state hail insurance bill after considerable debate. The bill provides for an optional tax on farm acreage for such farm owners as desire state hail insurance. Senator Mooman of Winsen led the opposition to the bill, claiming that it would result in all kinds of insurance. Senators Farrington, Alderman, Stephens, Henderson, and Fitzpatrick advocated the bill. The senate also passed the Thorpe double-liability bill today. This bill repeals the present law and re-enacts the old double liability law for holders of bank stock which was inadvertently wiped out by the code of 1905. The bill was enacted by the senate today because of amendments which were attached when it passed through the house. The amendments permit all banks organized since 1905 to come under the provisions of the double liability section, and provide further that such banks as do not do so in six months must publish on letter heads and all stationery, "Stockholders of this bank are under single liability."

The house today passed both the drainage bills of the session, one for drainage, providing for a comprehensive drainage plan for northern Minnesota. The original appropriations carried were striken from the bills and will be included in the general appropriation bill which will be put through the legislature a few days before the close of the session. The other drainage bill permits other the state drainage commission to do work on its own initiative or on petitions and bids for the work specified must pay assessment for their shro of cost of the ditches.

A twentieth century scientist claims that the world is to be saved by coal and by many green thoughts.—Chicago Daily News.

Awake to Needs of the Day.

Hungary spends $17,500,000 yearly on its technical and agricultural schools.

Failures Before Success.

The child creeps before it walks; the babe lisps and stutters before it talks. It is as impossible for a man to reach the heights of success at a single bound as it is for the young bird to leap into midair at the first attempt without passing successfully through several necessary stages of failure.—Exchange.

Sanban Receptacles.

These may be easily made from large goose eggs by puncturing the shells at the small end. Blow the top off about half an inch and turn out the yolks and whites. Glue the shell to green cardboard four inches square, on which print in yellow and silver an appropriate couplet. Paint the outside shell silver and decorate it with sprays of forget-me-nots. The inside may be tinted delicately with a coating of pale blue paint. Just before arranging the shells on the table fill them with assorted candies.

BROUGHT TO TERMS.

Husband (growling)—Supper ought to have been ready half an hour ago. When on earth are you reading?

Wife (sweetly)—Old love letters. Would you like to look over them?

"No—o, I don't care to be reminded of what a fool I was about you."

"Oh, these are not your letters. They are letters from former lovers."

"Er—by the way, my dear, you spoke about wanting to go to the opera tonight. I—I forgot about it, but I'll go right out and telephone for seats."—N. Y. Weekly.

Overdrawn.

"Henry, you look worried; what is the trouble?"

"I was stung to the quick by an order this afternoon."

"Heavens! How did it happen?"

"Why, I went to the bank this afternoon, and the bank clerk, after adding up his ledger, told me my account was overdrawn."

Too Free.

"Miss Prim was very angry about her admirer's taking out a marriage license without consulting her, wasn't she."

"Perfectly furious. She said as far as marrying her was concerned, it was a liberty, not license."—Baltimore American.

TO AVERT SUSPICION.

Lady—I've given you a shilling. What do you want more?

Nomadic Pete—Well, mum, that slop's got his eye on me. Won't yer just take me arm and talk fondly to me, and he'll think I'm yer old man and ask no questions.

It Mustn't Be Mentioned.

"They say old Grubbicson got rich by employing child labor, and grinding the little slaves down as hard as the law would let him."

"Yes. But shush! We mustn't say anything against him now. He has given $20,000 to be added to our orphan asylum fund, and is respectfully referred to as one of our most eminent philanthropists." — Chicago Record-Herald.

Hard on the Milk.

"The milk you use in bringing us of late is awfully watery," said the customer.

"Yes'm," replied the milkman, "but I can't help it. The country where we live is terribly flooded at present."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Doing Her Best.

Mr. Wickwire—What is that woman across the way trying to sing?

Mrs. Wickwire—My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon."

Mr. Wickwire—Well, if he doesn't hear her it isn't her fault. — Royal Magazine.

His Sale Inheritance.

Prospective Employer—Your parents left you something when they died, did they not?

Boy—Oh, yes, sir.

Employer—And what did they leave you my boy?

Boy—An orphans, sir.

Not Trusted.

"What kind of a tea is Mrs. Debit going to give?"

"Unless she comes to time with her tradesmen, I think she will have to give a guarantee."—Baltimore American.

The Only Reliable Sign.

"Do you take any stock in these open-winter prophets?"

"No. I don't believe the cold weather is over until my wife quits telling me we are out of coal."—Judge.

Knew Tea Much.

Purchaser—You told me that parrot I bought of you was the most intelligent bird in your collection, while the fact is he doesn't talk at all.

Dealer—That's what I meant when I spoke of his intelligence.

Insinuating.

"Would that I were up in the moon," Said the maiden sweet and fair;
And when the doddest asked her why,
She sighed and pointed to the sky—
And said: "There's a man up there!"
—Chicago Daily News.

On the Dot.

"Is your wife punctual?"

"To a fraction. We are never more than exactly three-quarters of an hour behind time anywhere. — Baltimore American.

Very Formal.

"Were they formally introduced?"

"Sure. They bumped right into each other on the ballroom floor."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

A SOG OF SPRIG.

Sprig is coldig I dow;
Balmy breezes tell me so:
Sood the buds will gladly swell,
All the birds have come to sell tell
Where the bradches gently sway—
Berry soon be sad the way.

Dowd the furrows od the hills
Bird the sparkling little rills
That bake sbong of the creeks,
Ad I hear the happy chickles
Of sweet bobolink sbringsters
Ad the world is full of hope.

Blow, bay barbles dow for keeps,
There is sudbies piled id sbood;
Id the lides the rugs are bug,
Slugs of apple are help ead;
Ah, by dose, 'tis refiood-hied!—
Yes, I add sure of the sood.
—Chicago Record-Herald.

Couldn't Have Stood It.

Jack—Was yours a long courtship, old fellow?

Will—Gracious, no! My wife had nine little brothers and sisters.

Jack—Suffering cat! But what difference did that make?

Will—What difference? Well, if you had to hitch a crowd like that to keep out of the drawing-room every time you went to see your girl, you would soon want to cut down the expense.—Royal Magazine.

Friendly Tip.

Hoax—Know that man on the corner?

Marks—No.

Hoax—Well, if you should ever form his acquaintance beware of him for he is one of those men who treat a fellow and then make him pay for it.

Marks—You don't say!

Hoax—Sure. He's a physician.—Chicago Daily News.

Made from Skimmed Milk.

"Why," said the village sage, looking at handkerchiefs, ink wells, cumbs, etc., are now made from skimmed milk," said the dealer in the latest fad.

"And one other thing you forget to mention is made out of skimmed milk," said the lady as he handed out the tickets.

"What's that, ma'am?"

"Money"—Yonkers statesman.

Her Helpful Suggestion.

"I have written an operatic poem," said Bardsley, "but I can't think of a title for it. You see it is one of those deep impressionistic things that are so beautiful and yet so elusive that it is hard to define them."

"Oh, well," replied his wife, "why don't you label it 'Aftermath?' That seems to fit almost any old kind of a poem."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Back-Yard Repartee.

The Dog—I'm going to play baseball in the spring.

The Cat—So? With what nine?

The Dog—With the nine I'm in.

The Cat—I'm going to study law or medicine, but haven't decided which.

The Dog—Maybe you have any choices?

The Cat—No. Both are in the feeline.—Chicago Daily News.

Careless Man.

"Tompkins is the most careless man I ever saw."

"What now?"

"He deliberately laid his bare hand on a stove in a hotel yesterday."

"Terribly burned, I suppose?"

"No. Frostbitten."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

HOUSEHOLD ART.

Mr. Hubby—My dear, can you patch these trousers into respectability?

Mrs. Hubby—I don't think I can, love; but if you let me have them I can put a pink bow on each side and a touch of paint. They will look ever so, nice!—Scraps.

Literal.

"Dear," she pleaded, "don't be cross with me. Our whole happiness may be at stake."

"If it's this steak," he retorted bitterly, as he sawed on with demoniac fury, "it has already come to a tough end."—Baltimore American.

The French Are Too Slow.

"We have never heard of French duels any more."

"Yes, but the French want to get their names in our papers they'll have to do something requiring the services of expert witnesses."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Of Course.

Penn—No; in a lump sum.—Chicago Daily News.

Singularistically Stated.

The Bookkeeper—That new assistant of mine is a paragon of incompetence.

The Stenographer—You mean that he is a lemon aid.—Judge.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 20, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The hen that lays the golden egg, is located in northern Minnesota all you have to do is to find her and start her to laying.

The present legislature has some back bone, and we were glad to see them show a little of it in the passage of the 2 cent milliage law.

There is always a class of people in every locality that get sore and want to drive out any business enterprise that locates in their part of the country. Take a new creamery for instance, there is always a certian class that are backing it and want to hurt its business for fear farmer Jones will make a few dollars out of the deal

With the price of stock on the increase and the new method that are being adopted to make cows profitable, this part of Red Lake county will soon be settled by a thrifty class of people from other states. All new countrys have to change a certian portion of their population before they advance much in wealth and improvements, and this part of Red Lake county is no exception to the rest, There is always a class of people that are natural pioneers, that have only one idea of getting a start in life and that is to go and get a homestead, prove it up as soon as possable, mortgage it for all they can get, and have some money, As soon as that class of people get run throw the wire to and get out of the country the prosperity begins to advance in the way of substancial improvements

There has been a few pompous liars that have been idustriously circulating the story that the mail service to Sunbeam was not regular and could not be depended on to do business over. The main on this root has not missed a single trip since the rout was established one year ago last November, as we have charge of this and of it to look after and don't contract with people to sit down and whine about bad roads but to carry that mail and they carry it, and if any one tells you that the mail does not come and go regular from Sunbeam just tell him for us that he is talking through his hat,

"WITHOUT CRIMINAL INTENT"

People are looking anxiously to our legislature for some measure of relief in the drainage matter, and some more rational way of taxation. This thing of taxing a farmers cream separator sewing machine, cooking chair and dishes and letting the banks, trusts and railroad companies escape with millions of dollars worth of untaxed securities, is a little too much like letting a big thief escape because he stole "without criminal intent." If we are going to have a square deal let us have it where the laws shall fit the high and low, the rich and poor alike. Mr. Perkins took $54,000 of other people's money "withoutcriminal intent."

Now about the 4th class postmaster at Ashington, a few years ago, who issued a money order to a person who had a deposit in the postmaster's bank and the money not being handed over just all that time, the postmaster was sent to the penitentiary! There was no "criminal intent" here, But there is a great deal of difference between a 4th class postmaster and a first class frenchied financier, —Middle River Pioneer.

Now that the brutal murders of the Bible have been found and convicted of murder in the first degree the extreme penalty of the Minnesota law should be meated out to them, without fear or favor, as a warning to other people who might be inclined to butcher a helpless old man and a defenseless female for a few paltry dollars. Let there be no ples made to prevent those men from a walk to the execution room between the hours of midnight and Sunrise. They showed no mercy and are not entitled to receive any.

An Art Apostle.

Hyman Rosewater, founder and editor of the Omaha Bee, had a shocking fury of art. He hated pictures that imitated stamped work, so called impressionistic pictures that were merely rough and hurried sketches and so called portraits that bore no likeness to their originals. A young painter showed Mr. Rosewater one day a portrait of a mutual friend.

"That a portrait of Smith?" the editor exclaimed. "I'd never have known it."

"Oh," the artist exclaimed, "I didn't try for a likeness, you know. I tried for an effect—an effect in grays."

"I know a man in New York," said Mr. Rosewater, "who had his portrait painted last year. It cost him $4,000, and he was very proud of it. When it came home he showed it to his cook.

"'Well, Mary,' he said, 'how do you like this portrait?'

"'Sure, sir,' said the cook, 'it's lovely. It's beautiful. It's divine.'

"'And of course,' said my friend, 'you know who it is?'

"'Oh, of course I do, sir,' said the cook. 'Of course, of course.' As she spoke she kept drawing nearer to the picture, studying it more and more closely. 'Of course, sir,' she said, 'it's you or the mistress.'—Buffalo Enquirer.

The Sultan's Rubaiyat.

An ambassador of a well known Burmese monarch was riding to the streets of Constantinople when one of the sultan's carriages rolled by. Seeing it was guarded, his curiosity got the better of him, and when the carriage reached him he was daring enough to peep in at the passenger. He was gunpowdered and pained to receive a blow in the face from an attendant in charge. Mad with rage, he demanded audience of the sultan. The sultan listened attentively and for a moment appeared lost in thought. At last he spoke: "My dear ——, it have grieving into the case and see exactly how it stands. You see, of course, a gentleman. Therefore you would never have committed such a breach of good manners as you allege to have taken place. Therefore my attendant could possibly have struck you. The whole affair seems to be a product of your fancy. Let us discuss it."

"Namlez" a Number.

It is an ancient belief that a man's name has some mysterious sympathy with his nature, whence arises such stories as that of Rumpelstiltskin, whose power over a human being was at the moment that his name was pronounced aloud. It has been suggested with some show of reason that the modern practice of "naming" a refractory member of the British house of commons is merely a survival of this belief, which the Norsemen brought into England.

A Miss That Brought Death.

Courtship in Spain is regulated by the strictest etiquette. As is well known, a young man is never left alone with his fiancee. Near Malaga a beautiful young girl of twenty committed suicide by drinking a cup of coffee in which phosphorus had been dissolved. It appears that the girl had been driven to the deed by the adverse comments of neighbors who became aware that she had given her sweetheart a kiss.—London Mail.

The Family Game.

Mother (coming into the children's room)—Rosie, what are you making all that terrible noise over? Look at Hugo. See how quiet he sits there, Rosie—Yes, it's easy for him to sit quiet, the game we are playing. He is a pape, who has come home late, and I am—you.—Wiener Salonwitzblatt.

Explicit.

The Kodiak postoffice authorities have issued a general blanket way of putting things. Copies of a Penang paper posted to a subscriber were the other day returned marked, "Addressee hanged for murder."—Bangkok Times.

Too Much of a Good Thing.

Dobson—What became of that man who had twenty-seven medals for saving people from drowning? Dock Worker—He fell in one day when he had them all on, and the weight of 'em sunk him.

Only An Episode.

Mary—Uncle Ned, what's a honeymoon? Bachelor Uncle—The time between the marriage and the divorce.—Meerendorfer Blatter.

All the News.

A wise editor says: "A man told me the other day that we did not publish all the things that happened. We should say not. In the first place, there is scarcely any dependence to be put in a society item. If we printed all that happens we would soon be with the angels. In order to please the people we must print only the nice things said of them and leave the rest to gossip. Yet it's a fact we don't publish all the news. If we did wouldn't it make spicy reading? But it would be for one week only; the next week you would read our obituary. All the news is all right when it's about the other fellow."

Japanese "street" Music.

A curious ceremony is performed in Japan by the court musicians at certain Shinto festivals. Both stringed and wind instruments are used, but it is held that no sound should be allowed to fall upon unworthy ears, and, as some of the ears present might be unworthy, all the motions of playing are gone through by the musicians, but not a single sound is heard. This strange custom dates back many generations, but since the advent of civilization has rapidly lost favor.

What Puzzled Her,

A women whose religious education had been received in the plain edifice erected by an unassuming New England congregation was persuaded, much against her will, to attend divine service in one of New York's most showy churches. She showed from the start that, notwithstanding her puritanical training, she was interested in the proceedings. She studied the elaborate ceremony, the architecture, the lofty tinted windows and the altar decorations closely. By and by her eyes became fixed on the ceiling. For half a quarter of an hour particular feature of those lofty heights held her attention for so long a time. During a lull in the chanting of the choir she tried to find out.

"Oh," said the New England woman in tones of infinite concern, "I was just wondering how on earth they get away up there to dust the rafters!" —New York Post.

What Is "All Wool?"

I have met a county magnate, a wealthy man who would not be put off with anything but the best, if he knew it, clad in a handsome "homespun" suit; the delicate blue gray mixture of which happened to know was produced by the judicious blending of old blue stockings, such as navvies wear with old white stockings. I have seen a "society" lady in a stylish "blanket tweed" motor coat, the composition of which I knew to be of such a nature that it might very easily owe its existence in part to the contents of hosiery manufactured by an auxiliary mill, collected from the ash bin. Even the judge trying a case of "misrepresentation of goods" may, as likely as not, be unconsciously sitting in somebody else's thrown away rags that he has bought as "all wool."—A Woolen Manufacturer in Grand Magazine.

Child Love.

Welcome to the parents the pure youngster, strong in his weakness, his little arms more irresistible than the soldier's, his lips touched with persuasion when Chadband and Pericles in manhood had not. His unaffected blessedness when he lifts up his voice consciously sitting in somebody else's and his candor, his beauty and its unlawful end dangered collapsed.—Blackwood.

Edward Singer and Henry Peterson, were the first fisher men to arrive from Deer Park Monday but the ice was not out enough for fishing yet.

The ice does not show any inclination to move out of the river yet, and this year promises to be a record breaker, for the river holding up to its winter cost.

Frank A Zavoiel of this Township is making preperation to go into stock raising and farming on quite an extensive scale this season, and will break quite a lot of land this year.

There is a large amount of snow in the woods yet, and if it should go off with rain, ther will be a big flood up this way, as the river is up to hight water mark now.

Thief Riverite's law it out on Red Lake Falls stealing the county seat petition, and Red Lake Falls says Thief River Falls stole it, because it was no good; but anyhow the petition is gone.

If all the takers of shares in the farmers boat company had paid, "I will pay the amount I subscribed when I see the boat running on the river." Where would the hard cash come from to build the boat?

There now what do you High Landing fellows think of this? Born to Mr. Mrs. Will Rodman, of Deer Park Township, on Saturday evening last, two sons, weight 7 lbs each. Mother and babies are doing well, and William happy as usual. No race suicide in Deer Park township

Elmer Eve landed the first 10 pound pickeral of the season in Sunbeam creek on Wednesday. The poor fish stuck his nose out from under the ice to get a fresh breath of air, after his long winter of darkness, and he was fried for breakfast the next morning.

There are tons of fish taken out of the mouth of Sunbeam creek every spring, and we have always welcomed any one that wanted to fish there, but we draw the line on fish nets. No fish nets will be allowed to be placed in the creek. Fish all you want to in wolcodin but you must use spears, pitchforks, guns, hook and line, or garden rakes, and leave your fish nets at home. 3 9 14

Cheap Good Fellowship.

There was some parties who generously signed their names for a few dollars to the framers boat company, just to make a good fellow of themselves until they got their land proved up and got out of the country. They have no intentions of paying the amount they subscribed, but just signed to be a good fellow. Now if this coat fits you nicely, don't be offended but just put it on and wear it, and remember we are not charging you 8 cents a line for this.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Lillo a baby girl on March 2nd.

Charls W. Johnson, found about two gallon of fine honey in a large oak tree that he cut down the other day. The honey was fine and good but the bees were either froze to death, or distroyed, in some other way. How they came there is a mystery, as there is no trees for fifteen miles or more from here.

Sam B Swanson left for Thief River Falls, last Tuesday, for work at the saw mill as licamster and will be gone about two months.

Charles W. Johnson, has been the busiest man in Rhoda, this week, He has kept three men and two teams going getting home ste supply of fence posts. Charles intends to fence his farm, and also seed it into clover, this comeing Summer.

From Clearwater Creamery.

M. George Singer was the first to register as one of our creamery patrons on April 2nd, and will deliver about 300 pounds of cream weekly

Edward B. Hayek the Grit merchant is delivering cream to the creamery from his customers, and says he believes this creamery will pull through and prove to be a good investment.

Patrons of the creamery should be careful about milking, to do it in a cleanly way and not get "cow flavor" in your cream Strain immediatly into cans after milking each cow, as a little care in this respect will keep any bad flavor from your milk.

The board of directors of the Clearwater Creamery association will meet at the Creamery on April 19th at 1 o'clock P. M.

George Eliot's Savonarola.

Savonarola is one of the most striking characters in George Eliot's great historical novel "Romola," the scene of which is in Florence and the period that of Savonarola's career. The idea of writing the book occurred to the novelist while on a visit to Florence. Based on a second visit to the city in 1861, she began to carry out her project. The subject and design were foreign to the author's genius, but she spared no pains in making a thorough study of the locality, the people and the literature of the Italian renaissance for the purposes of her story. In her own words, the work "plowed into her more than any of her books. She began it, she says, as a young woman and finished it as an old woman. Her picture of Florence and Savonarola is undeniably impressive, and some critics declare "Romola" to be George Eliot's greatest novel and the character of Savonarola one of the most distinctive.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

His Modest Claim.

A claim for damages against a railroad company is so often a license for exorbitant charges that a supple bill, such as was received by an American railroad company many years ago, even apart from its humorous aspect, is refreshing. It ran as follows:

The — and — Railroad company ... Dr.
to John Smith

July 18, 1887.—To running your Locomotive into my wife, as per Doctor's bill for curing her $10.00
To smashing her box and spilling her hay 2.87
To upsetting my deer born (wagon) and breaking it 25.00
To hurting me 5.00

$42.87

There is authority for stating that the claim was paid immediately.—Scrap Book.

Her Chilly Retort.

The late Dr. — of Malden, after pouring forth the story of his undying love in the most touching manner, over an hour to a young woman who he hoped would become his fourth wife, was refused the second time. He started for the door; but, looking around, he said in a most thunderous tone, "By heavens, you are the coldest woman I ever saw!"

The young woman looked up and answered sweetly:

"Oh, no, doctor; you have seen three colder than I!"—Boston Herald.

A Curious Notice.

This curious official notice was once published in Germany: "At the request of Herr Wilhelm Leigson of Innsbruck the seaman, Johan Leigson, who was married in May, 1883, on a journey from Stockholm to Hamburg in the Kaiser Friedrich, is hereby called upon by the courts to appear and report himself on or before April 1, 1891, under pain of being declared dead."

To Scrape an Acquaintance.

"To scrape an acquaintance" was originated by the Emperor Hadrian. Once when visiting the public bath he found an old veteran scraping himself with a piece of broken crockery in lieu of an iron or copper scraper. Hadrian gave him a sum of money to provide the necessary materials for a bath and on his next visit to the institution found it full of veterans scraping themselves with potsherds. "Scrape away, gentlemen, but you shall not scrape an acquaintance with me," was Hadrian's comment as he went out.

Luck and Reputations.

"Nobody gifted with a sense of humor can fail to be diverted by the Puck-like manner in which luck mixes and mismixes reputations for business ability," says Will Payne in Everybody's. "Years ago a gentleman named Jennings was an extensive owner of downtown real estate in Chicago. He was the first, I believe, to develop on a large scale the modern system of the ninety-nine year lease, whereby the owner insures to himself and his heirs for a century an absolutely fixed rental, free and clear of all charges. After Mr. Jennings had leased a lot of his lands for ninety-nine years a depression came on. Other people's incomes were curtailed, but his was stable. 'What foresight!' said the town. 'What sagacity!' 'What superb business judgment!' Mr. Jennings' views on the business situation and outlook were eagerly sought. The depression passed. Realty prices advanced immensely. The Jennings lots could have been released at twice the rental named in the old indenture. The town shook its head sympathetically over poor Mr. Jennings' deplorable shortsightedness."

How She Died.

A minor poet who talked of his lady's person being "curiously mix'd" would not be enthusiastically received nowadays. But so startlingly beautiful was the lady in question, one Susanna Perwich, who died of rheumatic fever at Hackney on July 3, 1601, "in the flower of her age," that these lines in praise of her have not only been preserved, but they have even escaped classification with nonsense verse. This explanation is, perhaps, necessary before quoting the inspired account of her death:

Behold, deep rivets
Cling close about her in the bed,
At which she's waiting said, "I'm dead!"
Sin! I the careless maid go blame
And let her who's a harrid shame
It is—at by her neglect.
So choice a one is lost from hence!

Dancing.

It is quite usual after a ball to find that the action of the heart shows traces of fatigue, particularly in delicate young women, who complain of a vague sensation of uneasiness, sadness and even of pain and are, in a word, in a peculiar condition that is not yet disease, nor is it health—much nearer the former than the latter. Diseases caused by dancing are commoner in women than in men. The most frequent are laryngitis, particularly in women who talk a great deal while dancing; colds, bronchitis and sometimes pneumonia and pleurisy. Dancing should be absolutely forbidden in all cases of consumption, which may examine a very rapid form from this cause. It is perhaps hardest on us in all cases of heart trouble.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

A Fruitless Infatuation

By T. W. Hanshew

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Miss Sadie Pettifer, whose papa had made his pile in oil before he departed for a place where he could no longer corner any, first appeared upon the horizon of Lord Clarrickston's existence at a dance in London.

Miss Sadie smiled one of her beautiful $10,000,000 smiles upon him, and Miss Pettifer's limp of a brother—aged 14—in return for favors received in the way of box seats, secretly imparted the intelligence that Ma and Sade were hunting the bargain counters for a title and had come over to see what was in the market worth hookin' up to.

Clarrickston was "in the market" for one. Very much in the market, with an eyebrow 500 years old, a mortgage of £80,000 on his ancestral acres, a racing stud, a yacht and one of unpaid bills to paper a room large enough to hold both.

But the sudden death of a relative had called the Pettifers home before the winning post was even in sight, and, by a singular coincidence—as Clarrickston put it in his letter written day afterward his doctor ordered him to take a sea voyage and over he came in their wake.

As Miss Pettifer's season almost had not been what might be called a howling success and the bidders for her long purse and short upper lip were neither so many nor so eager as she could have wished, Clarrickston was received with open arms and a big dinner party.

But in an evil hour Master Tommy, plotting to return some of the favors shown him abroad as well as to exhibit one of the institutions of his country, had suggested a visit to the new-arrived Hippodrome where "the Papillon, the World's Greatest and Most Beautiful Aerial Artiste" was nightly performing her breath-stifling feats. Now the whole race of Clarrickston had been heavily worshipers of the first and most reckless order.

He haunted the stage door of the Hippodrome as the Thomas Cat haunts the side hiding place of the freshly-purchased sardish, but if she ever came forth he saw her not; for the women who loosed at the close of each performances were young enough to face the world unveiled and not one of them bore even the remotest resemblance to the object of his worship.

He sat down and wrote a letter and sent it to her with a great bunch of scarlet carnations and asparagus fern, asking her, out of pity for him to wear his flowers if she were not a married woman and to discard them if she was. And lo! within the hour she came on for her "turn" that night arrayed from head to foot in white and silver, a little clearer of his colorations was pinned upon her shoulder.

He flew next morning to Tiffany's and exchanged 10% of the 500 pounds he had brought over with him to lay siege to the ultman's heiress, for a crescent of diamonds, clear as a sliver of ice, and sent it to his inamorata asking her, if there was any hope for him, to wear it on her person that night. And behold! when he looked at her next—standing on the stage and waiting to be hauled up by her teeth to the nickeled bar above—the diamond crescent blazed in a broad half-loop of rainbow splendor on the wide band of velvet she always wore about her throat.

Once, and once only, she had gone to the length of answering his frequent appeals with a note, and that, although it lifted him up to the seventh heaven of human happiness at the time, began at last to weigh upon his spirit after the fashion of "a hope deferred."

"Dear Sir," that note ran. "I cannot tell you how much I appreciate your kindness. The beau boy on me, and the happy circumstance which has brought you into my life. I do not know why I write you, for I have never answered a man's notes before, and I may say without boasting that I have received hundreds of them. I do not care for men; they have no interest for me, or, at least, they never did until you came into my life. If you would have that interest grow, I beg of you do not seek to make me better for a time at least. Let me study you and study myself, and some day—when I am quite, quite sure it is best for us both—I will yield to your wishes and consent to meet you. When that day comes, however, I will write and tell you.

For two weeks Clarrickston wore that letter next his undershirt and faithfully read it each night before going to bed.

It was at this period he happened to fall foul of a newspaper which gave a glowing account of an abnormally large Sunday gathering at Coney Island whereat—according to the reporter—"pretty nearly every body of note in the 'show business' was, as usual, present," and this put an idea into his head.

He dressed himself in his Bond street best and flew to Coney by specially chartered trolley. If she was there he caught no glimpse of her, however; but that did not deter him from going again the next day, and the next, and the next after that, until another week had gone and Despatch out once more upon the heartsore of his Hopes.

By this time he and become convinced that search for her in this particular section of the universe was as unlikely to produce the desired result as watching the stage door of the Hippodrome had been, and he had just made up his mind to abandon the field when something happened which sent a sort of electrical shock zigzagging up and down his spinal column.

It was merely the passing of a young woman—a very gaudily-dressed student-voiced young woman who, in endeavoring to get by him in the crowd and join some other gaudily dressed young women who had come on in advance, had managed to catch the lace flounce of her parasol in the prongs of his jeweled scarf pin.

And it was here that Clarrickston received his first shock. For, in the fraction of time her hands had been busy tangling at the lace, he had seen sparkling on her wrist the identical jeweled bracelet he had sent to La Papillon in the early days of his infatuation.

Clarrickston waited until she was near the door and then walked forward and met her

"Well, I've run you down you see," said Clarrickston, severely. "I hope you know, young woman, that it's a criminal offense to be found in possession of stolen property."

"I didn't steal anything."

"I'll know more about that when I have come to you with the person to whom I gave the bracelet you are wearing and heard from her whether you have got it or not."

"She hasn't lost it, I tell yer. She lent it to me—she always lends it to me."

"I'll believe that when I hear her say so."

"I tell yer she won't see yer. Now let it go at that."

"Look here!" she said, laying a slender hand in Clarrickston's sleeve. "She's in there now a gettin' ready for her 'turn,' I know, for I'd ought to been here half an hour ago to help with her clothes. Now, if I go agin orders and take you behind and let you speak to her will you take your solemn oath not to say I stole the things and not to prosecute nor nothin'? Will yer?"

Clarrickston thought of nothing, cared for nothing, but the chance to speak with Her—the one "Her" in all the world for him—and let his hand slide from the woman's shoulder.

"Yes," he said, eagerly. "Yes, I will."

Her hand closed tighter on his sleeve; she half led, half raced him along the pavement and in through the stage entrance, and up through dusty stairs and winding ways lit by dimly-burning, wire-hooded gas jets to a room beneath the stage. The door was closed. She pushed it open and drew Clarrickston in.

The lights were burning brightly enough here. All round the room hung the costumes Clarrickston now knew by heart and, at the far end where a wig of long light hair hung on a peg, a young fellow of two or three and twenty was shaving himself before a little mirror propped up on the dressing-room shelf.

The mirror reflected the face of the woman as she entered, and the man, catching a glimpse of it, drew the razor almost his jaw and also cut cheerily, "Hello, Mag! What the dickens kept yer?"

Clarrickston forward. "He was goin' to have me pinched for wearin' that bracelet, Jimmy—as though a woman ain't got a right to wear what's gave to her husband, if he lets her!"

The shaver turned neross the narrow room.

"This kep' me!" said "Mag," pushing off the English mug" he said. "And we'd a been off to Clapham ages afterward his doctor ordered him to take a sea voyage and over he came in their wake.

As Miss Pettifer's season almost had not been what might be called a howling success and the bidders for her long purse and short upper lip were neither so many nor so eager as she could have wished, Clarrickston was received with open arms and a big dinner party.

Hand Should Never Be Pressed Against the Face

Stop using your elbows as props. Teach your chin to hold itself up, and don't lean your cheek upon your hand. Per this there is not one reason, but a dozen. The wrinkled cheek is caused by the pressure of a hot hand upon the skin. The hand is warm and often grimy. It heats the skin and marks it. It presses its tiny wrinkles deeply, and, what is worse, it draws down the cheek until it bags at the neck.

Pressing the hand under the chin is worse. It doubles the chin and makes it yellow and baggy. Taking it all in all there is not one reason why the hand should be pressed against the face, and there are many reasons against it. Yet there are women who habitually press the hand upon the cheek, using the elbow as a prop.

An elbow that has served to hold up the head is hard and often positively lumpy. You can see so few pretty elbows these days. In place of the coaxed-in oval dimple there is a big hard lump, sometimes even a protruding bone scarcely covered by skin. And sometimes the skin is rough and coarse grained, looking like the flesh of a goose. And it is mostly all due to the fact that the suffering elbow has been used as a prop.

If your elbows have fallen into bad habits and if their skin has grown hard as a bone and tough as tripe it is time to take them in hand and treat them. Buy a little box of finely powdered pumice and mix it with some shaved soap. Take a soft little scrubbing brush and go over your elbows with the sandy mixture and don't stop until you have scrubbed the roughness off. Then lather your elbows with cold cream and draw something over them to protect them.

There is another bad thing about propping up your head with your elbows. You make your shoulders high and in most cases you make them uneven. This is saying nothing at all about the fact that you spoil the set of your gown. Women who sit with their elbows upon the table are usually of the impression that they make themselves more charming by doing so. Actually there isn't one in a thousand who is beautiful enough to stand the test.

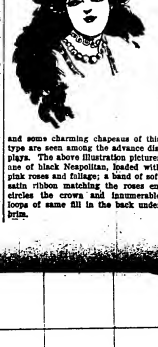
Ons of the Prettiest of the Advance Sesson Crestions.



A dainty toilet is fashioned of cream-colored chiffon cloth and empire green radium velvet. The skirt is simply plaited and finished with a border of the velvet, above which are handsome incrustations of lace applique in cream and pale green. The applique continues up the skirt to the waist line, where it is met by a girdle of white satin.

The fitted bodice is cut with a round neck, and shows a vest of embroidered chiffon cloth at the neck with a little ruching of net and real valenciennes lace. Draped over the body is a fichu bolero of empire green velvet, with the right side crossing over to the left and fastening under a large flat silver buckle. The bolero is bordered with beautiful green and cream-colored silk print. Puffed sleeves of embroidered chiffon cought with silver buckles and gauged into cuffs of velvet and lace complete the detail of what has been voted one of the prettiest of advance season crenlions.

STYLE HAS CAUGHT FANCY.

Mushroom Modal of Millinery Will Be Much Worn.

The mushroom model of winter millinery promises to retain its hold on fashion's fancy during the summer, and some charming chapeaus of this type are seen among the advance displays. The above illustration pictures one of black Neapolitan, loaded with pink roses and foliage; a band of soft satin ribbon matching the roses encircles the crown and innumerable loops of same fill in the back under brim.

TWO OF THE LATEST MODES.

Ornamental Gowns Designed for the Warm Weather.

The gown at the left is of light-weight gray-green cloth. The blouse is made with lapped seams and is embroidered with a fine soutache. It is finished at the outside with edges of velvet, and the collar is also of velvet embroidered with soutache. The little waistcoat is of the material ornamented with tiny buttons and the chemisette is of lace. The sleeves are finished with lace ruffles and turnover cuffs of velvet trimmed with soutache.

The skirt with eight breadths is trimmed at the bottom with bias bands of the material and velvet headed by the fine soutache embroidery. The draped girdle is of the material or of duchess satin to match.

The costume at the right is of gray cloth trimmed with silk braid, embroidery and applications of velvet. The skirt is encircled at the bottom with a group of tucks headed by the trimming.

The blouse, similarly trimmed, has a yoke and sleeve puffs of white batiste, the former gathered to form little frills and trimmed with a festooned fold of the cloth. The collar is of guipure and the girdle is of duchess satin.

Elegant Parisian Gown.

A handsome evening gown of white satin being copied from a French model in black has an its skirt several inset bands of lace in a deep scallop design. At the points of these lace scallops are posed little clusters of roses and narrow velvet ribbons are draped in fluttering loops from one cluster of roses to another. A similar arrangement of flowers and ribbons ornaments the lace collar and the short sleeves and three big straas and pearl buttons hold the slight drapery of the robe at the waist.

CARE OF THE SICK ROOM.

Above All Things the Walls Should Be Kept Dry.

When the bedroom becomes a sick room there is an added reason why extreme precautions should be used to keep the room in a thoroughly sanitary condition.

Above all things, the bedroom should never be damp. It should be nice and dry, always warm and comfortable in winter, cool and airy in summer, and bright and sunny some parts of the day.

If there is any suspicion of dampness in a bedroom it is probably due, if there is wallpaper on the wall, to the absorption of water by the paper which frequently acts as a blotting paper and holds quantities of water in it.

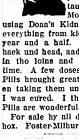
The use of wallpaper on walls is to be deplored; it means disease, ill health and unhappiness. It is frequently the cause of lung trouble, not only because of its dampness but also because of its power to retain infection of many kinds.

The favored method of treating a bedroom wall is to tint it for the absorbtined wall is a perfect wall. It never flakes off, chips or peels. It absorbs moisture and expels it, it opens the pores of the plaster and makes a room livable and breathable.

The floor in the bedroom should have light, cleanable, dainty rugs that can be easily shaken and a floor that is thoroughly oiled or varnished, that will not absorb moisture. The cracks in the floor should be thoroughly filled and covered. Woodwork in the bedroom should be attended to carefully, window sills should be thoroughly varnished or waxed, and the window ensings kept in perfect order. The doors should be wiped off frequently as also should he all the standing woodwork in the bedroom, as the presence of dust on woodwork is a menace to health as well as an evidence of poor housekeeping.

WOMEN IN NEW FIELDS.

British Smart Society Takes to "Hopping"—Woman Veterinary.



Work in the hop fields is the latest "rest cure" fad for London's smart set, and the luxurious society "hoppers" claim that a week's hopping is far better and more pleasant than a rest at any well-known health resort.

The tents of these well-to-do pickers are expensively furnished, and easy chairs, soft beds and up-to-date sanitary outfits are among their hopping appliances.

In Berlin there is a woman veterinary surgeon who is an official inspector of animals. She rides through the streets on the lookout for animals suffering from any disablement, and before reporting a horse as unfit for work, she examines its injuries and whenever possible applies remedies to alleviate its pain. She carries a leather case filled with bandages and other surgical appliances.

TIRED BACKS.

The kidneys have a great work to do in keeping the blood pure. When they get out of order it causes backache, headaches, dizziness, languor and distressing urinary troubles. Keep the kidneys well and all these sufferings will be saved you. Mrs. S. A. Moore, proprietor of a restaurant at Waterville, Me., says: "Before using Doan's Kidney Pills I suffered everything from kidney troubles for a year and a half. I had pain in the back and head, and almost continual fin the loins and felt weary all the time. A few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills brought great relief, and I kept on taking them until in a short time I was cured. I think Doan's Kidney Pills are wonderful."

Disliked the Word "Death."

"Decease" is now a regular form of word for death. But it began as a gentle euphemism, "decesus" (departure) seeming much less harsh to the Romans than "mors." All languages abound in euphemisms of the kind, which go back to a superstitious reluctance to mention death plainly, that gradually passed into a kindly desire to soften the idea. "Passed away," "departed," "gone," "expire" (breathe out), "no more," "demise," and even "the late" are expressions of this nature. Most striking of all is the Roman euphemism for "he is dead"—"vixit," he has lived.

Could Not Afford Title.

Many times did the German emperor press the title of prince upon Herr Ballin, the Baltow before the latter would accept. The statesman wanted the title, but could not afford to live up to it. Of this the banker knew nothing, of course. At length, about 18 months ago, a relative of Von Ballow died, leaving him $1,250,000. A few days later he showed the kaiser a legal notification of his good fortune. The monarch smiled. "So that was the reason—my prince," he said, laying stress on the title. "Why did you not say so before?"

HONEST MEDICINE

TRY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS FOR STOMACH TROUBLE.

Convincing Evidence Supported by a Guarantee That Must Convince The Most Skeptical.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a doctor's prescription, used by an eminent practitioner, and for nearly a generation known as a reliable household remedy throughout the United States. Needless to say, no advertised medicine could retain popular favor for so long a period without having real merit and it is the invaluable curative properties of the pills that have made them a standard remedy in every civilized country in the world. Added to this is the absolute guarantee that the pills contain no harmful drug, opiate, narcotic or stimulant. A recent oviduce of their efficacy is found in the statement of Mrs. N. B. Whitley, of Boxley, Ark., who says:

"I had suffered for a good many years from stomach trouble. For a long time I was subject to bad spells of faintness and lack of breath accompanied by an indescribable feeling that seemed to start in my stomach. Whenever I was a little run-down or over-tired, these spells would come on. They occurred frequently but did not last very long.

"I was confined to my bed for ten weeks one time and the doctor pronounced my trouble chronic inflammation of the stomach and bowels. Since that time I have been subject to the fainting spells and at other times to fluttering of the heart and a feeling as though I was smothering. My general health was very bad and I was weak and trembling.

"I had seen Dr. Williams' Pink Pills mentioned in the newspapers and decided to try them. When I began taking the pills I was so run-down in strength that I could hardly do any housework. Now I could work when mind necessary. Both my husband and myself think Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the best medicine made and we always recommend the pills to our friends."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood and give strength and tone to every part of the body. They have cured serious disorders of the blood and nerves, such as rheumatism, sciatica, anaemia, nervousness, headaches, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, St. Vitus' dance and many forms of weakness in either sex. They are sold by all druggists or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Sheep Raising In Australia.

The greatest industry of Australia is sheep raising, mainly for the sake of the wool, but also in part, of course, for the meat. Australia now ranks second among the great sheep-raising countries of the world, but is at with 92,000,000 sheep, Australia accond with 72,000,000, and Russia third with 70,000,000. Only a few years ago Australia was first, possessing no less than 106,350,000 head of sheep. That was in 1891. Prolonged drought was the cause of the destruction of many millions of Australian sheep, but since 1902 there has been an annual gain. Yet these sheep were not indigenous to Australia. They were first introduced in 1797, being of the Spanish merino species.

Painting for Profit

No one will question the superior appearance of well-painted property. The question that the property-owner asks is: "Is the appearance worth the cost?"

Poor paint is for temporary appearance.

Paint made from Pure Linseed Oil and Pure White Lead is for lasting appearance and for protection. It saves repairs and replacements costing many times the investment.

The Dutch Boy trade mark is found only on kegs containing Pure White Lead made by the Old Dutch Process.

POULTRY AND BEES

A GATE WITHIN A GATE.

Convenient Arrangement for the Poultry Yard Door.

The accompanying cut almost explains itself. It is an ordinary gate in the poultry fence. The little gate is put in where three slats have been cut off at the bottom. To make a gate take two narrow, thin pieces of board of length to nearly fill the space. Get several stiff pieces of large wire, heavy enough to stop hens. Crease the board for each wire or one of them, place the end of a wire in each crease, and nail the boards together and the little gate is made. Staples may be used if desired. To hang it, drive a large nail into each end, length wise between the boards, and fasten to the bottom of the large board in the large gate by means of long staples.

When you open the large gate the small one is carried with it. When mischievous Biddy has somehow found her way into the garden and don't know the way back as she went in, she will always come to the gate. This device affords a way out which she will naturally use, because there is more clear space than anywhere else in the fence. As she pushes against it, it swings out, and up out of her way, but should she attempt to go the other way the stationary bottom board holds the lower end of the wire.

By the way, says Prairie Farmer, this board should be at the bottom of every gate of this kind anyway. Instead of nailing it to the post directly nail a block on each post and the board should be nailed to the blocks, thus allowing the gate to fit into place better and prevent crawling under.

Or another way to make a gate is this: Take one board and fasten wires on with nails or staples, and if you do not wish to use hinges, use a piece of wire long enough to run by each end of rails and fasten loosely by staples to slat at each end. This will do anywhere in the fence.

WHY THEY FAIL.

The Danger of Capital in the Poultry Business.

When it comes to capital in the poultry business, my observation is that hundreds who undertake it on a big scale have too much money. If they had less money they would need to grow the business up, and in the end would come out of the big end of the horn instead of the little end, says a writer in Farmers' Review. Rightly so, the first year of the poultry business should be a sort of students' course; that is I mean if he has in view making the business his entire business. Of course, he would need some money, but not to the extent of selling it capital. An able-bodied man should be able to earn some money on the side for the first year. To me he would appear as on the right track if he did so. Sincerely so, I am sick and tired of the idea prevalent in some quarters that most any one can, with a log of money, some machinery, a simple twist of the wrist and a wise look, revolutionize the whole poultry business in just a few weeks. I verily believe that the money wasted in the poultry business would comfortably house every hen on the face of the earth. If I can do no other good than to encourage those who have no capital and discourage those who want to spend a lot of money, I have, after all, accomplished considerable. There is nothing that lives and walks that can beat a hen for paying her own way and ours as we go along, and great capital to start with would be an intimation that they are expensive to keep instead of money earners.

Need of Grass Food.

As the hatching season approaches, the necessity for furnishing plenty of green food is increased. Cabbage, mangel wurzel, turnips and refuse vegetables and fruits of all kinds are suitable and satisfactory for the purpose. They should be fed separately, either chopped fine and placed in troughs at regular intervals, perhaps three times a week, or should be hung up in the pens where the fowls can reach them by jumping a little.

Care of Little Chicks.

We saved 30 or 40 chicks in each of our last two hatches, by putting in a flannel wrung from hot water as soon as chicks showed signs of being too dry. This was removed at intervals, as the case required.

PROPER MANNER OF READING.

Writer Sees Much Harm in Multiplicity of Books.

It seems to me that with the multiplication of books we are losing all sense of literature. Leisure and three books, a Bible, a Shakespeare, a Walt Whitman, might make a man truly wise if the seeds of wisdom were in him. I do not know even a wise man whose instinct for wisdom would not be deadened by the frequentation of the Encyclopaedia Britannica. Books should be taken in doses no bigger than music or pictures; they are even harder to digest. There is more drunkenness in a book than in all the vineyards of France. A book may remake a man's soul. Books should be treated with reverence or cast out as dirt. They are in danger of passing out of the service of the temple into the "parcel delivery" of the grocer.

Nothing is gained by reading a book unless you give to that book more than it brings to you. All these people who read with their eyes only are fatally wasting their time. A book read superficially makes the reader more superficial, and to read for "information" is to gnaw at the bones of meat.—Arthur Symons in London Saturday Review.

SARSAPARILLA TIME.

Make Your Own Sarsaparilla or Spring Blood Medicine.

Mix one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon, three ounces Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake well in a bottle and take one teaspoonful after meals and again at bedtime. Any good druggist can supply these ingredients.

This is said to be a splendid Spring Blood Tonic and system renovator because of its gentle action in restoring the Kidneys to normal activity, forcing them to filter from the blood all impure matter and acids, destroying microorganisms which produce ill health and sour blood.

Everyone should take something to cleanse the blood at this time of year, and the above simple prescription is the most highly indorsed of the best dandelion home remedies generally used.

Mix this yourself, then you will know what you are taking.

GRIT SAVED HIS LEG.

Ranchman Rods Far After Most Serious Injury.

Jack Farland, a ranchman living at the base of Pike's Peak, and whose post office is Midland, in this county, yesterday received a broken leg by being caught between a horse which he was riding and a timber wagon which he was attempting to pass while en route to this city, says the Cripple Creek Times. Farland displayed the greatest of pluck by riding on to Victor after suffering the injury, although he said upon arriving here he had felt several times that he must give up. Knowing, however, what difficulty would attend any attempt to dismount, and how well nigh impossible it would be for him to remount in the event that he succeeded in getting safely off his horse, the ranchman gritted his teeth and kept on. After having his leg set by a surgeon of this city, Farland collapsed and it was late in the afternoon before he was able to proceed homeward in a carriage, the accident having happened early in the morning.

Great German Socialist.

Herr Liebel, the leader of the German socialists, who has been so much in evidence of late, is a wheelwright by trade. Although entirely self-educated, he is one of the finest orators and debaters in the fatherland and, distasteful as his views may be to the relebstag, whenever he addresses the assembly he is certain of having a large and attentive audience. In appearance he is said by the socialists that millions will obey his will without thinking whether they are doing right or wrong. Herr Bebel neither drinks nor smokes, and besides he is a celebrity in the political world has gained some fame as a writer.

FIND OUT

The Kind of Food That Will Keep You Well.

The true way is to find out what is best to eat and drink, and then cultivate a taste for those things instead of poisoning ourselves with improper, indigestible food, etc.

A conservative Mass. woman writes: "I have used Grape-Nuts 5 years for the young and for the aged; in sickness and in health; at first following directions carefully, later in a variety of ways as my taste and judgment suggested.

"But its most special, personal benefit has been a substitute for meat, and served dry with cream when rheumatic troubles made it important for me to give up the coffee habit."

"Served in this way with the addition of a cup of hot water and a little fruit it has been used at my morning meal for six months, during which time my health has much improved, nerves have grown steadier, and a gradual decrease in my comfort." WOMAN HAS FINE RECORD.

Keeper of Lighthouse, She Has Saved Eighteen Lives.

Ida Lewis recently celebrated her fiftieth year as keeper of the Lime Island lighthouse in the harbor of Newport, R. I. As a girl and woman Ida Lewis has lived a remarkable life. Her bravery and skill in handling a boat are well known and her fame is secure as the great woman life saver in the world, for she has the credit of having saved no less than 18 lives, most of her rescues having been effected in the face of extreme danger and in winter. As keeper of the Lime Island lighthouse, to which post she was appointed in recognition of her bravery and record as a life saver on the death of her father, Miss Lewis has shown herself as careful and efficient as a man could be. She is one of the few women in such a position.

"I used one cake of Cuticura Soap, one box of Cuticura, and two vials of Cuticura Resolvent Pills, which cost me a dollar and twenty-five cents in all, and am very glad I tried them, for I was completely cured. Walter W. Paglusch, 207 N. Robey St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 8 and 16, 1906."

Women Avoid Operations

When a woman suffering from female troubles is told that an operation is necessary, it, of course, frightens her.

The very thought of the hospital, the operating table and the knife strikes terror to her heart.

It is quite true that these troubles may in every case where an operation is the only resource, but a great many women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after an operation has been decided upon as the only cure.

The strongest and most grateful statements possible to make come from women who by taking made from native roots and herbs, have escaped serious operations, as evidenced by Miss Rose Moore's case, of 307 W. 36th St., N.Y. She writes:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured me of the worst form of female trouble and I wish to express my gratitude. I suffered intensely for two years so that I was unable to attend to my duties and was a burden to my family. I doctored and doctored with only temporary relief and constantly objecting to an operation which I was advised to undergo. I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; it cured me of the terrible trouble and I am now in better health than I have been for many years."

I could add very much such cases should encourage every woman to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before she submits to an operation.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised.

ON SECRET SERVICE

True Stories of Experiences in the State, War, Treasury and Postoffice Departments.

By COL. JASPER EWING BRADY

THE ROBBERY OF COUNT ROSSI

On June 6, 1898, the American army received orders to sail. On the morning of the seventh, just as the flagship Seguranca was about to leave her dock at Port Tampa to lead the fleet of transports on their way to Cuba, a wild telegram was received in Washington saying the report that Cervera was bottled up in Santiago harbor was not true; only a few old ships had gone in there as a ruse to deceive the American fleet, while the four first-class Spanish cruisers were hidden in some bay (of which there are any number on the coast of Cuba) and was now en route westward to intercept the transport fleet and blow it out of the water. The heaviest ships of Sampson's fleet were in front of Santiago and only a few of the lighter vessels were doing blockade duty off Havana. The naval convoy to the army transport fleet was small, pitifully so, and when the reported movement of the Spanish fleet reached Washington, the civilian branch of the war and navy departments were in a great state of turmoil and tribulation. The report specifically stated two large Spanish cruisers (presumably the Viscayo and Almirente Oquendo) were seen the night before running without lights westward through the Nicholas channel. The United States cruiser Eagle, I believe it was, came into Key West post haste with this news; it was quickly telegraphed to Washington and then came the order to stop the transport fleet and prepare to resist the attack of the Spaniards.

All the army men knew this Spanish fleet was a myth and probably the result of an imaginative brain of some overworked blue jacket. Col. Cheney had received information on the morning of June 5 from one of his men who was operating in the eastern end of Cuba that Cervera was in Santiago harbor. This man (an army officer) had gone into Santiago in disguise, had counted the four big cruisers at anchor, had sailed around them, read their names—Viscaya, Oquendo, Colon, and Maria Teresa: he had seen Admiral Cervera land, had seen Gen. Toral receive the admiral and drive up to the palace. Sampson, alert and vigilant, with a fleet of mighty ships was outside the narrow harbor mouth, and Cervera never could have run that blockade without a disastrous fight. Before Sampson assumed active command at Santiago Cervera could have escaped any night he chose; but the fact remains he did not; he was there when Sampson came and from that minute his doom was sealed.

These facts were fully reported to Washington, but civilian Washington looked with supreme contempt on military and naval Tampa, and the army fleet came back and for eight days more they backed and filled like a lot of sheep. Gradually it dawned on the civilian war department that the threatening fleet was only a phantom, and on June 14 they gave the word and the army sailed away.

It is not the purpose or intention of this article to deal with the operations around Santiago, although volumes could be written telling of the great courage and daring of the American regular line officer and soldier, of the hopeless inefficiency of army headquarters at Santiago until the arrival of Gen. Miles. It might be noted that the physically weak commander of the Santiago army contemplated retreating from San Juan Hill on July 4, and being physically incapacitated from further active command sent for the next ranking general and outlined the proposed retreat, telling the general to assume command. That general quietly but forcibly informed the commander that "an American army under his command would never retreat on the Fourth of July. That was the wrong day to begin such a movement." Then the great president in Washington took hold of affairs. Reinforcements were hurried forward; the thin line spreading over 14 miles hung on and Spain was beaten. It is safe to say, had a retreat been ordered the army would have disregarded the order. American men and blood were spent in taking that hill; American men and blood would hold it. Without an order from anyone the army stormed San Juan Hill and, as one civil war veteran remarked, "They'd hold it until hell freezes." And they would.

Col. Cheney's part in this campaign was conspicuous. He was under no one's command but was after information of all kinds. Over at Caney he saw Chaffee and Lawton lock horns with Vara del Rey, and right there was the hardest fighting of the campaign. In the afternoon he was back at San Juan and saw the rush up the hill. He was in it as much as any soldier.

After Miles came and brought order out of chaos, Cheney went with him to Porto Rico, and at the close of that campaign of flowers Col. Cheney returned to the United States. The president was appreciative of the work this quiet man had done and offered him an appointment as a captain and quarter-master in the then re-organized United States army; but Cheney declined it and, after settling his accounts with the government, bade good-bye to red taped officialdom and two days afterward he walked in his old office in Chicago and quietly said: "Hello, Jeff!" to his astonished colored servant.

"Good Gawd, kunnel, whoh yo' kum frum? I'se shore glad to see yuh."

Cheney took the proffered black hand; he too was glad to see Jeff, faithful old Jeff.

Lonergan and Guthrie were overjoyed to see their chief again. Seated in Cheney's old office the three men had a long visit.

"Now, boys, I told you when I went to Washington my active work in this company was at an end. You fellows can run it and I'll just hang around."

"I've got a mental photograph of you 'hanging around,'" smiled Lonergan. "You never were much of a 'hanger,' Jack."

"That's true, Ed, but I'm going to play a while now. I think I'll go abroad."

"Abroad? Lord, Jack, it hasn't been a year since you returned from around the world," said Guthrie. "What do you want to go again for?"

"Well, it's different now. That trip I was on government business and expecting to be picked up as a spy every minute. I did not see much of Europe. This time I'm going for pleasure."

"Expect to go to Russia?" asked Lonergan with a laugh.

"No, that's not on my list, although my friend Yarmeleff was insistent in his invitation for me to come again."

"Sure thing," ejaculated Guthrie. "And old Trepoff would insist on your staying."

"That's true, but I won't go for a week or so. See you fellows at dinner to-night."

"Sid," said Lonergan, when they were outside the office, "the old man will be on another case in a week. I can see it in his eye now. If he goes abroad I'll bet it will be on some case."

After dinner that evening Cheney and his two lieutenants went to the theater and all through the performance he kept up a running fire of questions about the work in various points.

"For a man who is giving up all active work in the business you show a pretty lively interest," said Lonergan on their way home.

"My interest now is just general, Ed, not specific."

"It'll be specific enough all right, all right, before you leave for that European trip. Good night," said Guthrie as they parted.

The next morning about ten Cheney strolled into his office. Usually his desk was loaded with papers, telegrams, letters, etc., but this morning it was as clean as a new coin. Cheney read the paper, smoked a cigar or two, looked at his watch and glanced uneasily around the room. He was restless, no doubt of it. He walked into the outer office; the furniture was all in place but it was as quiet as a tomb.

"Jeff!" called Cheney. His tone was sharp and incisive, but there was no answer. He opened the door into the general work room and a hum of typewriters greeted his ears.

"Butler," he said to one of his clerks," where's Jeff?"

"Over in Mr. Guthrie's office, sir."

Guthrie and Lonergan had their offices at the opposite end of the suite and thither Cheney went. Jeff was sitting in their ante room.

"What are you doing over here, Jeff?" demanded the colonel, with a show of asperity in his tone.

"Well, yo' see kunnel, Mistah Lonergan he say dis mawnin' as how yo' wasn't a-goin' to do eny mo' wuk roun' heah, so I wuz to cum ovah an' tend theyah doah, suh. Dat's why, suh."

"Oh! it is, is it?" said Cheney. "And you're going to tend the door are you? Well you get back to my room and you stay their until I tell you to leave."

"Yas, suh," said Jeff, laughing heartily to himself as he went out. Cheney went into the inner office and there sat Guthrie and Lonergan going over the mail.

"Morning, Jack," said both of them rising. "Glad to see you down. What's new?"

"That's what I'm asking you two. I come into my office and find everything quiet as a grave. Jeff's gone, not a paper, nothing."

"Well," said Lonergan, smiling. "Didn't you say you had given up active work? You were just going to have a general interest. Am I right, Sid?"

"You sure are, Ed, and we moved all the specific cases over here. We left your room so you could entertain your friends—and——"

Cheney saw through it all and in his soul he knew he couldn't give up. He surrendered as they knew he would.

"There's nothing special just now, Cheney," said Lonergan after they had gone over matters. Just then the phone rang. Guthrie answered.

"Yes, Col. Cheney is in town. A minute please—Weeks of the Parlor Car company wants to speak to you," he said, handing Cheney the receiver.

"Hello, Weeks. Been back two days. Yes, I'm ready for business. Always that, you know. Who—Count Guiseppe Rossi of Florence, Italy? Robbed? Bring him over. I'll see what can be done." Every sense was now alert, and his companions smiled as he went out.

"I told you so, Sid," said Lonergan. Guthrie only smiled.

Mr. Weeks was general manager of the Parlor Car company, and about half an hour later introduced Cheney to Count Rossi of Italy.

"Glad to see you, count; sit down."

The count was a very distinguished looking man and dressed like a Parisian fashion plate.

"Cheney," said Weeks, "Count Rossi was a passenger on the overland limited coming east a few days since. In fact, he and a party of friends occupied the greater part of one of our cars. A short distance west of Ogden the count discovered he had been robbed of a large sum of money, $15,000, in all, and a large number of jewels. I'll let the count tell the story, though."

Count Rossi spoke perfect English and said, "You see, Signor, I was coming east from San Francisco and had a party of friends with me. At what you call Promintory Point the scenery is very grand and my party were all in the observation car. We stayed there until dinner was announced and then went back to the cafe car. After dinner we went back in our own car and I then discovered my loss. I reported to the conductor. He wired to Ogden and when we got there no one was allowed to leave the car and officers searched everything and everybody. But not a trace of the money could be found."

"You say $15,000 in money, count. How much in jewels?"

"Sacre, Signor! about $50,000."

"And where was this money and these jewels?"

"The money was in my overcoat inside pocket, hanging in my state room; the jewels in a chamois bag between the seats."

"You are sure this property was all there when you went into the observation car at Promintory Point, count?"

"Sure, signor, yes. I counted the money just before I went. I had $15,000 in $1,000 bills and $1,000 in other denominations. The $1,000 I put in my trousers pocket, the $15,000 in my overcoat."

"Where did you get all this money, count?"

"I cashed a letter of credit at the Crocker Woolworth National Bank the day I left."

"Now, count, these—er—friends you had with you—you had known them long? They were a party from Italy?"

The count never turned color as he replied.

"Ah, no, signor, they were ladies of the opera. They were unfortunate in San Francisco; I was taking them east."

"Oh," said Cheney, with a knowing look at Weeks, who smiled in return. "You were playing 'angel,' then?"

"I know not what you call angel. I was paying expenses and we were having a jolly time."

"Yes, I reckon you were," thought Cheney. Then aloud, "Now, Count Rossi, did any of these—er—ladies know you had this money and jewels?"

"Money, no. Jewels, yes. I show the jewels to one or two but they not take them, because the jewels were in the chamois bag in my satchel when we went to the observation car. Not one of the party went back before I did."

"Your party had nearly all the car; were there any other passengers, count?"

"Only two, an elderly gentleman and his wife."

"That was Col. Dawes and his wife, Cheney," interrupted Mr. Weeks. "He's a wealthy California rancher and miner. I've looked them up."

"You say everyone was searched at Ogden, count?"

"Yes, everyone and every piece of baggage. The train was delayed two hours, and not a trace could be found."

"Where can you be found, count, in case I want you?" asked Cheney.

"Found, signor? Found! Dios, I have been delayed too long already. I must leave at once for Italy. I will be in New York two days and then I sail."

"Yes, but suppose we should apprehend the thief and secure your money and jewels, we should want you here to prosecute them."

"Prosecute! bah, signor, I care not to prosecute anyone. Find me my jewels and keep the money. Send them to me at this address," he replied, giving his card. A few words more and the peppery little count was gone. Weeks went out with him but almost immediately returned.

"That count of youre must be as rich as Croesus, Weeks, from the way he flings money around."

"He is, Cheney. He was just having a good time and I suspect some one of his party took this money."

"Whoever did it was mighty clever about it. And this party of his has scattered to the four corners of the earth. These names on this list are doubtless assumed ones. By the way, Weeks, who was the Pullman conductor in charge of the train, and who was the porter on the car?"

"Campbell was the conductor; 25 years in the service. Simpson was the porter; been with us five years. I've had both of them questioned; they appear all right."

"Perhaps. When they come in again I want to see them."

"Campbell will be in to-night and Simpson has been transferred to the Denver office. I can have him put back on a run coming in here, however, if you want him."

"Do so, please, Weeks, and let me know when he is to arrive. Don't let him know I want him; just keep him around for awhile."

"All right, colonel, I'll use him in my office at an increased salary."

The next morning Conductor Campbell came in and told a straightforward story. Cheney turned the list of Count Rossi's friends over to Guthrie and Lonergan and had them run down every clue possible. There was nothing doing in any direction and Cheney was beginning to believe it was going to be a failure, and he hated failure like his satanic majesty hates holy water. Of course failures had to come sometime, but in his first active case after the war he did not want defeat.

"Must be getting in my dotage," he muttered to himself as he sat in his office one afternoon reviewing the case. So far as was known not one of the 15 thousand-dollar bills had appeared in any of the banks, and a search through pawnbrokers of the big cities did not bring to light any of the diamonds. He had Paris and Amsterdam notified by cable although he knew if the diamonds and other precious stones ever landed there, the chance of securing their return was not one in a million.

Simpson, the porter, had been in to Chicago, and, through the carelessness of Mr. Weeks, had gone out again without Cheney's seeing him. He had gone out on the overland to Frisco, and on the way east again had been doubled back to Frisco from Ogden because one of the porters on the westbound train was notified that his mother was dying in Chicago. The superintendent at Ogden had done all this not knowing how much Simpson was wanted at headquarters. To make matters worse Simpson got left at Ogden by going up town on an errand for a passenger. The superintendent had given him fits and recommended a ten-day lay off when he returned to Chicago. But he had sent him west from Ogden that night because they were short handed from Frisco. All this Cheney learned by wire. His talk to Mr. Weeks was rather more forceful than elegant, and the Parlor Car official was mad clear through.

A day later Weeks phoned Cheney that Simpson would be in that night.

"Jeff," said the colonel, "you be at the Northwestern depot when the Frisco train comes in to-night. James Simpson is porter on car number 3. I want to know what he does to-night. You understand."

"Ah sho' does, kunnel," replied Jeff.

Using Jeff was not a new thing. Cheney had used him many times before when negroes were to be shadowed, and Jeff's work was of a high order. Weeks was posted and said he would hold Simpson in Chicago as long as was necessary.

Jeff was waiting when Cheney came down the next morning. Without any ado he made his report.

"Simpson is a yaller coon, kunnel, an hes a bad eye. After he wuz through wiv his wuk at de train he lef, and I follered him down to Lige Ferguson's place on Dearbho'n street, suh. He stayed there mos' the evenin'. I went in an kep' close as I cud to him. I played I wuz full. Simpson an Ferguson had long talk an wuz mighty thick. I kep' gittin' closer to um bofe, and once I heerd Lige say 'time wuzn't ripe yet, 'ter do somethin' and den dey went away from me, and I heerd no moh."

"Did Simpson appear flush with money, Jeff?"

"No, suh, not a 'strodinary amount. No moh'n a niggeh porter on a long run ink the overlan' limited would have. Yo know dat's a putty good run, kunnel. Tips is gen'ly big."

"Yes, I know that, Jeff. Then you noticed nothing unusual in the man?"

"Well, he an' Lige had a good joke erbout sumpin ovah a sodah watah bottle. I heard Simpson say wen he was drinkin' a brandy on' soda dat he know one soda bottle wuth mo'n ten cents, an' Lige he laff and say 'dat's right.' Dat's jess de time dey notes me an' move off."

"I want both those coons here, Jeff, only bring them separately and don't let either know the other is here. You've got a man out there to help you?"

"I sho' has, kunnel. Ah'll bring em in. Doan' yo' nevah feah."

The colonel didn't fear. He knew Jeff and he now felt morally certain he was on the track of Count Rossi's diamonds. The joke about the soda water bottle he would use as a bait and see what it would bring. About 11 o'clock Jeff brought in Simpson.

As Jeff had remarked, "Simpson was a yaller coon and had a bad eye." Ferguson was brought in a few moments later but kept in the other room. Guthrie and Lonergan had him in hand. He was suspected of several shady transactions and of being "a fence."

"Simpson," said Cheney, "you were in charge of the car Idalah when Count Rossi was robbed?"

"Yas, sah," replied the porter sullenly.

"Knew anything about that robbery, Simpson?"

"Na, sah, nuthin' at all."

"Tell me, Simpson, that time you got left in Ogden, what did you do all that afternoon and evening until you went west on No. 101?"

Simpson's eyes were rolling nervously from side to side; he shifted from one foot to another; truly he was uncomfortably in the grasp of Cheney.

"Ah jes' loafed aroun' Ogden till come time to go west at midnight."

"How about a side trip you took west that afternoon?"

Cheney was groping in the dark. He knew he had the thief right there; the man's whole manner showed it. He was watching him narrowly and sooner or later Simpson would break.

"Gawd, boss, I didn't go west that aftahnoon." But his manner betrayed him; the trail was getting warm. Cheney determined upon a grandstand play. Jeff had spoken of a "soda water bottle" joke between Simpson and Ferguson. Cheney found out Belfast ginger ale was sold on Pullman buffets and he had an empty bottle of that kind in his drawer.

Watching Simpson like a hawk he pulled it out and suddenly shoved it in front of the negro.

"Ever see that?" he said sharply.

Simpson turned lighter than ever; his knees almost shook from under him; his eyes started from his head and he constantly moistened his parched lips with his tongue. He was cornered, trapped; white men's intuition and ingenuity had overawed negro criminal instinct and cunning.

"Wh—wha—whar yo'—git—dat—bottle, boss?" he asked.

"When I left it? Why, I dun give dat bottle to Lige Ferguson."

"Yes, Ferguson is under arrest in the next room. Now come tell me all about it."

And he did. It appeared when Count Rossi and his party went in the observation car Simpson put the money and jewels in an empty soda water bottle; he packed them tight and sealed the bottle securely. About thirty miles west of Ogden he dropped the bottle in the sandy beach of Salt Lake. He marked the spot well. After the search he began to plan to get back there. Getting left at Ogden was all a ruse, done intentionally.

Simpson did go west on a freight and returned in time to catch 101 west. At Omaha on his return east Lige Ferguson met him, having come west on the Burlington. Simpson gave him the bottle and later they would divide the spoils. That was all, "S'help him, Gawd!" That was enough. Ferguson confessed his part, and the jewels and money were recovered. Both men got 15 years in Salt Lake penitentiary.

The jewels and money were sent to Count Rossi, and true to his word he sent the money back to Col. Cheney. Jeff's reward was commensurate with the service he had rendered.

PATENT OFFICE IS FLOODED.

Press of Inventions Leads to Demand for Larger Quarters.

The inventive breed is not dying out in America. The commissioner of patents at Washington calls loudly for larger quarters, more clerks and bigger pay for overworked examiners. There is such a flood of new devices pouring into the patent office as were never seen before. The examiners are fairly swamped and are a full year behind in their work.

Naturally enough, motors and submarine and aerial navigating devices lead the list. Modern man insists upon flying, and the inventor who adds speed to his passing to and fro upon the earth, in the air, or in or under the water is certain of his reward.

The inventors are no believers in the early coming of peace among the nations, for improvements upon weapons and new explosives are well nigh as numerous as new motors. Yet with all this gunning for gain and racing for fame on the part of the inventors the chances are that some unconsidered trifle like the wooden ball with a rubber string, or the globe catch for women's purses will win the largest rewards in the future as in the past.

VENICE HAS NO CEMETERY.

City Buries Its Dead on the Little Island of San Michele.

The Queen of the Adriatic, as Venetians love to term the famous old city, is privileged in many respects and in one particular at least she is unique among the cities of the world. She has no cemetery. The only burying ground is the little island of San Michele, lying solitary among the lagoons at some distance from the city.

This is one of the boons which Venice owes to Bonaparte, who recognized the danger to a population from burial grounds in such a situation and had all intramural graveyards closed and ordered the dead to be taken for burial to this island resting place. The place is deserted all the year except on All Souls' day, and then there is a tremendous outflow of about 140,000 persons.

As such multitudes could never be landed from boats a boat bridge has to be built specially for the occasion, with strict regulations as to control of the living stream in its outward and backward flow.

Reclaiming Land in India.

A scheme is proposed at Lahore, India, by the government to reclaim a large area of land on the Dutch plan. The Rann of Cutch is a seashore waste, with narrow inlets which would be closed, allowing the shallow water to evaporate. The saline deposits would be washed out by a great canal from the Indus. The application of scientific agriculture to the reclaimed land and the construction of a railway linking Karachi and Bombay would complete the enterprise.

Sporting Gossip.

Thomas Hueston of St. Louis retains the world's continuous pool championship as the result of his match with Jerome Keogh of Buffalo. Hueston made 600 points while Keogh had 497 at the end of the three nights' play. Hueston declares that he favors a change in the rules of championship pool matches. His contention is that the present rule, which makes it necessary for the limit of 600 balls to be played in blocks of 200 for three consecutive nights, is too long, at least the nightly string required. As Hueston pointed out, it required practically five-hour sessions at the table each night to count the prescribed block of 200 balls, which was too great a physical tax upon the players. "It is my belief that four nights' play of say 125 balls each night would afford a better and more interesting contest," Hueston said. "True, it would shorten the total to 50 balls, but the contest would be better sustained. Even four nights, of 150 balls, would be far better than the present arrangement. It is my plan to have the rule amended at the earliest possible moment. In this Keogh joins me. It will be necessary for all holders of the championships to concur in this, but I believe they are with me and that a new rule will be made." Keogh said that he not only favored shortening the nightly block of points but also that the present method of inserting stiff leather pockets in the table be done away with. He pointed to the fact that a number of promising sessions at the table were terminated for him because of the ball rebounding from the leather as from rubber and rolling on the table after it had been squarely pocketed.

"I never crow," said Earl Moore, the Cleveland American twirler. "Baseball is too fickle an occupation. One day you pitch an arm off; you have control and speed and everything else that a pitcher should have, and still you lose. Another day you just lob the ball over the plate and give plenty of bases on balls and even then get away with victory. A pitcher doesn't have to run against many experiences like these before he is ready to admit that, come what may, he has no reason to grow chesty. The same thing applies with some variation to ball players in general. Stars come and go and are forgotten. To-day you're at the top of the heap and the crowd cheers and declares you are the only ball player that ever lived. To-morrow some other man may be filling your job and if he makes a good showing you are forgotten as thoroughly as though you were but a passing fancy. Star players have their part in the game, and they are drawing cards, but after all it's the great old game that most people go out to see, and a winning team, no matter what its composition with respect to the individuals, is the thing a crowd most admires."

In the future or for a year at least the two great American sports, baseball and bowling, are apt to be closely allied. Cincinnati had everything her own way at the convention of the American Bowling congress at St. Louis and elected Garry Herrmann of Cincinnati, the baseball magnate, president over President Bryson of Indianapolis, former president, and chose Herrmann's home city for the 1908 convention. The secretaryship contest threatened to be a warm affair for a time, but the withdrawal from the race of Charles D. Wilson and Edwin Peifer, the two Chicago candidates, before the balloting began simplified matters and Abe Langtry of Milwaukee won with 78 votes, as compared to 40 and 17 for H. G. Rautenberg and D. J. Sweeney of St. Louis respectively. Frank Pasdeloup of Chicago had no opposition for the treasurership and was chosen for that office for the fifth time. It was decided by the congress that in the future all bowling tournaments shall begin before Feb. 10. A national bowling commission made up of Col. J. H. Haager of Louisville, Robert H. Bryson of Indianapolis, two former presidents of the A. B. C., and J. W. McCormick of Toledo was appointed to meet with delegations from the National and Western Bowling associations to bring about uniformity in the playing rules and prevent conflicts in tournament dates.

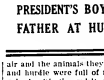
CONGRESSMEN NOT IDLE DURING SUMMER RECESS

WASHINGTON. — Notwithstanding the fact that every member of the senate and house is now drawing pay at the rate of $7,500 a year—50 per cent more than the salary before March 4—not a few of them will be found during the summer earning an honest penny by entertaining the public with their particular accomplishment. The echo of the vice president's gavel had not died away when Senator Tillmon, of South Carolina, was on his way to fill a lecture engagement at Baltimore. With but one or two exceptions he will deliver the famous lecture on the race question every week day evening from now until congress meets in December next. His pay is reported to be $200 a lecture, so it will be seen that whether the sun shines or not Senator Tillman has a lucrative haymaking time ahead of him.

Mr. Beveridge, of Indiana, will be much before the public both on the platform and in print, but the speech-making he does will not yield him a cent. But his writings probably will and largely to his book roll, for the debate on national issues likely to figure in the next national campaign, which he is conducting through the columns of a western magazine, is one of the greatest things ever attempted by a publication. The debate already has opened on state's rights lines, Mr. Beveridge taking advanced ground and contending for what he calls "nationalism."

PRESIDENT'S BOYS BEAT FATHER AT HURDLING



BARON SPECK VON STERNBURG, the German ambassador, showed Colonel Theodore and Kermit Roosevelt how to jump hurdles just beyond the White House park, the other day. He taught them so well they beat their father, the president, who failed to clear a five-foot hurdle. Baron Sternburg was a hussar in the German army in the war with France and what he doesn't know about horses is not to be found in the best literature on the subject. He learned the art of riding from the ground up, for he enlisted as a private and worked his way along to a commission in a crack cavalry regiment.

The lesson that Baron Sternburg gave the Roosevelt boys was not their first under his tutelage. He has been out with them several times "on the quiet" and has managed to bring them to a state of efficiency that already gives them the confidence and ability to follow the hounds. Capt. Fitzhugh Lee, of the Seventh cavalry, is assistant tutor and the president also takes a hand occasionally, but leaves most of the instruction to the German ambassador and the army officer.

The Roosevelt boys had the time of their lives. There was room in the air and the animals they rode at fence and hurdle were full of mettle and inspired with the spirit of the sport. Two of them were the president's own mounts, Bucwell and Audrey, magnificent blooded hunters of a line of hunters.

The horse that was first sent at the jump was Gray Dawn, a gift to Theodore, Jr., by Capt. Seth Bullock, of Deadwood. If he lacks the style and conformation of Roswell and Audrey, he makes up in ginger and endurance. The jumping started at four and one-half feet. The boys cleared this with little difficulty, but the president only topped the hurdle by a supreme effort. Then Baron Sternburg put up the bars to five feet, and the two boys tried it again. There were one or two balks for each, but they finally got over, their father and other spectators applauding.

The president was not to be beaten by his boys if he could help it, so he put Roswell at the rail again. Ros well started well, but the rail was too high and his rider too heavy so he quit at the bar. Again and again the president tried, but in vain, and to the delight of his sons he had to admit that he was beaten.

PRESIDENT IS ASKED TO LECTURE ON THE CANAL

REPRESENTATIVE MARSHALL, of South Dakota, wants President Roosevelt to tour the west, giving "travelogues" describing the Panama canal work.

Arrangements have been made so that the president can have a moving picture machine accompany him if he desires, or just a plain stereopticon if he considers it more suitable.

"Now, ladies and gentlemen," he will be expected to say, "the next picture on the canvas is that of the awe-inspiring Culebra pass. Right back of there I shot two alligators, which the next film displays in their last agonies of death. Dearly, we must remember, comes to all in time.

"We should so live that we are ever ready to face it. Let us not live as drones in the hive of modern politics, but join, young and old, to work for our advancement and the advancement of the grand old Republican party, football, science, tenpins, rate legislation, boxing, hunting, literature, yachting, tawn tennis, polo and military and naval supremacy.

Eight congressmen who have just returned from the canal zone, are preparing to make a tour telling their constituents the good news.

The president has not consented to be hooked as yet, but smilingly admitted that the suggestion might be a good one

WHITE HOUSE PET DOG NAUGHTY—IS BANISHED

ROLLO has been banished from the White House. The time was when Rollo, big St. Bernard pup, was the most prized of all the White House pets. But Rollo fell into evil ways.

All of Rollo's troubles are blamed on a ball terrier presented to Mrs. Roosevelt several months ago.

The terrier and Rollo apparently were awfully good friends. They were both about the same age and the ball terrier undertook to teach Rollo "rough house" games. He would grab Rollo by the throat and roll him good and plenty. Rollo, who grew until he was about the size of a calf, tired of this, and the constant attacks of the terrier appeared to ruin his disposition.

He became petulant and retiring, disliking the company of either man or beast. Several times members of the president's tennis cabinet have had to step lively to escape a nip from Rollo.

After chasing ambassadors, cabinet members, and minor officials, Rollo sealed his doom the other night when he treed a couple of the watchmen from the navy department who were going through the White House grounds about midnight.

Rollo wagged his tail, expecting to be commended for what he had done, but after it became known and discussed Rollo was sentenced to be banished to the farm of Surgeon General Rixey, down in Virginia, where he can chase rabbits and butterflies.

The ball terrier, now that Rollo is gone, has turned his attention to Skip, the little black and tan hound which was given the president on his lion hunting trip in Colorado.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

NEW GOVERNOR OF PORTO RICO

During the administration of President Roosevelt a great number of wealthy men have accepted positions in the government service, both at Washington and in the foreign diplomatic service. In many cases such positions have not been of great importance, but it shows that since the United States has taken her place as one of the great world powers there is a growing need of well trained in diplomatic service, and owing to the great cost of living in foreign service there is also need of men with great wealth.

An example of the rise of a man of wealth to greater honors from lesser positions in the administration is Mr. Regis Henri Post, recently appointed governor of Porto Rico by President Roosevelt after serving as auditor and secretary of those United States possessions.

Mr. Post's public career began in 1898, when he was elected a member of the state assembly by the Republicans of the Second Suffolk county district. At the expiration of his first term he was re-elected by an increased plurality, but on account of the health of his wife he did not again seek a re-election, but devoted some time to travel. He is a wealthy man by inheritance and for a year or two traveled extensively.

In February, 1903, he was appointed by the president to the office of auditor for Porto Rico. He held this office until August, 1904, when President Roosevelt, recognizing the ability with which he had discharged his duties as auditor, promoted him by making him secretary of Porto Rico, to succeed Charles Hartzell.

As secretary Mr. Post frequently to assume the reins of government in the absence of Governor Beekman Winthrop and he did this with signal ability. When Governor Winthrop retired from office on March 4 to become assistant secretary of the treasury, President Roosevelt at once appointed Mr. Post as Governor Winthrop's successor.

SECOND TERM FOR CARTER

George B. Carter, governor of Hawaii since 1903 and slated for a second term by appointment from President Roosevelt, is a great admirer of the Japanese. This race forms a considerable percentage of the population over which Governor Carter rules. In his annual report, just made, the governor shows that the attendance of Japanese children at the public schools is increasing rapidly. He declares that the Japanese have been grievously treated and thinks that they should be given the right to become citizens of the United States.

"I am perfectly willing that my daughter should marry a Japanese if the young lady were willing," he is quoted as saying.

"I do not hold any race prejudice against the Japanese, as is frequently expressed. In fact, I have always favored allowing the Japanese to be naturalized and to become citizens."

Governor Carter is expected to visit the United States soon, when he will probably confer with the president. He has spent the most of his 38 years on the islands and is optimistic for their future.

Governor Carter is a graduate of Yale, where he was a member of both the football eleven and the crew.

NEW WIZARD OF FINANCE

Otto Herman Kahn is Wall street's latest wizard of finance. Born in Germany not quite 40 years ago, Mr. Kahn worked in London and in New York. A few years ago he became a member of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Mr. Kahn, more widely known in Europe than in America, was brought before the public in the recent examination of E. H. Harriman by the interstate commerce commission.

His ready answers to questions involving financial technicalities amazed members of the commission.

Not only did he discuss hundreds of millions of dollars and hundreds of millions of shares of stock with absolute indifference, but he showed that, although declaring himself to be merely a banker and in no sense a railroad man, he has a wonderful knowledge of railroad conditions and values. He described with a wealth of detail, illustrating a remarkable memory, all the intricacies of the reorganization of the Union Pacific Railway company in 1895—only two years after he had entered the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and when he was but 29 years old—and talked familiarly of the Northern roads and the big systems that cross the country from east to south. To the lawyers and those who were hearing Mr. Kahn for the first time, this was all very amazing, but to those who have been associated with him it caused no surprise.

Testimony taken at the inquiry showed that it was he to whom Mr. Harriman went when he wanted to buy control of a big railroad system; that it was Mr. Kahn who was sought when the so-called railroad "wizard" wanted to sell a few hundred thousand shares of railroad stocks. Mr. Kahn is a director in a number of the Harriman railroads, land and other corporations.

BOOK CAUSES SENSATION

Brand Whitlock, Toledo's novelist-lawyer-mayor, has aroused a new sensation here by his latest book, "The Turn of the Balance," which is a startling and graphic arraignment of our methods of dealing with criminals. The author flays the police, prosecuting attorneys and courts, but reserves his strongest condemnation for jails, workhouses and penitentiaries.

Mayor Whitlock hopes to start through his book a movement that will spread through the country and end with the reformation of prison keepers. He said a few days ago: "Criminals come out of prisons worse men than when they entered. Occasionally they are transformed, but that is only in a prison where the wardens and the keepers are living better lives than the prisoners and where they help the prisoner to reform himself. In most prisons reformation of prisoners is impossible until the men who keep them in prison lead better lives than the prisoners and try to help those unfortunates by examples and kind words, instead of clubs and bull rings and bumming birds and water cures."

Mayor Whitlock was elected as a reformer. He was the protege of "Golden Rule" Jones. Immediately upon entering office he began to reform things. The workhouse was turned upside down and made into a place fit to house men and women, temporarily detained by the city or to work out the loss and the pain they had caused by their errors and misdirected energy. The dungeon was abolished, the bull rings were destroyed. Striped clothes were taken away and ordinary clothes substituted.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

BOWERY LODGING HOUSES TO UNDERGO RENOVATING

NEW YORK.—There is mourning on the Bowery because of the order of the department of health, issued recently, aimed at the evils of the lodging houses.

To those not familiar with Bowery resorts it may be interesting to know that there are at least 150 of these cheap lodging places in Manhattan and Brooklyn. They rent between six and seven million lodgings a year, at prices varying from five to 25 cents, with an average of ten or 15 cents. Their influence in the propagation of crime, according to the police and other investigators, has been tremendous. Fifty per cent of the charity applicants in New York give lodging houses as their addresses, and 50 per cent of the same class at any given time have been less than six months in New York. The charity workers say that, while it is not a hard task to reclaim a man who has spent a month in a lodging house, at the end of six months it is well nigh impossible.

The slightly business done by the dens is enormous. From 12,000 to 15,000 beds are let every night in the Borough of Manhattan alone. At a first glance the new rules appear somewhat drastic, but the committee says they are vitally necessary and really moderate in scope. The three ends to be attained in the lodging houses, it is pointed out, are ventilation, cleanliness and proper sanitary arrangements. In most lodging houses it has been the custom, to use the words of a keeper, to change sheets and pillowcases "whenever necessary." In other words, once or at most twice a week. Now they are required to have fresh pillowcases and sheets every day. It is estimated that this will entail an extra expenditure of four cents a bed daily for laundry purposes.

COMPOSITE CLUBHOUSE FOR COLLEGE GRADUATES

A MOVEMENT is on foot which, its promoters say, will be of far-reaching benefit to many a struggling young graduate in this city. It is proposed to form a college league, whose members will be recruited from the alumni of those institutions who do not possess clubhouses of their own, as the Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Columbia and Cornell do; and who will all have their home under a common roof. The University of Pennsylvania Alumni association is actively pushing the plan. In a way this composite clubhouse, as proposed, will resemble a great bachelor hotel. Although each college organization will have its own individual clubrooms, its class dining rooms, its lounging, smoking and meeting rooms; and although its own living apartments will be arranged on the same floor or floors, thus giving the members of each association as much privacy as they could obtain in a private dwelling house, there will be certain parts of the buildings which will be used in common by all. There will be a large library, in which all the clubs will have access; a dining-room, where each particular club will have a certain number of tables set apart for its use, and a gymnasium and swimming pool which will be open to the members of all the various societies. Such a development of the college club idea is only in line with what has already been accomplished within recent years for the help of the youthful graduate who has come to the metropolis to win fame and fortune. The collegian of today does not begin his career in this city finds many opportunities which did not exist for the graduate of a generation ago.

MORGAN TO TEAR DOWN THE OLD DODGE MANSION

J. PIERPONT MORGAN has become an expert on fireproofing matters. He has announced his intention to demolish the old Dodge mansion, for which he recently paid $500,000, to make his art museum absolutely safe from fire. The museum, which stands on the same block, bounded by Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh streets, Park and Madison avenues, is a magnificent building, erected at a cost of $2,000,000. The museum itself is a thoroughly fireproof structure, built throughout of terra-cotta hollow tile brick, and is considered practically immune from flames. It is a storehouse of priceless art treasures, which constitute one of the most valuable private collections of paintings, tapestries and ivories in the world. Mr. Morgan evidently realizes the danger to these treasures that might arise from a combustible structure adjoining the museum. His idea is to secure an open space all around it by moving the Dodge mansion, which covers the middle of the block on the Madison avenue side and stands between the museum and the avenue. The area thus secured will be turned into a landscape garden, to beautify the side approach to the museum. This half-million-dollar "garden" will have a frontage of 67 feet, with a depth of 167 feet. Almost the entire block in which the museum stands is owned by Mr. Morgan, who recently bought the Phelps mansion on the Thirty-seventh street corner of Madison avenue for $600,000 and presented it to J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr. Mr.

HARRY THAW A MARK FOR CRANKS OF ALL KINDS

CRANKS of every caliber throughout the country now have their minds concentrated upon Harry K. Thaw. Possibly there are few individuals in New York who receive as many letters and postcards as the unfortunate. He peruses a heaping bushel basketful of missives every day, and many of these contain mosaics, medals and prophecies. Thaw is superstitious to a marked degree, and when a crank from Chicago wrote that he would be freed on St. Patrick's day he looked forward to March 17 with much anxiety only to be doomed to disappointment. Another writer advised Thaw to carry his gray ulster every time he entered the court room, because the garment was a talisman and would bring good luck. That the prisoner followed the advice of the writer there is no doubt, because on other days, when the temperature reached 90 in the court room, he left the Tombs carrying the heavy garment on his arm. Even another man advised Thaw by letter to allow his hair to grow until the jury had rendered a verdict. Perhaps that is the reason his long, dark brown hair needs trimming and is so unkempt. Prisoners, after they have been confined in the Tombs, or any other prison, for that matter, for a length of time naturally grow superstitious. Thaw, however, developed that failing years ago and, it is said, often visited phrenologists and clairvoyants and frequently heeded their advice. During his incarceration in the city prison a number of fortune tellers and spiritualists have endeavored to secure an audience with him.

THAW JURY FAILS TO AGREE ON A VERDICT

BEING HOPELESSLY DIVIDED IT IS DISCHARGED BY THE COURT.

New Trial Far in Future—Jurors Stood Seven for Conviction and Five for Acquittal—Defendant Is Bitterly Disappointed.

New York, April 12.—Hopelessly divided—seven for a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree and five for acquittal on the ground of insanity—the jury which since the twenty-third of last January had been trying Harry K. Thaw, reported at 4:25 o'clock Friday afternoon, after 47 hours and eight minutes of deliberation, that it could not possibly agree upon a verdict. The 12 men were promptly discharged by Justice Fitzgerald, who declared that he, too, believed their task was hopeless.

Thaw was remanded to the Tombs without bail to wait a second trial on the charge of having murdered Stanford White, the noted architect.

When this new trial would take place no one connected with the case would Friday night express an opinion. District Attorney Jerome declared that there were many other persons accused of homicide awaiting trial and Thaw would have to take his turn with the rest. As to a possible change of venue, both the district attorney and counsel for Thaw declared they would make no such move. Thaw's attorneys will have a conference Saturday with the prisoner to decide upon their next step. They may make an early application. Mr. Jerome said he would strenuously oppose it. He added the belief that as seven of the jurors had voted for "guilty," his opposition probably would be successful. In that event there was another long examination before him in the city prison, for his case on the already crowded criminal calendar cannot possibly be reached until some time next fall.

Result Was Expected.

The scenes attending the announcement by the jury of its inability to agree upon any sort of verdict were robbed of any theatricalism by the general belief that after their long deliberation and the reports of a wide division of sentiment, the jurors could make no other report than one of disagreement.

Thaw, surrounded by the members of his family—the devoted, aged mother, the pale young wife, the titled sister, the countess of Yarmouth; Mrs. George Carnegie, and Edward and Josiah Thaw, the brothers—received the news in absolute silence. When it became known that the jury was about to make its report and that the case would be ended, of, Thaw called his wife to a seat by his side and sat with his right arm thrown about her until he was commanded to stand and face the jurors. Smiling and confident as he entered the courtroom, he sank limply into his chair when Foreman Deming H. Smith, in response to a question by Clerk Penny as to whether the jurors had agreed upon a verdict, said:

"We have not."

Evelyn Tries to Cheer Him.

The mother, her features hidden behind a dense veil of black, sat stolid and motionless. In ill health of late, she had felt severely the effects of the stress of the long hours of anxious waiting. The wife, by her husband's side, gripped his hand tightly as the jury foreman spoke, and then, when he sank down by her side, she tried to cheer him as best she could, not knowing that she believed he would now be committed to hell and that a second jury would surely set him free.

The mother, the sisters and the brothers, pale and well-nigh exhausted by their tedious, nerve-racking wait for a verdict, smiled weakly at Thaw as he was led away again to the Tombs. They were permitted to speak with him for a few moments to bid him be of good cheer, before he crossed the "bridge of sighs" to his cell in the prison which, until a few minutes before, he had hoped that he was about to quit forever.

Hartridge Raps Delmas.

Friday night Clifford W. Hartridge, the attorney of record and warm personal friend of Thaw, gave out the following statement:

"Mr. Thaw has already expressed himself desirous of a trial under and in accordance with the laws of the state of New York. I can add nothing to that except to say that I entirely agree with him and hope that we shall have a fair trial speedily, and that the next time it will not be necessary for the presiding judge to have to charge the jury that we are living in a civilized community."

See Mistake in Defense.

Mr. O'Reilly, of Thaw's counsel, said:

"I confess that I am disappointed. I really expected an acquittal. Perhaps now, in view of the verdict, Mr. Delmas made a mistake in using the term 'dementia Americana.' But he made an honest effort and it might have been a mistake of judgment."

Attorney Gleason said: "The disagreement of the jury was disappointing, of course. It was unfortunate, the insistence upon the unwritten law characterized as 'dementia Americana.' If, instead of this, counsel had dwelt upon the statutory insanity of Mr. Thaw, which was plainly proved, Mr. Thaw might have been acquitted."

AWFUL WRECK IN CANADA

FIFTEEN PERSONS PROBABLY ARE BURNED TO DEATH.

Many Other Passengers Injured—Canadian Pacific Train Goes Over Embankment Near Chapleau.

Fort William, Ont., April 12.—The worst wreck in the history of the Canadian Pacific railway occurred Wednesday near Chapleau, 200 miles east of here. Fifteen persons, nine adults and six children, are missing and are believed to have been burned to death in the coaches.

The wreck was caused by a broken rail, which ditched the train, the two tourist cars rolling down an embankment in a small lake below. Passengers fought their way through the flames and a number of people in the coaches were pulled out badly burned but still alive. Most of the passengers received more or less serious injuries.

Montreal, Canada, April 12.—The following official statement was issued by Mr. McNicoll, vice president of the Canadian Pacific railway:

"About 22 miles west of Chapleau, Ont., Wednesday, the westbound transcontinental train which left Montreal on Tuesday morning was partly derailed, caused by a broken rail. Five cars ran down an embankment and caught fire, said to have been from the cooking stove. Nine adults and six children are missing. The following are the names and addresses:

"William Day, London, England; Winnifred and Susan Horton, Charing Heath, Kan.; C. H. Golding, his brother and his brother's wife, and two children, of Pulstow, Essex, England; Mrs. August Dierkhuid and two children, of Worcester, Mass.; Mrs. R. B. Hampton and Mrs. R. Davidson and baby."

FIFTEEN BURNED TO DEATH.

Terrible Fire in an Apartment House in Lisbon.

Lisbon, Portugal, April 11.—A fire broke out Wednesday in an apartment house near the Central market occupied by 18 families. Fifteen persons lost their lives. Most of the bodies were terribly charred, and found only after a most difficult search. Many others were badly burned while looking for bodies. Among the bodies brought out from the ruins were those of a mother with her two children clasped in her arms.

The police believe it to be a case of arson and they have arrested three persons on suspicion. It is said that several tenants of the house recently took out insurance policies for sums largely in excess of the value of their goods.

King Carlos and the queen of Portugal visited the scene of the disaster.

CAR PLANT FOR SUPERIOR.

Great Northern Will Erect Factory in Wisconsin Town.

Superior, Wis., April 11.—President Louis W. Hill of the Great Northern who is making an inspection of terminals in this city Wednesday stated that a plant for the manufacture of cars will be built in Superior. He also stated that the Great Northern will put in large yards on the Superior Bay front, and that several private parties are contemplating the construction of docks there for various purposes.

DYNAMITE IN THE MAILS.

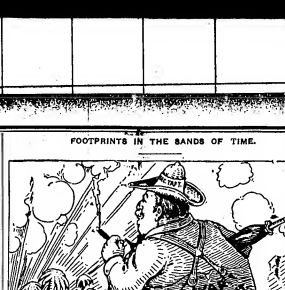
Package Explodes in St. Louis Post Office, Maiming Stamping Clerk.

St. Louis, April 12.—A mail package apparently containing dynamite exploded while it was being stamped in the St. Louis post office Thursday. The explosion blew away a portion of a fingers and injured Gus O. Boyer, the clerk who was stamping the package.

The explosion destroyed all trace of the contents and all the address excepting the words "Independence, Mo."

WIFE DEAD, MAN SENSELESS.

Puzzling Tragedy Occurs at Cape Girardeau, Mo.



Cape Girardeau, Mo., April 12.—A sensation was created here Thursday by the finding of the dead body of Mrs. A. D. Blomeyer in her home, following an alleged quarrel with her husband, Mr. Blomeyer, and his lapse into unconsciousness. Efforts to revive him have been of no avail. The coroner is investigating, but no verdict has yet been returned.

NEW YORK HERALD FINED $31,000.

New York, April 11.—Judge Hough in the criminal branch of the United States circuit court Wednesday imposed fines aggregating $31,000 against the New York Herald Publishing company. James Gordon Bennett, its proprietor, and Manley W. Gilliam, the advertising manager. Mr. Bennett appeared in person. The fines, which were immediately paid, were imposed as a result of pleas of guilty interposed to indictments charging employment of the United States mails for improper purposes.

Georgia Minister a Suicide.

Atlanta, Ga., April 13.—Rev. Frank Riley, formerly a member of the South Georgia Methodist conference, committed suicide at his home here Friday, locking himself in his room, barricading the door and turning on the gas. Despondency induced by ill-health is believed to have been the cause of the act.

THROW MONEY AT FEET OF W. T. STEAD

PITTSBURG AUDIENCE ROUSED BY HIS REMARKABLE PEACE ADDRESS.

Ovation for Londoner—His Huge Pilgrimage Plan Stirs Enthusiasm of Guests at Carnegie Institute Rededication Ceremonies.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 13.—At the close of a remarkable address by William T. Stead, editor of Review of Reviews, London, England, at the rededication ceremonies of the Carnegie institute of Pittsburg late Friday, in which the speaker announced a plan to raise $100,000 necessary to conduct the pilgrimage from all countries to The Hague conference advocated in a recent New York address, unbounded enthusiasm took possession of the large audience and money was thrown to the floor of the stage.

Probably never has a public speaker been given such an ovation in this city. The lightning-like rapidity with which Mr. Stead's plan to finance the pilgrimage began almost took the breath from the distinguished foreign and American guests attending the exercises.

Plan to Raise Fund.

Mr. Stead, after explaining the purpose of the pilgrimage to the next Hague conference estimated that it would take at least $100,000 to finance the proposition. To raise this sum he proposed that every boy and girl in colleges and universities throughout the United States donate 50 cents toward the fund needed. He said the lesson furnished to Europe by such a movement would be an influential factor in the quest of international peace.

The suggestion came at the end of his address and he sat down amid loud applause. For fully five minutes the clapping and cheering was prolonged and finally the speaker again arose and said that probably the audience would like to contribute to the fund. Immediately a shower of silver money landed on the stage, coming from all parts of the music hall.

Banquet for Carnegies.

The banquet given by the board of trustees of the Carnegie institute in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie was held Friday night at the Hotel Schenley.

The exercises Friday were slightly handicapped by inclement weather. Three large chests of books were presented to the institute by Emperor William through his personal representative, Count Von Arnim, and Prince Von Loewenfeld. The boke are handsomely bound and treat of the German empire and army.

Prizes Awarded Painters.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 12.—The formal rededication exercises of the enlarged institute of Pittsburg, valued at $6,000,000 and one of the most beautiful and complete institutes of its kind in the world, were brought to a close for the day Thursday with the announcement of the prize-winners in the international art exhibition.

Following are the successful painters, amount of awards and titles of pictures:

First prize—Gold medal and $1,500 —Gaston La Touche, Paris, France, "The Bath."

Second prize—Silver medal and $1,000—Thomas Eakins, Philadelphia, "Prof. Leslie W. Miller."

Third prize—Bronze medal and $500 —Olga De Boznanska, Paris, France, portrait of a woman.

AMAPALA IS SURRENDERED

BONILLA TAKES REFUGE ON AN AMERICAN CRUISER.

Will Not Be Permitted to Land Again in Central America — Peace Seems Assured.

Managua, Nicaragua, April 13.—The Honduren forces who have been besieged in Amapala by the Nicaraguan navy capitulated unconditionally Friday morning to the enemy. President Bonilla has taken refuge on board the American cruiser Chicago, and he will not be permitted to disembark on Central American soil.

The capitulation was arranged by Commander Robert M. Doyle, captain of the Chicago.

The Salvadorean forces who were at Amapala, are returning to La Union.

Peace is now believed to be assured.

Washington, April 13.—The end of hostilities in Central America is recorded in the following cablegram received at the state department Friday afternoon from American Consul Ogilvie, dated at Managua, the Nicaraguan capital, Friday:

"Amapala has been surrendered by Bonilla and the war is ended."

New Orleans, La., April 13.—According to a cablegram received by the officials of the Fruit Dispatch company here early Friday morning, President Manuel Bonilla of Honduras has surrendered to the Nicaraguan forces. The cablegram came from Managua, Nicaragua, and was signed by President Jose S. Zelaya. No details were given other than that Bonilla surrendered early Thursday.

Other advices received here, however, were to the effect that Bonilla had been hustled up in the port of Amapala ever since he made his sentimental flight from Choluteca.

FAVROT IS SET FREE.

Second Grand Jury Refuses to Indict Dr. Aldrich's Slayer.

Baton Rouge, La., April 12.—Democratic Congressman George K. Favrot was set free Thursday night, after having been in jail continuously for about five months under arrest on a charge of murder and awaiting action of a grand jury. Thursday the second grand jury refused to indict the congressman.

Mr. Favrot had November shot and killed Dr. R. H. Aldrich, of Baton Rouge, who had been his life-long friend. The congressman declared that the physician had made disparaging remarks about Mrs. Favrot.

Paymaster Irwin Punished.

Washington, April 13.—Paymaster John Irwin, of the navy, who was tried at Mare Island on charges of neglect of duty, making false returns and embezzlement, has been acquitted of the charge of embezzlement but found guilty on other charges. The court sentenced him to dismissal. No recommendation for clemency was made, but the president commuted the sentence to a reduction of 15 points.

Gen. W. D. Duggan Is Retired.

Washington, April 13.—Brig. Gen. Walter D. Duggan, recently detached from duty in the Philippines, was placed on the retired list Thursday on account of age. Col. Charles B. Hall, of the Eighteenth infantry, becomes brigadier general by reason of Gen. Duggan's retirement, but will retain his present station and duty at Fort Leavenworth, in charge of the military staff college.

Murderer Denied Reprieve.

Columbus, O., April 13.—The state prison board Friday refused to grant a reprieve to Dr. Oliver Haugh, of Dayton, who murdered his mother, father and brother. The application was made on the ground that Dr. Haugh is demented. He will appeal to the governor. He is condemned to die on April 19.

MEMORY OF ROUGH RIDERS HONORED

MONUMENT AT ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY IS UNVEILED.

Address by President—Distinguished Persons on the Speakers' Stand—Handsome Monolith is the Design of Capt. Capron's Widow.

Washington, April 13.—President Roosevelt made a speech in which he touched mainly on patriotism and good citizenship, at the dedication Friday of the monument erected to the memory of the first cavalry United States Volunteers—the "Rough Riders"—of the Spanish-American war in the National cemetery at Arlington.

Mrs. Allyn K. Capron, widow of Capt. Capron of the Rough Riders, who fell at Las Guasimas, pulled the cord holding the American flag that covered the monument, Rev. Dr. D. J. Stafford of St. Patrick's church, this city, made the dedication address, and Chaplain H. A. Brown, U. S. A., pronounced the benediction.

Regular troops and part of the national guard of the District of Columbia participated in the exercises incident to the dedication.

Notables on the Stand.

A distinguished company assembled on the stand from which the president delivered his address. They included Ambassador Jusserand of France, Baron Rosen, the Russian ambassador, the naval and military attaches of the Japanese and German embassies, Assistant Secretary Oliver of the war department, Assistant Secretary Newberry of the navy department, Gen. J. Franklin Bell, chief of staff of the army, and Admiral and Mrs. Cowles. A number of former members of the Rough Riders regiment are in the city and were invited to seats on the stand.

The monument is the design of Mrs. Capron and stands in a good location in the reservation. It is a monolith, the largest of its kind in Arlington. It is made of Vermont granite, standing 14 feet high on a base six by six feet. The memorial bears the names of more than 100 former members of the regiment who died either in Cuba or after the return of the regiment to the United States.

Address of the President.

President Roosevelt was the colonel of the Rough Riders during most of its existence and he spoke with a personal feeling. He referred to the peculiar gratification of all the members of the regiment in seeing this memorial erected to the memory of their dead comrades and spoke of the funeral service that Chaplain Brown held over those killed in the Guasimas fight—"the first fight that we saw, the fight in which we served under the utter time lieutenant general Young. You look in your word."

The president spoke of the bitter grief my war entails. "The deepest woe, however," he declared, "the grief hardest to bear, must come not to those who go to war, but the women and children who stay at home. No one had no regard, he stated, for the man who dreads over-much to meet the inevitable death in a war worthy a nation as when he meets it in battle for his country. "The greatest sacrifices that we as a people can make are necessary for those who go to the front, who know the eager excitement of battle and who, if they are worthy of the called men at all, feel the most buoyant exultation in the good fortune which gives them the chance to show their manhood on stricken fields. Our sympathy is not for them, but for those who have hardly to wait to wait at home, uncheered by the stern joy of battle and who have to meet with as brave a front as may be the news, good or ill, that comes from the front."

DR. GUY HELD FOR UXORCIDE.

Servant Tells of Domestic Quarrel Before the Tragedy.

New York, April 12.—Dr. Samuel B. Guy, former coroner of Queens county, was held to await the action of the grand jury following the coroner's inquest Friday into the death of his wife, Mrs. Lillian Mott Guy, who was shot and killed at her home in Far Rockaway on the night of April 8. The jury found that Mrs. Guy died from a bullet wound at the hands of somebody unknown to the jury.

Anne Hanson, the servant in the house, told of the quarrel between the doctor end his wife and how Mrs. Guy fell dead at the servant's feet.

Counsellor Mathot in his cross-examination gave no inkling of what the defense would be, but stated in court that Guy did not do the shooting.

A SOCIAL LEADER IN OLD KANSAS CITY

Attributes Her Excellent Health to Peruna.

MRS. W. H. SIMMONS.

MRS. W. H. SIMMONS, 1119 E 8th St., Kansas City, Mo., member of the National Annuity Association, writes:

"My health was excellent until about a year ago, when I took a complete collapse from overdoing socially, not getting the proper rest, and too many late suppers. My stomach was in a dreadful condition, and my nerves all unstrung.

"I was advised by a friend to try Peruna, and eventually I bought a bottle. I took it and then another, and kept on using it for three months.

"At the end of that time my health was restored, my nerves no longer troubled me, and I felt myself once more and able to assume my social position. I certainly feel that Peruna is deserving of praise."

There are many reasons why society women break down, why their nervous systems fail, why they have systemic or pelvic catarrh. Indeed, there are especially liable to these ailments. No wonder they require the protection of Peruna. It is their shield and safeguard.

The university has recently invested more than $1,000,000 in New York real estate, producing 4½ per cent., and has bond investments worth $3,767,971.75 and stocks worth $500,482.22. At least a quarter million more could be realized on the bonds and stocks. The treasurer, Mr. Lee McClung, announces that the funds of the university reach $8,254,492.45.

ILL FROM OVERWORK

NERVOUS PROSTRATION CURED BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK P.I.L.S.

By Toning up the Blind ed Nerves Patient Recovered Weight, Strength and Good Spirits.

When the nervous system is broken down from overwork, or wintery cause, the loss is one to joy. Not only is the nervous victim a sufferer himself, but he is usually a trial to the whole family. Nervous breakdown is often gradual, appearing at first to be merely an unnatural nervousness. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills tone up the nerves in this most direct way and not only cure minor troubles but serious disorders as well.

Mr. W. W. Munroe, of 10 Hazel Park, Everett, Mass., says: "About three years ago this September I became all run down from overwork and mild exposure in work during warm weather. In two months I grew steadily worse. I lost in weight and strength and had no appetite. My memory failed me quite rapidly and I became in a very low state, both physically and mentally. I had no interest in life, and my business nor recreation. In my position, as foreman in a large manufacturing concern's establishment, a good memory is absolutely essential to success because of the many elements of detail that must be carried in the head. I grew very despairing, could not bear to have people near me and my friends remarked on my condition. About the middle of December a friend told me one day that he had tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and found them reliable. I commenced taking them and at the end of two weeks the change for the better was marked. By February I continued using the pills until I was thoroughly recovered. I regard them as a fine remedy and make this statement voluntarily in gratitude for the benefit I received from them."

These pills actually make new blood and hare effective in all diseases or rheumatism, nervous and general debility, indigestion, nervous headaches, neuralgia and even partial paralysis and locomotor ataxia. As a tonic for the blood and nerves they are unequalled.

If you are a sufferer from any disorder of the blood and nerves write for proof of what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have accomplished in cases similar to yours. Every testimonial used by this company is carefully investigated before being published and is authentic.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or direct by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50. Write Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Dan Patch.

St. Paul—Dan Patch, 1:24, on the Minnesota State Fair race track in '07,' is the latest slogan of the state fair people. For the greatest of all pacers has been engaged again for the coming state fair. He will appear on Monday afternoon, Sept. 2, the opening day of the fair, and is to go against his own world's record of 1:55 flat which he made at the Minnesota fair last September. This was the fastest mile ever made by a harness horse under any conditions, but Mr. Savage and Mr. Hersey, Dan's trainer and driver, are both confident that he can beat the 1906 mark this season. The famous horse was never in better condition than now and looks good for something better than ever when he gets to work on the track.

It is a fact that Dan Patch has never appeared on the Minnesota State Fair track without lowering his Minnesota record. He has gone against time on this track five times with the following results:

1903—Aug. 31.....Time 2:00
1905—September 4.....Time 1:59½
September 9.....Time 1:57½
1907—September 4.....Time 1:56¼
September 8.....Time 1:55

This last achievement gave to the Minnesota State Fair track the honor of the world's record for the fastest mile ever trotted by a harness horse.

Suicide.

Virginia—A woman who registered at a local hotel as "H. Ellis," committed suicide by taking poison at that town, on the Rainy Lake road.

She arrived Virginia on the Great Northern road, registered at the hotel where she stayed over night and next day took a Rainy Lake train to Angora. Here she alighted and walking half a mile down the track drank poison, her dead body being found in the afternoon. Clothes gave no clue, when registering at the hotel and nothing was found in her clothing to indicate her identity. She was well dressed and fairly good looking. At the Virginia hotel she left her pocketbook containing $9.68 in money and a note, which said:

"My husband died last week. Am threatened with insanity and prefer death. Bury me here as I am. Have no relatives."

A baby's silk stocking was also found in the pocketbook. The authorities are endeavoring to find out who the woman was and where she came from, but so far have met with no success.

Gold Mine.

Wisconsin—Investigation into the report of the gold mine on the Gainey farm near Ellis in the county, to prove that there is good foundation for the stories that have been current so long, first indications of gold were found on the farm some years ago when a well was sunk. The well driller said the soil brought out was different than he had found anywhere else, and he believed that gold ore was in it. Mr. Gainey has since been interviewed by some Western copper and gold miners and from his investigations there he was sure he had gold ore on the farm. Recently he did some prospecting sinking a six-foot hole down about twelve feet. Some of the ore removed he had assayed and found it to contain gold that would run about $4 to the ton. Since then the shaft has been sunk more than 20 feet and the books of the one continues to improve. Another assay is now in the mails and upon it depends future operations.

Mad Dogs.

Owatonna—A dog thought to be affected with rabies attacked several cattle owned in Beaufield township and then pursued southward by a number of farmers armed with guns, but it soon ran away.

In view of the further fact that several cattle have been killed in Beaufield during the last few months, and which were thought to have been suffering from rabies, the Mapleton village council has voted that all canines within the village limits must be tied up or muzzled. The village marshal is authorized to shoot all unmuzzled dogs running at large.

Last week four cattle on C. S. Wiebusch's farm in Maple township died of some strange disease, and the state veterinarian, Dr. Hess, was summoned to examine the herd. He stated in his opinion that the cattle had rabies. Mr. Wiebusch will have the rest of the cattle tested to determine the matter finally.

Northfield—Dr. Hess was sent for to examine the herd of cattle belonging to Mr. Wilhart with the result that the cattle tested to determine the matter finally.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, April 9—The senate today passed the Clague registry tax on mortgages bill. There were 40 affirmative votes, and 14 against it. The bill was a special order for an hour, and was ably explained and defended by its author, Frank Clague of Lamberton. In view of the fact that all tax measures must originate in the lower house, the house bill which had already been passed, was the one under consideration, but was amended on motion of Senator Clague so as to become a duplicate of his senate file. There were several efforts to modify the bill, one being to cut down the tax from 50 cents per $100 to 25 cents, but this and all other amendments opposed by the senator from Redwood county were defeated. It is said the bill will raise a tax in Hennepin county of $140,000 a year, and in Ramsey county $100,000 a year.

This afternoon the Iowa distance tariff bill of Senator T. E. Cashman of Owatonna, was a special order for the upper house. One of the first things done was to pass an amendment by the author to strike from the bill the "ton per mile" requirement, leaving the bill to simply embody the distance tariff idea. Senator Cashman then advocated the bill at length, being followed by Senators Works, Witherstine, and Sageng. Senator Frenk Clague opposed the bill. He warned the senate against too much railroad legislation on points already in the courts, and also said the "ton per mile" theory still remained in certain provisions of the bill. Senators Durment and Dunn of St. Paul also opposed the bill.

The house which a few weeks ago gave a body blow to the general appropriation of local options by Senators Cashman and Clague, today turned down a report of the temperance committee to indefinite postponement of a bill by Elmer Adams of Fergus Falls for local option in most cities, and advanced the bill to general orders. The bill originally applied to all cities, but an amendment by the committee was adopted making it applicable only to cities less than 10,000 inhabitants.

The house also passed the C. M. Bendixen bill requiring all kinds of corporations to pay fees for the filing of articles. At present private manufacturing corporations pay a nominal fee of $10, and others a fee based on capitalization. The Bendixen bill places them all on the same level.

The house committee on express and telegraph, reported the Peterson bill regulating telegraph tolls for indefinite postponement, but the author succeeded in getting the committee turned down and the bill advanced to general orders. There were but 4 votes in opposition to the bill's advancement.

St. Paul, April 10—The house today adopted resolutions endorsing Frank Nevel, in placing Herriman in the "Ananias Club." The resolutions were offered by C. J. Erickson of St. James. They recite that whereas the public press has teemed with "personal, infamous and libelous stories made by E. H. Herriman and his crowd, casting slurs and insinuations on the veracity of our president," and the house of representatives "heartily commends the firm efforts of the president to regulate the railroad traffic and express lawlessness."

The senate today also passed and refused to concurring election bills in special order.' After considerable debate, Senator W. W. Dunn's bill providing for election by eli political parties of delegates to county conventions when any party shall by its purpose of electing delegates to state conventions, was passed by a vote of 34 in its favor to 29 against. The other primary election bill under consideration, by Senator E. H. Canfield of Laverne, providing for holding of conventions of political parties to recommend candidates for office, and providing for nominations by petition dates for state offices by primary election was defeated. The committee on elections presented a substitute for the form of a minority report. Final action was not taken on the Canfield bill. Senator McColl of St. Paul presented his measure, a copy of the Oregon law and providing for elections of United States senators by popular vote. A final vote on the bill was 28 in favor, 28 against. This was probably be reconsidered at a later date. In explaining the measure Senator McColl said: "This law was referred to as a bill aimed at raising Gov. J. A. Johnson to the senate of the United States. This is a mistaken impression. Long before this bill, if passed, goes into effect, we expect our esteemed executive will be called to serve the people of this state and nation in a higher capacity than that of United States senator."

The house today passed a resolution asking the attorney general to report on all suits pending with railroads and urging speed in consumating such actions.

Both houses spent much time today advancing bills along routine lines. Among bills of some note disposed of today, might be mentioned the anti-cigarette bill of Senator Sundberg, which failed to get enough votes for passage in the upper house.

St. Paul, April 11—The famous Rockne bill for regulation of railroad stock and bond issues, a measure which had been introduced at the request of the attorney general as a very necessary act in view of the recent supreme court decision upholding the $60,000,000 addition issue of stock by the Great Northern, was killed by the house today. It was a special order of business during the afternoon, and discussed at great length, when put on passage, the measure had but 47 votes in its favor, to 57 against. The question of constitutionality out some figure, the railroad committee by a vote of 10 to 4 deciding it was not constitutional. Representative Rockne in his speech of defense declared that the bill if passed would hamper railroad extension in Minnesota by limiting stock outputs, and would be unfair in that the Great Northern and the Soo are the only transcontinental roads which are Minnesota corporations and could be made to comply with the provisions of the bill.

A tilt in the house today between George W. Rodenberg and C. L. Sawyer of Minneapolis, caused little excitement. Both men early in the session had fathered bills regulating the sale and manufacture of paints. The Sawyer bill had finally passed, but had amended so as to conform with the Rodenberg bill. The trouble came when Sawyer today wanted to further amend the bill. Rodenberg secured the floor and desired to have the galleries and floor cleared of nonmembers and go into executive session, insinuating that he had a scandal to tell about. The house refused to take Rodenberg very seriously, especially after a remark by H. G. Hicks of Minneapolis that on petit bill was backed by more interest, the other by another; and that neither would consent to reasonable amendment. The scandal proved tame and the bill in question were finally referred to a special committee of three, on motion of J. G. Lennon of Minneapolis.

The house appropriations committee today reported favorably on the federal state fair bills; one for an appropriation of $150,000 and the other to permit the state to take Redenberg every seriously, especially after a remark seandal and the bill in question were finally referred to a special committee of three, on motion of J. G. Lennon of Minneapolis.

An amusing incident in the house today resulted in the introdnction of a resolution requesting the speaker to pound less vigorously with his gavel. During some of today's heated discussions, Speaker Johnson pounded too vigorously, the head of the gavel flew off, and struck the reading clerk, J. T. Dow, on the back of the head. Jones had a big lump on his head to remember the incident.

The senate also killed the Calhonn bill to appropriate $25,000 for Minnesota's representation at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition at Seattle in 1909.

St. Paul, April 12—The house in committee of the whole has recommended for passage the Saugstad bill, extending the primary election system to the nomination of all state officers. On an informal ballot on the initial question without considering details on which there are disagreements the project secured 68 favorable votes, to 41 against. The most difference of opinion developed over the time and date for the state primary, the second Tuesday in June. The only delegations objected to this as too early. They were appeased by a promise that the senate would not recommend making the date later in the event large counties or cities of the state.

The senate today refused to concur, disposed to the proposition of the primary election for nomination and indorsement of election of United States senators by the people. Henry McColl of St. Paul endeavored to have his bill on this subject reconsidered, but reconsideration failed to carry, 30 against, 28 for it. The bill had been indefinitely postponed last Wednesday.

The house commodity rate bill, a revamping of the bill under senate bill, passed the senate today with 49 votes in its favor and but 3 against—Senators Calhoun, Smith and Wilson. The bill cuts existing commodity freight rates throughout the state about 10 per cent.

The senate also passed the university appropriation bill of Senator J. T. Jones of Minneapolis, after adopting an amendment by Senator Clague, striking out $90,000 for a medical dormitory, $250,000 for an emergency building, $100,000 for a pharmacy and dental building, and the balance for additional campus.

The Phillips bill, to require that all persons killed while in the state prison, was killed in the house by a vote of 38 to 23. Swan Nelson of Minneapolis made the motion for indefinite postponement which settled the measures fate.

THE HAPPY END.

The story was ended. The villain was dead. The wedding bells had rung out their joyous peal, and that had been done which cannot be undone. The elderly lovers, and the village artfriends, and most of the remaining characters in the story had been paired off in the usual way, and the author had thrown down his pen, and gone forth to drink. The end had been reached. The last page had been written, the reader had closed the book with a sigh, and the happy pair had started on their honeymoon.

As the train drew on, past field and meadow, hill and dale, suddenly she turned on him.

"Gerald!" she cried.

"My love!" he answered. "What is the matter?"

"Oh, Gerald!" she said. "Only to think! There was an orange blossom."

"By George," said he. "Come to think of it, there wasn't. But you had a splendid pest, sweetheart."

"Yes, she bade was very pretty," she sighed. "I suppose it must have been a slip of the author's."

"Yes," he answered slowly—"slipped on the pest!"

"Gerald!" she looked at him with eyes into which the tears would come. "And this was to have been such a happy ending, too!"

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per ear in advance. If not paid in dvance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 903, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. nder the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Defendants Appear.

The Thief River Falls newsapers are tryig their old game gain to injure us and our busi ess, and this time they want to y to take a ride on the back of le respectable people of Thief iver Falls and the Red Lake iver Transportation Company, ded and abetted by men of the amp of Jim O'Brien, T.S. Jacob on and Joe Duchamp.

We wish to state again, that here is no row on between the eople of Thief River Falls and e editor of this paper, and there as been no row, only the ones dreed up by their editors, and ut because they were mad be ause we put this paper in here id took some of their business way from them.

Now after all differaces had een fixed up and the people of hief River Falls and the boat uilders were again on friendly erms, the editors of that City rew up the following resoluti on and employed that allck an Joe Duchamn to impose on e ignorance, and stupidity, of e present Secretary and Presient of the Transportation Company to get them signed.

The following is the report of ial meeting as published in The hief River Falls News, (John stmans paper.)

"BASS HUNT A HOT ONE."

"A meeting of the shareholders f the Red Lake River Transportation company was held a week o Saturday at Highlanding and bout seventy farmers were in ttendence.

It was voted that the freight oat to be built should be 50 x 14 eet instead of 40 x 12 as had been reviously agreed upon. The ontract for the construction of he boat was let to Ole J. Hanson, who gave bonds in the sum of 3,000 to have the boat completed nd in running order by the 10th ay of June. Mr. Hanson was adanced $800 upoil the contract.

A committee consisting of James O'Brien Ole Howard and Joseph Duchamp was halled to come to Thief River Falls and confer with D. N. Witton in regard to using his lumber company's small boat for passenger service. W. G. Hunt was present and presented a bill of $40 for publishing articles of incorporation. As it was alleged Mr. Hunt was to do this work free of charge, is not being required by law that these articles of incorporation be published, considerable discussion followed and the result was that Hunt was allowed $20. Then the following resolutions were unahimously adopted:

Whereas, an alleged newspaper published at Sunbeam by one W. G. Hunt has made many petit attacks upon the city of Thief River Falls, giving their supression that there is enmity existing between the residents of the eleven towns and the city of Thief River Falls.

And, whereas, the said Hunt has further taken it upon himself to make it appear that he was the mouthpiece of the Red Lake River Transportation company, an organization composed of nearly one hundred farmers residing along the Red Lake river in the eleven towns, and was organized for the purpose of promoting commerce between the farmers and the eleven towns and the business men of the city of Thief River Falls, for the mutual advantage of both the farmers and the business men of the two places.

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that we repudiate all statements which the said Hunt has made in his paper, and wish to have it emphatically understood that the said Hunt is not an officer or in any way connected with the management of the Red Lake River Transportation company and that any statements he has made in the past or may make in the future are his personal ones and in no way reflect the sentiment of the shareholders in the Red Lake River Transportation company.

Be it futher resolved that this resolution be published in the Thief River Falls NEWS.

Red Lake River Transportation Co.,

JAMES O' BRIEN, President.

T. S. JACOBSON, Secretary."

Well now we wonder where Eastman got his information that the law did not require that these articals of incorporation need to be published?

We presume he got it from the attorneys of Thief River Falls in the county seat removel contest, but we don't do business with them kind of lawyers.

Now as to Hunt and the Trasportation company.

At the meeting of the share holders in January we was unanimously chosen for Secretary of the Company, but positively declined to accept it, as we did not have time to attend to it, and we were the man that proposed the name of Jacobson for the position. How is that for our standing in the Company John?

When the company was first started we took an active interest in it to get it started right and legal, We were chosen, with W. A. Swanson, of Deer Park to get the articles of Incorporation and by laws drawn up, and we done it, and done it right, although we had to make two trips to Red Lake Falls to consult with the attorneys to do it, and the Company did not pay a cent of our expenisesé either, but we dug down in our pockets and paid them, and while we was doing it the present ignoramus, who is posing as president of the coming city was rutining arround the country talking about people trying to sell out to D.N.Witton.

Now we come up to the last part of this deal.

The farmers found they was short of money to build their first boat and appointed such men of honor and integrity. as Arkjhal J. Wentzel, A. Eve, Mr. Nelson, Olé Wattlendahl and oth ers to get some help to build the first boat, from Thief River Falls, but they turned them down cold.

Then we published the piece that was copied in the Gazette of Red Lake Falls and headed, "THIEF RIVER FALLS HANDS FARMERS A LEMON."

Then after the rays of THE SUNBEAM had a shine at them, as it "warmed" them up, they took hold of the matter and helped the people up here to raise the money to build the boat, But we will say right here that Mr. O'Brien (who is so fast to sign resolutions a gainst Hunt and his paper, as the tools of Joe Duchamp and the editors of Thief River Falls) that if we had said nothing in our paper about their refusal to take stock in the company, he would not have got money enough in the city to wat his "whistle" with, and would had to stay over night with some of his friends and ware his old hat home

Now as to this terrible $40 bill for publishing the articles of incorporation. We have charged the company a cent for all the work we done and money paid out getting up them and the by laws, nor did W. A. Swalsn our able assistant get one cent, but we did present a bill for the publication of the articles of incorporation. Cut it in two, made the company a present of one half and took stock in the comany for the other half. They did not pay us a cent of cash, nor we did not ask them for any. nor has the company ever paid us a cent of cash for our expenses, or any other work, as the men that did the most of the work to get the company started last year got their pay in talk from the present offic ials, that the leaders was trying to sell out to D.N.Winton, and they were not driveing around Thief River Falls with him either, dressed up in a new Company h.clothing to be the whole board of directors, with power to hire men to run the boats.

Iron in the System.

It is often said that there is iron enough in the system of an ordinary man to make a pinwheel. The statement is exceedingly wide of the truth. The amount of iron, contained in the animal tissues of a man weighing 150 pounds is about 100 grains, or a quarter of an ounce. Yet so important is even this small amount, that the experience of a sufferer of a few grains more or less may produce serious constitutional disturbance.

MR. FARMER

The Farmers' Tribune,

Sioux City, Iowa,

Is beyond a doubt the strongest agricultural weekly paper in the west.

It is published for the benefit of farmers of Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, and Nebraska, and its champions their interests. It is edited by men who are thoroughly versed in agriculture. Mr. John Thompson, the editor, formerly of the University of Minnesota, is recognized as an authority on matters pertaining to agriculture. Mr. H. G. McMillan, General manager of the paper, is owner of one of the largest and best known breeding farms in the United States, and he knows what an agricultural journal must be in order to be of the greatest value to its readers.

Among its contributors are:

Prof. C. F. Curtiss, of the Iowa, Agricultural College.
Prof. E. A. Burnett, of the University of the Nebraska Agricultural College.
Prof. J. H. Shepperd, of the South Dakota Agricultural College.
Prof. F. C. Kendall, of the University of Minnesota.

The paper is profusely illustrated by able artists, and is handsomely printed on fine paper, and is published in every respect.

A Weekly Newspaper, Magazine and Agricultural Encyclopedia combined.

We urge our readers to take advantage of the following

Stephen Singer of the firm of Singer Bros. of Rhoda was a pleasant caller at this office Monday. We were speaking to him about the last rush of the Thief River Falls papers, and he said "Why we have not heard any thing about that, for there is no one takes any of the Thief River Falls papers down our way." He wrote up a new add for this issue of THE SUNBEAM.

Ye editor has been busy this week getting out timber for a new stock barn and pasture, and the printer is running the office. We only drop in occasionly to set her a little, but if the "kang" make an other rush we might have to let the farming go for a week and get into the office, as she might get so mad that she would roast the man in both Norwegin and English, and that would not be a "squa'o deal."

On Wednesday May 1st, residents of Thief River Falls will begin the circulation of a new petition for the removal of the county seat from Red Lake Falls to Thief River Falls. The notice to that effect appears in the Thief River Falls papers last week and is signed by a number of citizens of that place. To be legal this new petition will have to have over 1,800 signatures and they must be secured within sixty days from the date the petition is started.

Short Of Brains.

When John Eaman (the drawer of the resolutions published in an other colum) comes to size up his 70 farmers that he claims was present at the time they were passed he will find they dwindle down to three and pretty dard poor farmers at that, viz: Joe Buchamo, T. S. Jacobson, and James O'Brien. It has become painfully apparent to a large number of the share holders of the company, that T. S. Jacobson and Jim O'Brien, since their election to their present position were men that was not overburdened with brains, but it will be news to them when they see this paper, which will be the first time a large number of them have heard about it, that they Jim O'Brien and T. S. Jacobson would allow themselves to be used as suckers to turn the grindstion to grind the ax of John W Eastman.

The "Nit" Digs In.

The Thief River Falls Press says, "Hunt is tied up with the Red Lake Falls bunch" "Baha" A good excuse for you to make an attack on us, because you are mad because we put this paper in here in opposition to you. "Baha" We hate to mention your name, as it will be the first time about ninty nine per-cent of the people up here ever heard, the a fleing old "nit" was publishing a rag of a paper in Thief River Falls, called The Press. The old nit had better wait until he get hatched out and become a full grown louse before he jumps on us with his ilea.

It Might Have Been.

Many of the farmers up this way are thankful to the people of Thief River Falls for taking an interest in getting a line on boats running on this river, We are confident that a large number of the people of that place, who contributed, for the boat, do no indorse the dirty stink stirred up by their editors, who never gave a cent to the enterprise, but tried to use the people who did as "cats paws," to advance their own interest; because they was mad because Hunt was running a newspaper up here in opposition to their personal interests, but not in opposition to any other business in the city of Thief River Falls.

We presume the men who actually donated to the company would much rather have seen the resolution that we had drawn up to be passed by the company and published in THE SUNBEAM than to have seen their editor make a grand rush to stir up dirty stuff for their own private gain. Our resolutions were dashed into the fire and that was the last of them, for while we would do any reasonable thing to advance the finacial standing of the company even to having a little mud thrown on us, that we were not deserving of, yet we will not stand to have it raked in by that class of people.

Unmuzzle The Brutes.

This is the second time the editors of Thief River Falls have jumped on us since we located in this county. This time we kindly ask that city, or any one else interested, to unmuzzle the bitches and turn them loose. We say this for the reason that a dose of it will sniff around the boats visited by them, are terrible offend the, would eat us up, if they had a muzzle on them. Take it off rub their ears and then think twice before we do here at Sunbeam.

His Responsibility.

"That young fellow is not intelligent, amiable or even decently courteous."

"Oh, but her father is worth a million dollars."

"Then I think she should be required to display a notice to that effect."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Starboard and Port.

Why do the sailors call the right hand side of the ship "starboard" and the left hand "port"? For the answer it is necessary to go back to the days when the norsemen sailed Europe. In the viking ships the warriors hung the "pavois," or shields, on the side of the ship above the places for their oars. The viking himself had the steer oar, which was fastened to the right hand side of the stern. Thus the right hand side of the ship became known as the "steer board," or, shortened, starboard. Port eventually became corrupted into port.

Polite Notice Boards.

At the hospital just opposite the entrance to the East India docks and the Blackwall tunnel—near the tramway—notice boards are set up asking the drivers, for the sake of those who are ill within, to walk their horses past the building. This is a common courtesy request, but what gives it a peculiar interest about that corner, where it is compelled to be said, and hooped to hand, is the knowledge of the other corner of the building—near the Commercial road—there is a public house.—London Opinion.

THE SCARLET SCARF

BY F. H. MELVILLE

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

At seven o'clock in the evening all Falkland was astir; the streets were full of unfamiliar dazzling figures moving with one accord toward the palace where Douglas, the earl of Angus, would entertain for his royal prisoner, James Stuart.

The yards stood open while troops of gay horsemen and horsewomen cantered through, lords and ladies from the length and breadth of the Kingdom of Fife. Their trains followed them in bright disorder of color and glitter. Each guest destined for the palace wore a small mask and many and various were the costumes donned by the masqueraders.

At the entrance to the park stood the young king, James Stuart. King in name only, for his stern stepfather, Douglas, the earl of Angus, virtually held him prisoner, nor could he even ride within the limits of Falkland park unescorted.

A little way behind him stood Douglas, earl of Angus, an unmistakable figure, though masked and in the dress of an ancient Thane, his eyes ever on his royal prisoner.

Among the gay company of masqueraders there appeared presently a lean man, wallet on side, and a woman with long dark locks, in the short petticoat skirt of the peasant; and a crooked staff in her hand. The king knew her carelessly.

"Can the scarf of a Douglas," whispered the earl of Angus. "'Tis the Sparwife of Creich to the life, and by'r lakin herself. Could we but see her face—"

"Sparwife!" exclaimed James. "Then shall she read us our riddles. Let us pass to the company and afterward to the play."

The king had drawn a little apart from the crowd when a voice broke in gently:

"May it please his majesty to hear what the fates have written?"

"Of a surety, good madam," replied the king at once extending his hand. "Say on." She bent over the palm eagerly, mumbling some indistinct words. James inclined his head to listen intently.

Broken words by the aid of a friend—the voice fell to a whisper so that he alone heard, and she no longer read from the hand. "Horses at midnight outside the West Port. Kirkhouse the means of liberty lie in the royal chamber. The guard at the royal postern will be silent. Follow the Sparwife standing at the gatehouse on the stroke of 12. Lose all, or gain everything!"

Then she stooped again and peered closely into the palm as if seeking there what she had said, and her brow became clouded.

"Tis written, "tis written," she said, as if to reassure herself. "But beware of woman! Woman ever worked ill to the Stuart race." Then suddenly dropping the hand she turned to find the Douglas and his young daughter Margaret who stood behind her. Attracted by the noise, other guests flocking in their wake, came towards the king.

"A soothsayer!" cried one, lightly. "Read me my fate, friend."

The Sparwife turned instead to Angus.

"Would the Douglas know his fate, and what the future holds for him?" she demanded, drawing down her dark brows, and fixing her eyes on Angus' face.

"Nay," he answered, shortly. "Douglar lords not old wives' tales."

If the Douglas will not, then read me the weird of his daughter," broke in the fair Margaret Douglas, stretching out her hand. The soothsayer glanced at it, then at the pretty face framed with its frame of golden hair, and hesitated, her aspect softening somewhat.

"Speak!" cried Margaret, imperiously, flushing as she read the expression. "Can it be that the Sparwife pities Margaret Douglas?"

To betray a half-brother, to wander with never a home, to love and be loved, then to languish in vain within prison walls—"

"Betray a half-brother—that is Jamie! Languish in a dungeon! Where will it be, Jamie? 'Tis not too hard. But I shall love and be loved! Ah, well-a-day!" And she skipped off, dragging the king with her, to see the dancers on the bowling green, while the Sparwife disappeared in the crowd, followed by her kinsman Leslie.

But no music of lutes and viols, nor nimble footing of the dancers—Egyptians from the sons to the daughters—array—seemed to hold the attention of James Stuart. In the quick throbbing of the strings he heard again the Sparwife's words, and freedom rose before him in one great pulse of exhilaration. Less than an hour to liberty, a few short hours till he might pay back in full to Douglas the miserable farce of thraldom in mimic kingship; when morning dawned he would be king indeed—make an end of the stormy past and begin a fairer future.

In another moment James was going towards the door of the palace that led to the royal apartments. There, the woman had said, he should find the means of liberty. Breathless, he passed the guard at the foot of the turret stairs, who saluted stolidly and, mounting two steps at a time, flung aside the curtain over the door of the first apartment, and ran to the inner room. On a couch lay a magnificent cloak. The king undid it with hasty trembling fingers. It was the dress of a gypsy dancing girl. At once he understood the Sparwife's plan.

He tore off his Spanish costume, and picked up the gypsy's. Laboring with the ties and fastenings, it was some minutes before he stood transformed into a tall, comely girl, in short green skirt with tarnished gold trappings and wide, long-sleeved jacket. A quick application of brown nut-stain to cheeks and eyebrows, changed the fresh Stuart skin to a dusky olive; the remainder of the stain he poured over his white hands and on his arms. Then he glanced round the room. The scarf to wind round his head and hide his curls was wanting! James tossed his discarded clothes in all directions in his search for the missing headdress, but he could find none, and time was flying.

A bell clanged the hour of midnight! Clad as he was, James hurried from the room and up the winding stairs into the apartments of the ladies of the court. Not even a servant was to be seen—all had gone on holiday. The king opened the door of a small inner room gently. It was a sleeping chamber, and a pile of feminine finery lay in one corner. In a trice he had snatched from the heap a long red scarf of quaint device, and, turning, fled downstairs again.

Meanwhile Margaret, daughter to the earl, in the garden suddenly found herself confronted by her father. He was flushed and excited, and his voice trembled somewhat, with rage or fear, as he accosted her roughly with the question:

"Where is his majesty?"

The girl stood irresolute, then faltered out:

"His grace left me even now. Someone yonder prayed him to hasten."

Angus strode off, followed by a number of guests, partisans of the Douglas.

Beside the gatehouse, in the shadow of a buttress, the Sparwife had waited long. She now peered further into the crowd, and then at Leslie who stood near, carelessly fastening his cloak at the throat.

A tall, buxom gypsy girl threaded her way through the thronged courtyard towards the gate. The Sparwife drew a deep breath, came out from the shadow into full view in the bright glare that beat on the gateway from a huge lantern, and stood there for an instant. Then she passed between the guards into the night beyond.

The gypsy drew nearer to the archway. A few steps more and she would be beyond the palace walls, when suddenly the order rang out:

"Close the gates!"—and the portcullis crashed down between her and the Sparwife.

With a backward movement the crowd within the courtyard parted to make way for the Douglas, who turned at the gate and faced the throng.

"My lords and gentlemen," he began, fiercely. Then moderating his tone, "My lords! His majesty is not to be found. The gates will be opened when the riddle is solved."

An uneasy silence greeted his words. Then on a sudden, from the heart of the crowd, the shrill childish voice of Lady Margaret Douglas rose in anger: "My scarf! The gypsy wench dares to wear my scarf!"

Then the tone changed in another instant to a laugh of keen enjoyment, and clapping her hands, she ran forward, while the spectators looked where she pointed, at the tall gypsy girl.

"Why, 'tis Jamie himself!" she cried. "Do you not know his majesty? A comely lass indeed!"

Still laughing, she snatched off the scarlet headdress, and the well-known ruddy curls fells in a gleaming cascade on his shoulders, their color strangely out of place against the swarthy complexion.

The Douglas stepped forward and bowed low.

"May the Douglas venture," he asked, "to commend his majesty's skill? 'Tis a fitting feat with which to end the evening's masque."

"A very perfect jest," added the court jester speaking in the Douglas' ear, "for, one step more and it had been—earnest!"

THOUGHT HIM A LUNATIC.

Man's Queer Jumble of Words Warranted the Inference.

Prof. William Lyon Phelps of Yale recently told this story at New Haven's chamber of commerce banquet: A hard drinker was cold by his doctor that he could be cured if every time he felt that he must have a drink he would immediately take something to eat instead.

The man followed the advice and was cured, but the habit of asking for food had become so fixed with him that once he was nearly locked up as a lunatic. He was stopping at a hotel and, hearing a great commotion in the room next to his, he peeped over the transom to see what the matter was. He saw, and rushed madly down to the office and shouted to the clerk: "The man in 163 has shot himself! Ham and egg sandwich, please!"—Lippincott's.

SPLENDID APRIL TONIC.

Easily Prepared at Home and Harmless to Use.

This is known as "Blood-Cleansing Time," especially among the older folks, who always take something during this month to clean the blood of impurities and build it up.

The following is the recipe as given by a well-known authority, and anyone can prepare it at home:

Fluid Extract Dandelion one-half ounce, Compound Kargon one ounce, Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla three ounces.

Get these simple ingredients from any good pharmacy and mix by shaking well in a bottle. The dose is one teaspoonful after meals and at bed time.

Everybody should take something to help the blood, which becomes impoverished and almost sour after the winter season, especially those who are subject to Rheumatism, Catarrh, Kidney and Bladder trouble.

It is said that one week's use of this mixture will clear the skin of sores, pimples or boils.

This is sound, healthy advice, which will be appreciated by many readers.

HAD NERVE, BUT NO MONEY.

Unlucky Man's Modest Request for Pecuniary Assistance.

Raymond Hitchcock, the comedian, while in New Orleans a few months ago, took the opportunity of going to the races. During the afternoon he rashed several tickets, the result of good guesses. He was feeling happy after the last race, and started for the automobile which was to convey him back to his hotel. As he was about to climb into the machine he felt a hand on his arm, and a man shouted in his ear:

"Hello, Hitchcock, how are you? Hear you put a crimp in the bookies to-day."

Hitchcock blushed and shook hands sheepishly, not recognizing the man, and not wishing to show it.

"Say, I want to speak to you confidentially," said the stranger.

"All right; what is it?" asked the comedian.

"Well, I am up against some hard luck to-day. They cleaned me and I want to get home. Now, don't let any one of those people see you, but slip me enough for car fare, will you?"

"Sure," said Hitchcock, placing his hand in his pocket. Then he paused and queried: "Where do you live?"

"Vancouver," was the answer.

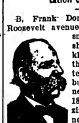
Hitchcock took a flying leap for his machine, and unless the visitors at New Orleans are more gullible, the impecunious one is still looking for car fare.—Harper's Weekly.

ROMANTIC DEVONSHIRE.

The Land Made Famous by Philpotts' Novels.

Philpotts has made us familiar with romantic Devonshire, in his fascinating novels, "The River," "Children of the Mist," etc. The characters are very human; the people there drink coffee with the same results as elsewhere. A writer nt Rock House, Orchard Hill, Bideford, North Devon, states:

"For 20 years I drank coffee for breakfast and dinner but some 5 years ago I found that it was producing indigestion and heart-burn, and was making me restless at night. These symptoms were followed by brain fag and a sluggish mental condition.



"When I realized this, I made up my mind to quit drinking coffee and having read of Postum, I concluded to try it. I had it carefully made, according to directions, and found to my agreeable surprise at the end of a week, that I no longer suffered from either indigestion, heart-burn or brain fag, and that I build drink it at night and secure restful and refreshing sleep.

"Since that time we have entirely discontinued the use of the old kind of coffee, growing fonder and fonder of Postum as time goes on. My digestive organs certainly do their work much better now than before, a result due to Postum Food Coffee, I am satisfied.

"As a table beverage we find (for all the members of my family use it) that when properly made it is most refreshing and agreeable, of delicious flavor and aroma. Vigilance is, however, necessary to secure this, for unless the servants are watched they are likely to neglect the thorough boiling which it must have in order to extract the goodness from the cereal." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

A TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE.

How a Veteran Was Saved the Amputation of a Limb.

B. Frank Doremus, veteran, of Roosevelt avenue, Indianapolis, Ind., says: "I had been showing symptoms of kidney trouble from the time I was mustered out of the army, but in all my life I never suffered as in 1897. Headaches, dizziness and sleeplessness, first, and then dropsy. I was weak and helpless, having run down from 180 to 125 pounds. I was having terrible pain in the kidneys, and the secretions passed almost involuntarily. My left leg swelled until it was 34 inches around, and the doctor napped it night and morning until I could no longer stand it, and then he advised amputation. I refused, and began using Doan's Kidney Pills. The swelling subsided gradually, the urine became natural, and all my pains and aches disappeared. I have been well now for nine years since using Doan's Kidney Pills.

The Value and Importance of Ethical Remedies.

Remedies which physicians sanction for family use, as they act most beneficially and are gentle yet prompt in effect, and called ethical, because they are of Known Excellence and Quality and of Known Component Parts.

To gain the full confidence of the Well-Informed of the world and the approval of the most enlightened physicians, it is essential that the component parts be known to and approved by them, and, therefore, the California Fig Syrup Company has published for many years past in its advertisements and upon every package a full statement thereof. The perfect purity and uniformity of product which they demand in a laxative remedy of an ethical character are assured by the California Fig Syrup Company's original method of manufacture, known to the Company only.

There are other ethical remedies approved by physicians, but the product of the California Fig Syrup Company possesses the advantage over all other family laxatives that it cleanses, sweetens and relieves the internal organs on which it acts, without disturbing the natural functions or any debilitating after effects and without having to increase the dose from time to time.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of Syrup of Figs, and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtlessly it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs and to get its beneficial effects, always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for Syrup of Figs, or by the full name, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, as Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Company, and the same heretofore known by the name, Syrup of Figs, which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

DOOR LATCH.

How a Serviceable One Can Be Made from Carriage Brace.

I have a plan of making a latch for corn crib door which I have used and found to be very satisfactory, writes a farmer in Prairie Farmer. I took an old buggy top joint and bolted one end to a door, as shown in the illustration. I allowed the other end to swing loose. Next I spiked a 2x4 to side of crib and bored a hole in the end on level with latch. The carriage top bar is bent as shown by dotted line, the end is inserted in hole 2x0 and then pulled down into lock.

I have found by experience that this latch cannot be rubbed open as is so often the case with other latches.

CORN MUST BE TESTED.

The Only Method to Be Certain of Germinating Qualities.

A good many people think they can tell when corn will grow, and when it will not, without testing it. Hundreds of young men from all over Iowa come to the college at Ames for the two weeks' short course. One year I let each member of a large class take 40 ears to examine and study for two days and see if he could tell which would grow and which would not. They did not know that I had set a little trap for them by mixing up good corn and bad ears and ears of weak vitality, all of which I had tested in a germinator ten days previously. When their judgment of each ear was compared with my record of its test it was seen that they had all made mistakes. When we were through I asked if there was any one of them who thought he could pick out corn that was safe to plant without testing it, and not a single hand went up over the audience. You may often tell by examination when a kernel is dead, but you cannot tell when it is weak or low in vitality without the germinating test.—Prof. P. G. Holden.

ENGLISH TARRED ROADS.

Hygienic Value Demonstrated at Birmingham, England.

The hygienic value of roads patented with tar, thoroughly appreciated in Birmingham, England. The road is first thoroughly cleaned by dry sweeping, then roughly distilled tar is poured over it and spread evenly after which sand is thrown on and the road is immediately ready for traffic. A fortnight or three weeks after a second coating is applied, and in a short time the road has the appearance of an asphalt street. It appears, also, that a short stretch of road in Beckenham was treated with tar oil, which is poured over again and again until the pores of the road exude the preparation. This, however, dries up quickly, does not make an oily and nasty mess in wet weather, and is said to be much cheaper than the tar process, but it requires more frequent renewals. A comparatively small quantity of the material is available, and this is a difficulty in the way of its general adoption.

FARM WORK.

Thorough cultivation of the corn field before planting pays big.

Have you provided a pasture for the hogs? Don't leave it out of your plans for the year.

Take away the unsightly chip pile and put it on a thin piece of ground. The result will be more bushels of corn or oats next fall.

It's a good plan to set an evergreen windbreak three rows thick around the house, barn and yards. It will save fuel and add greatly to the comfort of everybody and every animal.

Irrigation in France.

In France many of the irrigation enterprises are under private management and are backed by private capital. A report recently made to the Academy of Sciences at Paris says that the ignorance and conservatism of the farmers stand as obstacles in the way of the success of enterprises so backed. The writer of the report advocates government control of the enterprises and of the selling of water by volume instead of by a fixed flow. This would make it possible for each farmer to use just the volume of water needed by his land.

FOR BETTER ROADS.

What It Means to Improve and Maintain Dirt Roads.

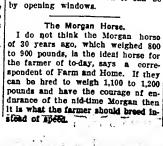
The chief thing to do in attacking the road problem is to thoroughly drain and grade the roads and then harrow or drag the surface, so that the water will not stand. This being done, the roads will be more satisfactory during nine or ten months in the year than if they were coated with gravel or broken stone. As is well known, water is a great destroyer of dirt roads and this must be removed. Side ditches are nearly always provided, but experience shows that these are inadequate. The best method of draining a dirt road is difficult to describe, because so much depends upon the surface. Where water falls upon a road it must be carried off the surface to one side or the other for drainage.

The first thing to do in starting to improve a dirt road is to grade it with some of the machines now on the market for that purpose, says Orange Judd Farmer. It should be slightly higher in the middle than at the sides, so that when the water falls upon it it will run to one side or the other. Of course, this grading should be done early enough in the season to permit the surface becoming packed and hardened before freezing weather sets in in the fall.

The water which is carried off runs to the open ditch on the side. It is undoubtedly most satisfactory to have a little along either side to carry off this water and also remove the water from beneath the roadbed. This tile should be three or four feet below the surface and have sufficient fall to drain well. Some supervisors advise putting a tile also in the middle of the road, but if side tiles are properly put in, this will not be necessary. There is, however, no objection to the former plan, but most roadmen find that the side drain is sufficient. However, occasionally a road supervisor insists that the middle drain should never be omitted. If the outlets are of the right kind and the tiles have the proper fall, all the surface and subsurface water should be removed and the road will remain in good condition most of the year.

With the drainage looked after properly, the care of the surface of the road is exceedingly important. This matter has been before the public very prominently during the last few years by those who advocate the use of the split drag log. This is simply an instrument made by fastening together two pieces of a split log and dragging this over the surface to remove inequalities, fill up ruts and holes and keep the surface level, so that all the water which falls upon it will run into the side drain. This method has been practiced for many years and where conscientiously used the drag is a great benefit. The smoothing harrow answers the same purpose and a drag, with a strip of metal along the front, answers even better.

The time of treating the surface of the road is in the early spring, when the frost is coming out of the ground. Whenever the surface is sufficiently dry so that the upper part of the ground is mellow, go over the road with a drag or harrow until the surface is perfectly level. Repeat this every day until the road is packed down solid. Continue the use of this drag or harrow throughout the season and just before the ground freezes up, and see that the top of the road is level, so that the water will run off during the winter.



It has been fully demonstrated in Illinois, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska that this method of road treatment will give good roads and removes the only excuse farmers heavily for hard roads. Farmers in this part of the United States will never submit to the hard road law and there is little danger of it being passed.

CELLAR VENTILATION.

System Will Give Fresh Air Both Summer and Winter.

The accompanying sketch shows a system of cellar ventilation, which is described by a correspondent of the Rural New Yorker as follows:

In building the cellar wall, build in on each side a line of two or three inch drain pipe, emptying into the cellar just above the ground level. During the summer these can be left open, and the cool air of early morning will flow in and the cellar will be cool and pleasant all day. During the winter they can be closed except when it is desirable to ventilate or air the cellar, which can be done better and with less danger of frost by opening these ducts than it can be by opening windows.

Method of Cellar Ventilation.

The Morgan Horse.

I do not think the Morgan horse of 30 years ago, which weighed 800 to 900 pounds, is the ideal horse for the farmer of to-day, says a correspondent of Farm and Home. If they can be bred to weigh 1,100 to 1,200 pounds and have the courage of endurance of the old-time Morgan then it is what the farmer should breed instead of Morgan.

BABY WASTED TO SKELETON.

In Torments with Terrible Sores on Face and Body—Tors at Flesh —Cured by Cuticura.

"My little son, when about a year and a half old began to have sores come out on his face. They began to come on his arms, then on other parts of his body, and then one came on his chest, worse than the others. At the end of about a year and a half of suffering he grew so bad I had to tie his hands in cloths at night to keep him from scratching the sores and tearing the flesh. He got to be a mere skeleton and was hardly able to walk. I sent to the drug store and got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment, and at the end of about two months the sores were all well. He has never had any sores of any kind since, and only for the Cuticura Remedies my precious child would have died from these terrible sores. I used only one cake of Soap and about three boxes of Ointment. Mrs. Egbert Shelton, R. F. D. No. 1, Woodville, Conn., April 22, 1906."

BACKACHE AND DESPONDENCY

MISS LENA NAGEL.

Are both symptoms of organic derangement, and nature's warning to women of a trouble which will sooner or later declare itself.

How often do we hear women say, "It seems as though my back would break." Yet they continue to drag along and suffer with aches in the small of the back, pain low down in the side, dragging sensations, nervousness and no ambition.

They do not realize that the back is the main spring of woman's organism and quickly indicates by aching a diseased condition of the feminine organs, and that aches and pains will continue until the cause is removed.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

made from native roots and herbs has been for many years the most successful remedy in such cases. No other medicine has such a record of cures of feminine ills.

Miss Lena Nagel, of 117 Morgan St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes— "I was completely worn out and on the verge of nervous prostration. My back ached all the time. I had dreadful periods of pain, was subject to fits of crying and extreme nervousness, and was in every way weak and tired. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints, such as Backache, Falling and Displacements, and all Ovarian Diseases. Dissolves and expels Tumors at an early stage. It strengthens and tones the Stomach. Cures Headache and Indigestion and invigorates the whole feminine system.

Could YOU Marry Happily with So Many Millions?

MISS ETHEL ROCKEFELLER

M. HARTLEY-DODGE

New York.—Is there any young couple in all the world as lucky as young Marcellus Hartley Dodge and pretty Miss Ethel Rockefeller?

They have announced their engagement. The wedding takes place within a few weeks—very quietly because of the recent death of Mr. Dodge's father. It will be a marriage of millions to millions.

But the millions are the small part of this newest engagement and coming marriage. Young Mr. Dodge has youth, health, talent and popularity. And Miss Rockefeller is as fortunate. There is nothing now in the world that they may not have, save each other—and that happy day is not far away.

Couple Has Vast Wealth.

When the clergyman says: "I pronounce you man and wife," out of the church will walk the richest young pair in all New York, if not in all the United States. Nobody knows how rich young Mr. Dodge is—he has something between $20,000,000 and $60,000,000, an estate which is increasing in size by leaps and bounds every day. It came from his grandfather, the late Marcellus Hartley. He cannot spend even the interest.

Miss Rockefeller is one of the heiresses to the vast wealth of William Rockefeller, her father. His holdings no man could possibly figure up, save only Mr. Rockefeller himself, who is a younger brother of John D. Rockefeller, head of the great Standard Oil and all its allied interests.

Just imagine how fortunate these young people are.

Suppose the great Rockefeller fortunes were to be wiped out in the twinkling of an eye; young Mrs. Dodge would still share in her husband's income of from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000 a year—quite a tidy bit to keep the wolf from the door.

No Danger of Penury.

Should the Dodge estate go to pieces and leave not a penny, then young Mr. Dodge would have for a wife one of the richest heiresses in the United States—a wife who never has to count the cost of anything, be it a jeweled necklace that costs a queen once more or an ocean-going steam yacht. No Rockefeller ever has to count the cost of anything, as even some of our poorer millionaires sometimes must.

But, money having been provided for these two young people from the day of their birth, they have other things to think of. Money doesn't bring happiness to a millionaire. He must have more, because money in always there to be the ready servant of his slightest whim. He doesn't have to think about the butcher or the baker or the landlord. He does not even have to pay them, his secretary does that for him.

Young Mr. Dodge went to Columbia university with the class of 1903. Probably he thought more of his career there than he did of the millions that now are his. He wanted to do something more, and he did. To begin with, he was extremely popular. When in '03 he graduated the young man was voted one of the busiest three and one of the most popular three men in his class. Lucky? Yes! Not only because of his inheritance, but because of himself. And that pleased Dodge, '03, more than anything else in the world.

Really Useful Millionaire.

Besides, he had been elected head of the college Y. M. C. A. and president of his class. He was a member of the track team and coxswain of his class crew—quite a bit for any young man to achieve in his college course.

He decided to return the compliment that his Columbia classmates had paid him by doing something worth while. So with his aunt, Mrs. Helen Hartley Jenkins, he presented a $300,000 dormitory to Columbia on his graduation as a memorial to his grandfather.

More luck came thick and fast even before the young men left college. His grandfather was dead and his directorates in the Equitable Life, in which he was one of the largest stockholders, was vacant. The other directors promptly put the college boy in his place. Then, when the will and some outside memoranda were read, it was found that old Mr. Marcellus Hartley, for whom he had been named, had left him the bulk of his fortune—how many millions no one knows to this day.

Settled Down to Work.

The young man took all his responsibilities very seriously. No butterfly society life for him!

He said good-by to his classmates and went down to work in the big Broadway offices of his grandfather's great concern, the Hartley Arms company. There he is working to this day. The big factory is at Bridgeport, Conn., and the young man is a familiar figure up there, going over the business founded by his grandfather many years ago.

"I want to work," he has told his friends. "I want to prove that my grandfather's faith in me was well founded. I want to get down to the serious problems of life. I am not afraid of the responsibilities that have been imposed upon me, because I am sure of the aid and advice of my grandfather's friends."

He took up other tasks then. He interested himself in the Y. M. C. A. and contributed liberally. He likewise kept an eye upon the Hartley Settlement house, founded by his grandfather, and was elected a trustee. He became so busy a man that he had to give up all outdoor sports, although athletics had been his forte.

Avoids All Speculation.

He has been elected to many of the directorates which his grandfather once held. To-day he is a very busy young man. Well known is his pet aversion. He refuses to speculate. When he invests some of his surplus income he buys stocks or bonds of gilt-edged companies outright and holds them for investment.

"If I can," I will make my name the synonym for the highest honor and business integrity," he has said.

Young Mr. Dodge has known Miss Rockefeller for several years, and there have been rumors before of their engagement. It was just the same old story—the love of two young people for one another. Miss Rockefeller didn't have that distressing feeling that perhaps she was being wooed for her money—as many a rich girl has had before, and young Mr. Dodge didn't have to think that he was being angled for because of his great fortune—as some other young millionaires have felt before.

Engagement Announced.

In due season Mr. and Mrs. Rockefeller announced the engagement at their home, No. 689 Fifth avenue. Mrs. Hartley, the grandmother of the young man, confirmed it at her home, No. 232 Madison avenue, where Mr. Dodge dwells. His mother died when he was born. His father, the late Norman W. Dodge, died at Nyack about a month ago. He was a grandson of the late William Earl Dodge, Sr., one of New York's foremost citizens. Mr. Dodge's wife was Marcellus Hartley's daughter. Young Mr. Dodge is now 26 years old.

Miss Rockefeller some day will have her share of the Rockefeller millions. Her father, William Rockefeller, and her uncle, John D. Rockefeller, are two of the richest men in the world.

She has been "out" for about six years, her mother giving her a formal debut in 1901. Her first public appearance was at the Waldorf-Astoria at one of the Friday cotillions. But she is seen very little by the fashionables—in fact, she cares little for small talk and late suppers, dancing or the theater.

Horses are her hobby. Many a ribbon has she won, too, at the out-door horse shows, where she rides and drives herself. Four years ago Miss Rockefeller astonished even her intimates by entering 23 horses at the Westchester horse show. It took hours of begging and pleading with her father to gain his consent, but it was finally accomplished. Miss Ethel won because she frankly admitted that she was proud of her horses, and wanted others to see what beautiful animals they really were.

And when her horse fondness took his blue Miss Ethel's heart was filled with more happiness than it would have been had Standard Oil stock mounted another 100 points a share.

An Outdoor Girl.

Miss Rockefeller is distinctly an outdoor girl. She much prefers to canter over the Westchester roads than to frivol at an afternoon tea. She can drive as well as she can ride, too, and many a fine afternoon sees her driving a spirited pair, with some girl friend as companion. And she never lets a groom accompany her.

The bride-to-be is a young woman who doesn't have to be amused. She can amuse herself; she is never bored; she is bright, attractive, her gowns are marvels of taste and simplicity; she cares little for jewelry. She is a graduate of Miss Spence's school, from which so many daughters of millionaires have been sent forth.

Miss Rockefeller is decidedly good-looking. She is rather petite, with dark-brown hair and eyes and a pink-and-white complexion that speaks of early hours and plenty of exercise in the open air. Her face is well rounded and her figure is excellent—in fact, she is a type of the well-groomed American girl.

Fond of Early Rides.

Some of this comes from her early morning rides. She never misses them when she is up at Rockwood hall, her father's stone palace at Irvington. On rainy mornings she may be seen riding along the roads at a brisk gallop, her hair flying in the wind, her cheeks aglow with youth and health.

And this is the sort of a girl who is going to join the Rockefeller fortune with the Dodge fortune.

They will have everything that money can buy—yachts, horses, a house in town, another in the country, with perhaps a villa at the seashore. They will have hosts of friends, of course, because both of them have so many friends already, and these will join forces when the young people are married.

When Miss Rockefeller becomes Mrs. Dodge, there will be no more marriageable Rockefellers. She is the last of her generation to go to the altar. Ambitious mamas will have to wait another 20 years for another Rockefeller part.

All the grown-up Rockefellers will have been married!

A FEW FROZEN FACTS.

Unheard-of Sufferings as Endured by the People Out West.

"Your people here in the east must have read of our sufferings in the west in December and January," said the man from Dakota, as he shivered again, "but I don't suppose the papers published the situation half as bad as he was."

"Shortage of coal, wasn't it?" was asked.

"Exactly. I bought the last ton for sale in my village and paid $40 for it. By the middle of November I was burning my fences. By the first of December most of my barn had gone. Before January was half through I was burning an unsolicited circular furniture for fuel. We were crowded into two rooms, but the weather held right along at over 40 below. My children had their heels frostbitten while they stood in front of the stove."

"It must have been pretty tough."

"Tough? Why, my dear man, on people in America were ever called upon to endure what we in the Dakotas. Every cow, horse, sheep, calf, hog and dog in our country froze to death, and though we used their carcases for fuel we still continued to suffer."

"But the weather finally broke and the coal famine was relieved."

"Yes, but the last five days will ever remain imprinted on my memory. We had burned the last of the furniture and begun tearing off the doors. We had word that a coal train would reach us within the week, but how to get over that week was the question. My wife is a woman weighing 200 pounds, while I am thin and long and without an ounce of grease about me, as you see. For one of those last days we sat and looked at each other for a long time. There were seven freezing children besides ourselves. Those 200 pounds would keep the stove going until the coal came and six of our lives would be saved."

"Heavens, but you didn't mean that your wife offered herself as a sacrifice!" exclaimed the horrified passenger.

"No!" was the quiet reply. "No, she refused to, and that's why I left home and can never, never return, and why my faith in human nature can never be restored should I live to be a thousand years old. She wouldn't be turned into fuel, sir, and she's alive and fat to-day, and if any you want to get up a game of poker I'll take a hand in to try and forget my sorrows."—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

HOW TO ADVERTISE

EFFECTIVE METHODS THAT WILL BRING RESULTS.

SHOULD TELL THE PRICES

Generalities Are Meaningless to the Public—Why the Mail-Order Man Wins—Try the Plan.

If you, Mr. Merchant, would compete with the mail-order houses there are three main essentials to success—the goods—the prices—advertising.

The last of these is quite as essential as either of the others.

In the great majority of cases the local merchant has the goods, and he makes the prices, but in very many cases he either fails to do the advertising, or what he does do is not effective in the same way that the mail-order man's advertising is effective.

The writing of effective advertising is not an art, it is not a science, but it requires years of study to learn. A few hours of study and comparison will give you every essential detail that you will need.

It is comparatively safe to say that 75 per cent. of the advertising carried by local merchants in the local papers is worded in generalities only. Such advertisements as the following are found in every paper:

GO TO BLANK'S
FOR Hardware, Stoves and Tinware
BEST GOODS LOWEST PRICES

The mail-order man's advertising is different. It is specific, and while the glowing descriptions given are often misleading—a thing which Blank's advertising should never be—they attract the attention of the reader and possible purchaser because they tell about some one thing that he may possibly want.

The mail-order man makes a run on a few things which he is willing to sell at a close margin of profit in order to attract trade in his general line on which heavy profits are made. Blank should advertise the hardware in much the same manner the mail-order advertisers hardware, and he has this advantage—he can invite the people of the community to visit his store and see the goods for themselves so they will know just what they are buying.

It, instead of expressing meaningless generalities in a two-inch space, Blank had used a little more space and properly displayed an advertisement something like the following he would have been sure to have attracted attention to his store, and in all probability would have been surprised at the drawing power of his advertising:

WASHDAY BARGAIN SALE
AT
EVERYTHING NEEDED FOR WASHDAY
AT BARGAIN PRICES
During Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week

$3.79 for a 2 year guaranteed best quality Clothes Wringer, the King of Wringers.

$1.48 for a good American clothes wringer, 11 inch rolls, hardwood frame.

74c for genuine "No Sag" Curtain Stretchers. Corner brace and rust proof nail.

98c for extra heavy copper rim and bottom wash boilers.

14c for a dozen of the first quality Clothes Pins.

18c for 50 foot white Cotton Braided Clothes Line.

89c for hardwood folding Clothes Bar of exceptional size for the money.

22c for full sized very best quality Wash Boards.

75c for American sized galvanized iron Wash Tubs.

24c for small, heavy galvanized iron water or scrub pail.

45c for best quality fiber Water Pail of exceptional merit.

79c for an excellent quality of ironing boards that will not warp.

54c for an extra large heavy willow splasher Clothes Basket.

The prices given here are nl course more fictlon, but the prices Blank should quote in his advertisement should show the public that he is giving bargains; they should be prices that would compare favorably with the prices of the mail-order catalogues, and he should impress it upon the public that he not only shows them what they are buying before they pay for it, but that the purchaser has no freight to pay, and does not have to wait so interminable time for the goods to come to hays, as when ordering of the mell order houses.

It is specific advertising that draws. The advertiser who describes in detail the goods he has to sell, and quotes the price he asks for it will attract the favorable attention of the public lar more often than the one who deals only in generalities. It is this kind of advertising that pays. It is this kind of advertising that is attracting the dollars from the smaller cities and towns and farms to the mail-order houses of the city. It is this kind of advertising that drew $200,000,000 into the cofers of the Chicago mail-order houses olone last year, and it is this kind of advertising on the part of the local merchants that the mail-order houses fear more than any other one thing.

But Mr. Merchant, whether your line he hardware, dry goods, groceries, clothing or other commodities, it is well to go further than your newspaper advertising, though this is the foundation of success. Go to the local printer and have him make you little catalogues of your own. They do not need to be large affairs, but small folders of four, eight or 16 pages. Put into these folders the descriptions and prices of the goods you are carrying, or leaders in the line. Be sure that the prices quoted are right, then put one of these into the hands of every customer; keep them circulating throughout the community, and make a practice of getting out a new one every few weeks.

You, Mr. Merchant, can make advertising pay larger returns than the mail-order man secures; you can make it the mainstay of your business, and you can make it the means of killing the mail-order competition in your community.

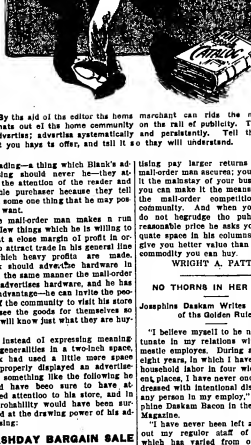
And when you do this do not begrudge the publisher the reasonable price he asks you for adequate space in his columns. He will give you better value than any other commodity you can buy.

WRIGHT A. PATTERSON.

NO THORNS IN HER PATH.

Josephine Daskam Writes in Tribute of the Golden Rule.

"I believe myself to be notably fortunate in my relations with my domestic employees. During a period of eight years, in which I have employed a good number in a wide variety of ancient places, I have never once been addressed with intentional disrespect by any member of the company. Josephine Daskam Bacon in the American Magazine.



"I have never been left a day with out my regular staff of employes, while I was varied from one to five that is to say, that I have never been left suddenly or without sufficient notice to supply the vacancy.

"I have never had a satisfactory worker leave me except for what I considered a good reason (in the main, because of advantageous marriage).

"I have never lost an unsatisfactory one except by my own dismissal. I have never to my knowledge, or even suspicion, suffered the loss of a penny's worth by theft, and my record for breakage is such that it produces in me incredulity.

"In three cases out of four I have had services willingly and frequently offered me along lines where it was not expected or requested. I have had extra money offered by me to offset extra work occasioned by sickness refused on the ground that at such times all the household expected to share the trouble.

"And as a climax I am able to state that once, at least, on my offering a raise in wages to express my appreciation of competent and devoted service I was met with the astonishing suggestion that as my expenses were heavy at the time and likely to increase I had better not consider it."

By the aid of the editor the hems merchant can ride the mail-order magnats out of the home community on the rail of publicity. The moral is advertise; advertise systematically and persistently, tell the public what you haye to offer, and tell it so they will understand.

Sporting Gossip.

After a record-breaking run of hot weather, which benefited only the participants to an extent not appreciated by anyone not on the ground, the seventh annual tournament of the American Bowling congress closed in St. Louis. Three cities are represented in the list of new champions. At the close of the tournament Marshall T. Levey, of Indianapolis, Ind., and R. F. Matak, of St. Paul, Minn., were tied for first place in the singles and the title of national champion with 624 pins. Levey won the individual championship in the roll-off totalling 682 in three games, while the best Matak could do was 338. E. G. Richter and E. M. Bigley, of Louisville, Ky., were the winners of the two-men event with 1,164 and the Furniture Citys of Grand Rapids, Mich., in the five-men with 2,776. Low scoring was the predominating feature of the tournament. The winning scores in all three events are the lowest ever recorded in a national tournament, with the exception of the five-men event, where lower totals brought home the money in the first tournament at Chicago in 1901 and the fourth in Cleveland in 1904.

Hackenschmidt is going to retire—into another sphere of activity. The Russian Lion has his own way of taking a rest. What that something else will be Hackenschmidt is not yet able to explain, but he indicated the general lines on which his plans will be made. "I am tired of bowing," he said. "Don't understand for a moment that I'm tired of my ot. What begins to make me weary is the incessant pressure of engagements. People see me and think what a fine life I have. But they don't know what it is to get up every morning and face a round of contracts that take me to all parts of London, with little chance for a rest or a moment's rest till I go home at night. It isn't wrestling that I'm tired of. I shall simply give up the music hall part of my life, and devote myself to a scheme that has been in process of formation for some time. I refer to a side of physical culture that has been much neglected. In fact, I may describe my scheme as the only system. And in explaining my idea to the public I think I shall be doing them better service than I would by going on with show work. I'm not going to question the merits of other systems of culture. I would merely ask at the present moment why it is that the people who make a specialty of systems do not use them personally? I have received a tempting offer from America, but I don't think I shall accept it. It would be such a long journey especially as I have plenty of work on hand. Physically I am in as fine condition as ever. The doctor says that my heart and lungs are simply splendid. Yes I feel that I'm entitled to a rest. In no way can I complain," he replied. "For the last three years I have been making something like £9,000 a year. The first two years of my five to this country were not so good, but I have been well. I've been able to command o large salary. A man who is clever at his work always can. Of course other people have made money by me. I can fill a music hall wherever I go, and I will say that the managers have been most kind to me."

Ever since Thomas Hueston defeated Jerome Keogh in the pool match in New York he has been talking of getting a match with Alfred De Oro, former pool champion of the world, and his remarks on the Cuban's capabilities in the line of pool style have been such that at last he got a rise out of De Oro. The Cuban has been practicing for the opportunity he has now been such that at last he got a rise out of De Oro. The Cuban has been practicing for the opportunity he has now been such that at last he got attention to pool for some time past, but he is confident he will be able to defeat the champion, and claims the title was taken from him by Hueston on the flimsiest excuse in existence. De Oro says he will play Hueston if the stakes should he of good size. No one was more surprised over Keogh's defeat than De Oro, for he says he has always considered the Buffalo a hard opponent, since that player gave him one of the hardest games he ever played. Hueston's victory does not change De Oro's opinion, however, and he announces he stands ready to meet Hueston for $2,000 or better a side, the game to be played in St. Louis.

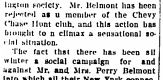
FAT AND SLIM FOLKS GET UNCLE SAM'S HELP



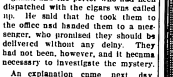
WASHINGTON.—There are too many fat people and too many thin people in the country, and the government, through the agricultural department, is conducting experiments to show them how to strike an average. C. F. Langworthy, chief of the division of nutrition investigation, is conducting investigations which include dietary studies, digestive experiments and various other things in connection with food.

"How to get this and how to get fat" are being experimented within a course of dietary studies at the University of Maine, at Orono, in that state, under the supervision of Prof. C. D. Woods, and at the University of Tennessee, at Knoxville, by Prof. E. C. White.

To fat ones the government says: "Eat little, sleep little and drink less." To thin men it says: "Drink all you can, eat all you can and sleep as much as you can."

The thin man who wants to get fat must eat and drink everything that he can stomach. He must eat plenty of potatoes, bananas and bread; most important, he must drink before and after his meals.

Above all, a thin person who wants to spread out must sleep ten or eleven hours a day. A nap after each meal is offered as an excellent inducement for fat to come and stay. On the other hand, the man who is trying to lose weight is advised that he keep moving after a meal to thwart the dread adipose.



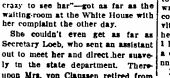
SWELL SOCIETY BARS THE PERRY BELMONTS

IT has developed that the Perry Belmonts have suffered a relapse in their attempt to "break into" Washington society. Mr. Belmont has been rejected as a member of the Chevy Chase Hunt club, and this action has brought to a climax a sensational social situation.

The fact that there has been all winter a social campaign for and against Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont into which all their New York connections—the other Belmonts, Sloanes and Astors—have been drawn, makes this social tempest of wider proportions than those which are ordinarily discovered in teapots.

What is, perhaps, the most curious part of the situation lies in the fact that Mr. Belmont is an active member of many clubs far and away more exclusive than the Chevy Chase. He is not only a member of the Knickerbocker, Manhattan, New York Yacht clubs, Metropolitan, Army and Navy, Jockey club, Turf and Field, Coaching club, and similar organizations in this country, but he is a member of the Reading room at Newport and was one of the two Americans elected to the Paris Jockey club.

The divorce records of the Belmonts is believed to have something to do with their rejection. Mr. Belmont was formerly Mrs. Henry T. Sloane. Sloane secured a divorce from her in 1895, and she was married to Belmont the day the decree was granted. Perry Belmont also has a divorce record. He married a Miss Sarah Whiting when he was a young man, and the two went to Paris on their wedding trip. Mrs. Belmont came back alone and secured a divorce. A baby was born after the divorce was granted.



WRONG MAN, BUT HE WAS PLEASED WITH THE SMOKE

AMONG the numerous employes of one of the government departments in this city are two men whose names, though they differ in the way of spelling them, are not altogether unlike in the manner of their pronunciation. Both of them have the good fortune of being close friends of a prominent druggist, and the elder of the two has frequently obtained from the medicine man a supply of medicated cigars, which he finds to be of value in giving him relief from a catarrhal affection.

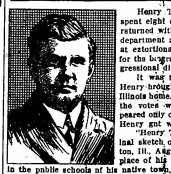
Recently he called on the druggist and requested him to have prepared for him a box of the cigars. After a few days, not having received them, he wrote a note inquiring as to the cause of the inattention and received word in reply that the medicated cigars had been sent to his office several days before.

The next thing was a call made in the drug store by the man with the catarrh, who was disposed to be indignant, and the porter who had been dispatched with the cigars was called up. He said that he took them to the office and handed them to a messenger, who promised they should be delivered without any delay. They had not been, however, and it became necessary to investigate the mystery.

An explanation came next day, when the other friend with a name sounding like that of the sick man called on the druggist and thanked him for what he thought had been a present to him. He wanted to find where he could procure another box, as he had used all of them. There was a peculiar flavor to the tobacco, he said, that he liked very much. He didn't know they were medicated cigars until the druggist told him, and the matter was set straight by the other gentleman being promptly supplied with his catarrh remedy.

NEW YORK WOMEN OUT AFTER ENVOY'S SCALP

MRS. IDA M. VON CLAUSSEN, who came all the way from Stockholm prepared to upset Uncle Sam's diplomatic corps because Minister Graves would not present her at King Oscar's court, even when Oscar, whom she had "lollied" at Wiesbaden, was "just crazy to see her"—got as far as the waiting-room at the White House with her complaint the other day.



She couldn't even get as far as Secretary Loeb, who sent an assistant out to meet her and direct her suavely to the state department. There upon Mrs. von Claussen retired from the White House, after leaving a communication requesting that the president appoint a commission to inquire into her case before she proceeds further.

"Mr. Graves stated a deliberate untruth when he said I did not offer evidence of an invitation to be presented to King Oscar and that I did not have the proper credentials," declared Mrs. Von Claussen, when shown the dispatch from Stockholm to the effect that Minister Graves had written an open letter explaining the controversy. "He knows I was invited to be presented to the king, and he says what is false when he states I had nothing to indentify me. I had a cablegram from President Sibree of one of the leading trust companies of Mrs. Von Claussen intimated strongly that perhaps Mrs. Graves was jealous of the gowns Mrs. Von Claussen wore, and that that fact might have operated to prevent her husband presenting an American visitor to the Swedish king.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

CHARGES GRAFT IN CANAL ZONE

Henry T. Rainey, Illinois congressman who spent eight days on the Isthmus of Panama and returned with a story of graft in the commissary department and tainted meat served to the men at extortionate prices, is famous in Washington for the biography he wrote of himself for the congressional directory of the Fifty-eighth congress. It was this most modest sketch that Hon. Henry brought with him to Washington from his Illinois home. "Twas this he had written the night the votes were counted. And this sketch appeared only once. It was in only one issue. Hon. Henry got sore. He rewrote it.

"Henry T. Rainey, Democrat," says the original sketch of Hon. Henry, was born at Carrollton, Ill., August 20, 1860, and has resided in the place of his birth all his life. He was educated in the public schools of his native town, at Knox academy and at Knox college, and at Amherst college, from which latter institution he was graduated with honors in 1883 with the degree of A. B."

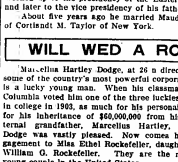
Three years later Amherst college conferred on him the degree of A. M. for post-graduate work. Studied law for two years after his graduation from Amherst college in Union College of Law, Chicago, graduating B. L. in 1885, being the valedictorian in a class of over 50."

"In the earlier part of his career as a lawyer he was master in chancery of Greene county for six years, resigning that position on account of his rapidly increasing law practice.

"He was nominated by the Democratic convention at Jacksonville August 20, 1902, the forty-second anniversary of his birth.

There is more, but what's the use? This most remarkable of all congressional biographies disappeared after one issue. Later directories give no hint of Hon. Rainey's extraordinary wise and wonderful qualifications.

MAY BE PRESIDENT OF CUBA



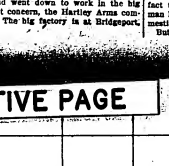
Jose Miguel Gomez, leader in the Liberal party, may be the next president of Cuba, a fact which may complicate matters for the United States. The Liberal party is made up of the masses, the negroes, the illiterates. Reports from the interior of Cuba say that as the cane harvest ends the blacks are growing restless. They are gathering rifles and machetes for the next revolution.

Jose Miguel Gomez comes from the province of Santa Spiritu, is a ranchman and the son of a ranchman. He has been in the cattle business all his life except when he has been busy carrying on revolutions against the government. He has comparatively little education, but character, ability, great force of character and qualities for leadership. He has been in three wars and wears the stars of a major general, conferred upon himself by himself in token of his supreme authority in the Liberal party and his rank as commander-in-chief in the last revolution, although he saw no fighting.

Gomez was in the United States when the revolution was being organized by other Liberal leaders after the reelection of the president, and upon his return was arrested and sent to prison as a conspirator. Secretary Taft ordered his release and since then he has been trying to reorganize his admirers with a view of securing the presidency of the republic. During the war for independence he fought under Garcia, but abandoned him twice because of dissatisfaction or jealousy and returned to his home. He was accused of temporizing with the Spanish, but the charge was never proved.

Gomez was a member of the Moderate party until he had a quarrel with President Palma about two years ago, when he went over to the Liberals, and they made him their candidate for president because he was the political boss of the state of Santa Clara.

TRAINED TO SUCCEED FATHER



Louis W. Hill, who has been elected president of the Great Northern railroad, has been vice-president of the road. He is the elder son of J. J. Hill, who has trained both his sons for railroad work. Both Louis and James are graduates of Yale, and both have gone through every department of the Great Northern road, from the construction work to the executive offices, spend in six months or a year in familiarizing themselves with each, and obtaining a practical knowledge of the methods which have been used with such enormous success by their father.

The veteran railroad chief has been appointed chairman of the board of directors, a position carrying even greater authority than that of president, without its burden of detail work.

Frank H. McGuigan has been elected first vice president. Mr. McGuigan will have direct charge of the operating department. The other officers of the board remain as at present. The company's business has doubled in the last five or six years. Louis Warren Hill possesses many of the traits of his father. He is a persistent worker, and, chiefly through his own efforts, worked up to the presidency of the Eastern Railroad company of Minnesota and later to the vice presidency of his father's road.

About five years ago he married Maude Van Cortlandt Taylor, daughter of Cortlandt M. Taylor of New York.

WILL WED A ROCKEFELLER

Marcellus Hartley Dodge, at 26 a director in some of the country's most powerful corporations, is a lucky young man. When his classmates at Columbia voted him one of the three luckiest men in college in 1903, as much for his personality as for his inheritance of $60,000,000 from his maternal grandfather, Marcellus Hartley, young Dodge was vastly pleased. Now comes the engagement to Miss Ethel Rockefeller, daughter of William G. Rockefeller. They are the richest young couple in the United States.

While at Columbia, young Dodge was elected head of the college Y. M. C. A. and president of his class. He was a member of the track team and coxswain of his class crew—quite a bit for any young man to achieve in his college course.

He decided to return the compliment that his Columbia classmates had paid him by doing something worth while. So with his aunt, Mrs. Helen Hartley Jenkins, he presented a $500,000 dormitory to Columbia on his graduation, as a memorial to his grandfather.

More luck came thick and fast even before the young man left college. His grandfather was dead and his directorate in the Equitable Life, in which he was one of the largest stockholders, was vacant. The other directors promptly put the college boy in his place.

He said goodby to his classmates and went down to work in the big Broadway offices of his grandfather's great concern, the Hartley Arms company. There he is working to this day. The big factory is at Bridgeport, Conn.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

NEW YORK.—When Thomas F. Ryan interests himself in any enterprise he is more than likely to get everything out of it that can be made to yield a profit. When he acquired the 70,000 acres in the Congo district it was generally supposed that he would be satisfied with the gold, copper and rubber in sight there. But Mr. Ryan, as a Virginian, knows the potentiality of rich soil, and as there would be many thousands of idle acres in the Congo principality which he had acquired, and as this idle land would not yield any of the three great crops from which the greater part of his profit was supposed to come, he determined to put it to practical use.

Virginia is a great peanut state. The soil conditions in Mr. Ryan's Congo domain are peculiarly well fitted for peanut culture. The best-paying grade of peanuts that come from the Virginia market are the so-called Jumbo variety, a large, delicate nut, abounding in oil and general all-around nutrition.

Mr. Ryan is going to raise Jumbo peanuts in his mid-African property. These Jumbo peanuts will bring a big price in this market and will be instrumental in breaking many a corner as now engineered by the sheikens in Mr. Ryan's own state. Men with all technical agricultural knowledge of the matter have been sent to the Congo.

Probably the most used peanut is what is called the Spanish, an offshoot of what used to be exclusively grown in Spain. This is the little round peanut so much used for salting. In Virginia a greater part of the crop grows there is called Spanish No. 1.

When the crop is short in Virginia the original Spanish is imported from Spain, but, in fact, it is grown in northern Africa. The conditions of the Virginia soil make it superior for this nut over any other section in the world except the Congo district.

The Jumbo variety brings the highest price, however, and naturally it was that variety that Mr. Ryan selected for his crop. He will later grow the Spanish peanut, which, although cheaper, has a greater sale than the Jumbo. But Mr. Ryan's advisers, knowing that the jumbo would have the greater sale if the price were lower, have advised him to try that grade first. And that is the grade that Mr. Ryan will grow in the Congo district, and from the proceeds thereof he hopes to be able to pay no inconsiderable part of the expenses of the working of his rubber plantations, gold mines and copper enterprises.

SQUAD OF SPIES TRAIL POLICE FORCE OF CITY

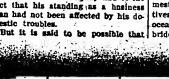
GEN. BINGHAM has completed the organization of a corps of secret police, a squad as faithful and watchful as the secret police of the czar of all the Russias. Not a move can be made by any member of the police force of Greater New York but will be reported to the commissioner.

Every member is under the eye of this secret force, and the commissioner now knows more about the inside workings of the department than he ever dreamed of before.

This is the first time in the history of American that the head of a police department has found it necessary to resort to a system of spies. The new force has been recruited from other large cities, and not one of them is known to the regular members of the New York force. Several large private detective agencies were called upon to furnish members of the force, and only the best trained plain clothes men have been accepted.

Just how long this force of secret police has been at work no one knows except the commissioner and the men themselves. The regular members of the force, captains and inspectors, know they are being watched, and they have seut men out on the trail, but they have not yet been able to trace one member of the new force.

It was declared that the recent raid upon the headquarters of the Policemen's Benevolent association, in which $82,000 in cash was uncovered, was the result of information gathered by one of the members of the new force.



ONE CHURCH IN GOTHAM THAT IS ALWAYS FILLED

IN view of the appeal of a delegation of New York clergymen to President Roosevelt to urge him to use his influence in the people of the metropolis to attend religious services it is interesting to note that there is one church in New York that is not troubled by the problem of filling its pews, perhaps for the reason that it is not together new church, based upon the doctrine of the brotherhood and independence of man, and uniting all creeds while advocating none. The "People's Church," as it is called, flourishes in the midst of the East side population, under the auspices of the People's Institute. Its meetings are held during 35 or 20 weeks of the year in the large hall of Cooper Union, and not infrequently the attendance is 2,000 or more.

In this unique church the personal views of the speaker upon controversial religious questions are never sought to be impressed, not only for the reason that the rules forbid any attempt at proselyting or any attack of creed upon creed, but because the audience enjoys the unique privilege of answering back; and the clergyman who speaks for the first time from the Cooper Union platform finds the novelty of having crude thought or inapt statements challenged, and perhaps refuted, by his hearers.

According to the statement of Prof. Charles Sprague Smith, founder and director of the institute, an occasional roll call of the audience by "isms" discloses "philosophical anarchists, socialists of every phase, single tarters and adherents of every creed under the sun as well as adherents of no creed at all."

COREY RENTS HOUSE AND WILL SOON WED ACTRESS

ROUNDING out a romance that has a side issues a shock for Pittsburg society, thrills for New York and Paris, a bearing on the destiny of the world's biggest industrial concern and general interest for men and women the globe over, William Ellis Corey soon will take to 862 Fifth avenue as his bride Miss Mabelle Gilman, the actress and singer.

Corey was recently president of the United States Steel Corporation, largely through his own ability and the influence of H. C. Frick. His retention in that position at his record salary of $100,000 a year is considered to be sufficient vindication of his usefulness to the company and of the fact that his standing as a business man has not been affected by his domestic troubles.

But it is said to be possible that even that large salary will be increased heavily and that Corey may rank in history as the most highly paid corporation officer in the world.

At any rate, the steel man's plans show he is resolved on asserting himself not only in business but in society. He has leased the Fifth avenue house from Mrs. James E. Martin, who is going abroad for a year.

The present plan is that Miss Gilman shall be married to Corey in Paris. Cable dispatches of recent days have told of extensive purchases made by her in the bazaars and jewelry stores of the French capital's most fashionable district and the domestic wires have quoted her relatives as saying they would cross the ocean to see her become Corey's bride.

DECISION AGAINST THE UNION PACIFIC

COMMERCE BODY'S OPINION IN PEAVY ELEVATOR CASE ANNOUNCED.

Allowance Is a Rebate—Declared Illegal Because in Excess of the Actual Cost of Service and Must Be Reduced.

Washington, April 19.—In what is known as the Peavy elevator case, the interstate commerce commission Thursday announced its decision against the Union Pacific Railroad company. The commission holds that the arrangement between the Union Pacific and the Peavy elevators was unlawful, as the allowance was in excess of the actual cost of the elevation of the grain, and, therefore, a rebate.

The decision was prepared by Commissioner Harlan and his opinion was concurred in by a majority of the commission. Commissioners Clements and Lane, however, filed dissenting opinions.

Summary of Opinion.

The opinion of Commissioner Harlan is summarized as follows:

"Elevation is defined as unloading grain from cars or grain-carrying vessels into a grain elevator and loading it out again after a period of not to exceed ten days. It does not include 'treatment' or grading, cleaning and clipping of grain; and retention in an elevator beyond ten days does not affect storage and is not a part of the service of elevation as that word is used in the statute.

"The law clearly recognizes elevation as a faculty which the carrier may provide, and this authorization of carrier to grant grain elevation at destination or while the traffic is in transit, subject only to the restriction imposed by the act that elevation, like any other service offered by the carrier to the shipper, must be open to all on equal and reasonable terms.

What Charge Is Rebate.

"Since a carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce is entitled to provide elevation for grain shipments, such carrier may either construct and operate the elevator itself or furnish elevation by arrangement with the owner of an elevator; and the amount of compensation paid by the carrier to the owner of an elevator rendering the service, is of no concern to shippers or other carriers, unless it operates to affect the rates charged by the carrier upon the grain traffic or by some device a portion of the allowance is returned to shippers and thus becomes a rebate.

"An allowance made to a shipper of grain who of his own elevation service under an arrangement with a carrier is a rebate and an unlawful discrimination when it involves a profit over and above the actual cost to such shipper of the service rendered. It is not a rebate when the allowance does not so exceed the actual cost.

Allowance Is Unlawful.

"The arrangement between the Union Pacific Railroad company and the Peavy elevators at Council Bluffs and Kansas City is not in itself unlawful. But the allowance of one and a quarter cents per 100 pounds paid by the railroad company to these elevators, controlled by the Peavy interests, who are large shippers of grain and own practically all of the grain going into the elevators, is in excess of the actual cost of the service, and is a rebate and therefore unlawful.

"The commission orders that the allowance by the Union Pacific Railroad company to the Peavy elevators shall be reduced and shall not exceed three-quarters of a cent per 100 pounds, such order taking effect on June 1, 1907."

LEAPS FROM WINDOW TO DEATH.

Well Known Christian Scientist Commits Suicide in Boston.

Boston, April 20.—Miss Mary E. Tomlinson of Concord, N. H., committed suicide here Friday by jumping from a window in an upper story of the Parker House. The woman died in the hotel office a few moments after her leap.

It is believed that she was demented. She came to Boston Thursday morning.

Miss Tomlinson was a sister of Irving C. Tomlinson, one of the readers of the Christian Science church of Boston and one of the defendants in the suit pending for an accounting of the property of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, and was herself prominent in the Christian Science church.

Indicted for Robbing Government.

Muskogee, I. T., April 20.—It was officially stated Friday night that Lyman R. Lane, former financial clerk for the United States Indian agent, has been indicted by the federal grand jury now in session here, charged with embezzling $7,300 of government funds which were given absolutely to his trust. Lane as financial agent handled over a million dollars.

Life Convict Is Released.

Des Moines, Ia., April 20.—Jasper Mason, serving a life sentence for murder in 1876, was released Friday by order of Gov. Cummins, under pardon granted by the legislature, and given $ conditional pardon. He has served 31 years. Mason killed one Woods in a heated argument over the Hayes-Tilden issues.

CENTENARIANS WILL WED

J. B. BUNDREN, AGED 101, IS TO MARRY WOMAN 100 YEARS OLD.

Will Travel to England to Get Bride, Whom He Courted in Their Youth.

St. Louis, April 20.—Announcement was made Friday that on August 26 next John B. Bundren, who on April 1 was 101 years old, will be united in marriage to Miss Rosa McGuire who is almost 100 years of age.

The wedding will take place on Mr. Bundren's estate near Tatesville, Tenn. He has been visiting relatives in St. Louis for several weeks and has just returned to Tennessee.

This announcement reveals a romance. Bundren and Miss McGuire were sweethearts in Tennessee in their youth. Her parents, of English descent, would not give consent for their marriage, and finally returned to England, taking their daughter along. Bundren went to California and acquired considerable wealth. He never married. From California he returned to Tennessee and bought his birthplace, near Tatesville. He decided to hold a reunion of old friends on his estate this year and sent out numerous invitations. Not long ago he received a letter from Miss McGuire, who is still unmarried. Correspondence followed and he renewed his offer of marriage and was accepted. The date for the wedding and the reunion of friends has been set for August 26, on the bride's birthday anniversary, when she will be 100 years old.

Bundren has long white hair and a flowing white beard. He does not smoke or drink. In June he will go to Preston, Lancashire, England, to escort his intended bride to his Tennessee estate for the wedding. John B. Bundren of St. Louis, a namesake, will be best man.

QUAKE DEATH LIST GROWING.

Number of Victims in Mexican Disaster Will Exceed 100.

City of Mexico, April 19.—Direct communication was established Thursday with a number of towns situated in the district most affected by the recent earthquake. From these recent telegrams it is now certain that the death list will exceed 100. There are a number of small towns yet to be heard from, but up to date the average number of fatalities at these places has ranged from nine to 12 and the number of injured from 20 to 40.

One peculiar phenomenon which has been just made known is that after the first shock the air was filled for many miles with a thick, sickening, sulphurous odor. This caused great distress in the survivors. There are many speculations as to the cause of the peculiar freak of nature and some consider it as a proof that the earthquake had its origin in some subterranean explosion. For this reason considerable anxiety will be felt until news is received from the mountains surrounding the active volcanoes of Colima and Jurrelis.

Even the water in the streams was made undrinkable.

MRS. M'LEAN IS REELECTED.

Again Made Head of Daughters of American Revolution.

Washington, April 19.—While the vote of the continental congress for national officers of the Daughters of the American Revolution will probably not be announced until Friday, it is freely admitted by both factions that Mrs. David McLean has been reelected as president general of the society. Mrs. McLean's supporters claim that the entire administration ticket will be elected by an overwhelming majority. The vote received by Mrs. Elizabeth Eleanor Howard, of Alexandria, Va., who was nominated by the "insurgent" faction, her friends declare, will make her the logical candidate to succeed Mrs. McLean at the next session of the congress.

DECORATION FOR CARNEGIE.

France Gives Him the Cross of Legion of Honor.

New York, April 18.—The first convention of the National Arbitration and Peace congress came to an end Wednesday night, after a three days' session, with two large meetings, one at the Hotel Astor and the other at the Waldorf-Astoria. The event of greatest interest was the decoration of Andrew Carnegie with the cross of the Legion of Honor by the French government, represented by Baron D'Estournelles De Constant, in appreciation of his work for peace and his gift of the palace at The Hague.

Money for Starving Roumanians.

New York, April 20.—The Roumanian relief committee of this city Friday cabled $12,500 to the committee at Jassy, Roumania, which has charge of the distribution of relief in the sufferers from the recent riots in that country. Chief Rabbi Niemirower reported to the committee that 50,000 Jews in Roumania are destitute and will die of starvation unless help comes quickly from America.

Well-Known Newspaper Man Dead.

Philadelphia, April 18.—John P. Dunning, well known in newspaper circles throughout the country, died Wednesday in a hospital here of tumor of the brain. He was 44 years of age.

VOLCANO IN CHILI DOES VAST DAMAGE

PUYEHUE BELCHES HOT ASHES AND INHABITANTS ARE PANIC-STRICKEN.

Repeated Earthquake Shocks Accompany the Eruptions—Seismic Disturbances in Philippines and South Carolina.

Lima, April 20.—The volcano Puyehue in the province of Valdivia, Chili, is yet in active eruption, and new centers have opened. The loosen in the neighboring country are enormous, and the inhabitants are panic-stricken.

Showers of hot ashes are falling and there are continued earthquake shocks, accompanied by subterranean explosions.

Absolute darkness would prevail but for the light from several fires over an extent of six miles.

A great number of cattle have been killed near Lake Rupo. Several brooks which furnished drinking water for the people have dried up.

Quake Shake Island of Luzon.

Manila, P. I., April 20.—Earthquake shocks were felt here and elsewhere for three hours early Friday morning. Three of the shocks were severe, but the majority were very light. Reports received here from the southern part of the island of Luzon announce that severe earthquakes were felt at Nueva Caceres, Camarines province, and at Tayabas, 62 miles southeast of Manila. Buildings were destroyed in both places, but no loss of life has been reported. Communication with the two cities mentioned is affected.

A trembler was experienced at Manila with intermittent shocks for three hours Friday morning. Three of the shocks were severe, but the majority of the others were scarcely perceptible.

Tremor at Charleston, S. C.

Charleston, S. C., April 20.—A slight earthquake shock was felt in Charleston and Summerville at 3:25 o'clock Friday morning. In the latter place it was said that dishes rattled and ornaments were knocked from the mantels. In Charleston only a very few people knew of the shock until after breakfast. From various points in the city people reported having been awakened by a rumbling followed by three slight wave movements. It lasted about eight seconds and was apparently from southeast to northwest.

Shocks Recorded in London.

London, April 20.—John Milne, the seismologist, says that his instruments recorded a big earthquake at 9:10 Wednesday night. It reached its maximum intensity at 10:05 and lasted a long time afterward. He tentatively estimates that it was 5,400 miles distant, probably in Mexico or the northern part of South America.

Prof. Ernst of the Lachine, Austria, observatory telegraphs that a great earthquake began at 10:15 mid-European time. The center of the disturbance was apparently 6,250 miles away.

Strange Storm on Atlantic.

New York, April 20.—From mid night until five o'clock Wednesday morning the steamer La Provence, which arrived in port Friday night, passed through a storm which, the officers of the ship say, has rarely been exceeded in violence on the Atlantic.

The barometer fell rapidly, the air was so full of electricity that the compass was useless, and then huge seas began to break over the decks, though an rain fell. Capt. Alix thinks the strange storm was the result of the same forces which caused the earthquake shocks in Mexico.

Embezzler Sentenced.

Peoria, Ill., April 18.—Harvey B. Hutchinson, former money order clerk at the Peoria post office, indicted for embezzlement of $10,000, was sentenced by Judge Otis Humphrey, in the federal court, to two years' imprisonment at Leavenworth, Kan.

GIMBEL ATTEMPTS SUICIDE

PHILADELPHIA MERCHANT IS FOUND WOUNDED IN HOTEL.

Had Been Arrested in New York for Improper Conduct and Trying to Bribe Police.

New York, April 20.—Benedict Gimbel, the wealthy Philadelphia merchant who was arrested in this city Thursday on the double charge of exerting improper influence over Ivor Clark, a 16-year-old boy, and attempted bribery of the county detective who made the arrest, lies in St. Mary's hospital, Hoboken, N. J., unconscious from wounds believed by the police to have been self inflicted. It is thought that his injuries will not prove fatal.

Bleeding from gashes on his throat and severed arteries in both wrists, Gimbel was found at seven o'clock Friday night in a room which he had engaged the night before at the Palace hotel in Hoboken. He was unconscious from loss of blood when he was removed to the hospital, where an examination of his effects made certain his identity.

Late Thursday night Gimbel was released from the Tombs under $6,000 bonds. Where he then went was not known to his friends. He was generally supposed to have been at an uptown hotel, though it was reported that he had returned to his home in Philadelphia.

It now appears that immediately following his release Gimbel crossed on a ferry to Hoboken and went to the Palace hotel, registering there as Wilson Hedge, of Trenton, N. J. He was assigned to a room on the second floor and a half hour later ordered luncheon, which was served in his room. Among the dishes was a glass water pitcher. This was found broken and it is supposed Gimbel's injuries were inflicted by the pieces.

Gimbel was to have been given a hearing in court here Saturday. His attorney, Daniel O'Reilly, had stated that Gimbel's defense will be that blackmail was attempted.

SHORTAGE IN THE U. OF W.T

Rumor of $400,000 Discrepancy in the University's Accounts.

Madison, Wis., April 19.—A startling report that a discrepancy of $400,000 exists in the accounts of the University of Wisconsin was circulated at the capitol Thursday.

Several members of the university regents put a New York expert to work on the books. Recently the expert made a report to the regents. President Van Hise said Thursday that there was absolutely no suspicion of any misappropriation of funds, but admitted that there has been failure properly to charge up certain investments to their proper accounts. When the report was circulated at the capital President Van Hise immediately came to the state house in person. He explained as best he could the details of the alleged $400,000 discrepancy.

The matter probably will be investigated by the legislature. The university affairs were investigated by a special legislative committee last year, but this alleged discrepancy escaped the notice of the legislative body.

Suicide in Kansas City Hotel.

Kansas City, Mo., April 19.—S. P. Horwitz, of Cincinnati, aged 38 years, committed suicide in the Rapper hotel in this city Thursday night by drinking carbolic acid. He left a note explaining that Walter Jacobs, of this city, be notified of his death. Jacobs said that Horwitz had a family in Cincinnati, and that his father-in-law, Mannie Bauer, is a prominent iron merchant there.

Ethel Rockefeller Married.

New York, April 19.—Miss Ethel Geraldine Rockefeller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Rockefeller, and Marcellus Hartley Dodge were united in marriage Thursday afternoon at the home of the bride's parents on Fifth avenue. The ceremony which was a quiet one was performed by Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., rector of St. Thomas Episcopal church.

EDDY DEFENDANTS ANSWER CHARGES

DENY ALL ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINTS IN SUITS FOR ACCOUNTING OF PROPERTY.

Assert Leader of Christian Science Faith Is Perfectly Able to Manage Own Affairs and That She Is Not Ruled by Anyone.

Concord, N. H., April 18.—A general denial of all the allegations of the complaints in the suits for an accounting of the property of Mrs. Harry Glover Baker filed March 1 was the legal answer made Wednesday by the defendants named in the original petition.

The specifications in the original bill are that Mrs. Eddy is and for a long time has been incompetent to do business or to understand transactions conducted in her name; that the defendants whose answer was filed Wednesday with other leaders of the Christian Science church who were named in the original bill, have possessed themselves of the person and property of Mrs. Eddy and have carried on her business that on account of Mrs. Eddy's infirmity these persons are bound to give account of all transactions undertaken in her name and that the defendants have wrongfully converted property to their own use.

Plot is Hinted At.

To these representations the defendants filed specific and detailed denials, declaring also that they have no knowledge of many of the allegations of the complainants and demanding that the complainants furnish proof thereof. They also declare that they have reason to believe that the bill of complaint was not brought by the plaintiffs in good faith, but that "the so-called 'next friends' have been induced to loan their names at the instigation and at the expense of certain evil-minded persons who are furnishing money for the prosecution of the bill of complaint for their own evil purposes and to advance their own selfish interests."

Besides the Boston defendants, Calvin A. Frye, Irving C. Tomlinson, Hermann S. Hering and Lewis S. Strang, of Concord, the New Hampshire residents among the defendants named in the original bill in equity on behalf of Mrs. Eddy, filed their answer in the superior court for Merrimac county.

Mrs. Eddy Absolute Ruler.

Mr. Frye says he has been in the employ of Mrs. Eddy for about 25 years, for a considerable part of the time as private secretary. During all that time, her house at Concord and all other houses in which she has resided, together with all persons employed or connected therewith, have always been under the absolute control and direction of Mrs. Eddy. Mrs. Eddy determines for herself whom she will see, and the length of time that will be given for that purpose, according to Mr. Frye's answer, and the defendant denies that he, personally or in conjunction with Strang or others of the defendants refused to allow any person or persons to see Mrs. Eddy, or that he has prescribed or limited the time to be given to persons desiring to confer with her except in accordance with the rules prescribed by Mrs. Mary B. Eddy, for the conduct of her household and business.

The defendant denies also that Mrs. Eddy is and has been for many years not legally responsible for acts done by her, and unfit to manage and control her business and property, but on the contrary, he avers that she always has directed and managed her business affairs fully.

The answer of Strang is practically the same as that of Frye, while the answers of Tomlinson and Hering vary in so far as their relations with Mrs. Eddy differ from those of Frye and Strang.

FIRE WIPES OUT ILOILO.

Philippine City Burns and 20,000 Persons Are Homeless.

Manila, P. I., April 20.—The town of Iloilo, island of Panay, was totally destroyed by fire Friday morning, with the result that 20,000 persons are homeless. As this dispatch was filed the conflagration was still raging and owing to the heavy wind blowing it was beyond control.

The civil and military authorities were doing everything possible to check the flames and assist the sufferers. No estimate has yet been made of the amount of damage done and no details of the fire are obtainable, owing to communication with Iloilo being seriously affected.

Iloilo is the capital of the island of Panay, located on the east coast. The port, which is the second in importance in the Philippines, next to Manila, is the center of the sugar trade.

Eastern Church Calls Dr. Wight.

Middleton, N. Y., April 19.—The Westminster Presbyterian church Thursday night unanimously extended a call to its pastorate to Rev. E. V. D. Wight, president of Hastings college, Hastings, Neb. It is expected Dr. Wight will accept the call.

Roosevelt Gunning for Harriman.

Washington, April 18.—It is said that President Roosevelt will make personal investigation of E. H. Harriman's record in pooling railway properties. The result will determine the question of prosecution.

The Evolution of Household Remedies.

The modern patent medicine business is the evolutionary outgrowth of the old-time household remedies.

In the early history of this country, EVERY FAMILY HAD ITS HOME-MADE MEDICINES. Herb teas, bitters, laxatives and tonics, were to be found in almost every house, compounded by the housewife, sometimes assisted by the apothecary or the family doctor. Such remedies as picra, which was aloes and quassia, dissolved in apple brandy. Sometimes a hop tonic, made of whiskey, hops and bitter barks. A score or more of popular, home-made remedies were thus compounded, the formulae for which were passed along from house to house, sometimes written, sometimes verbally communicated.

The patent medicine business is a natural outgrowth from this wholesome, old-time custom. In the beginning, some enterprising doctor, impressed with the usefulness of one of these home-made remedies, would take it up, improve it in many ways, manufacture it on a large scale, advertise it mainly through almanacs for the home; and thus it would become used over a large area. LATTERLY THE HOUSEHOLD REMEDY BUSINESS TOOK A MORE EXACT AND SCIENTIFIC FORM.

Peruna was originally one of these old-time remedies. It was used by the Mennonites, of Pennsylvania, before it was offered to the public for sale. Dr. Hartman, THE ORIGINAL COMPOUNDER OF PERUNA, is of Mennonite origin. First, he prescribed it for his neighbors and his patients. The sale of it increased, and at last he established a manufactory and furnished it to the general drug trade.

Peruna is useful in a great many climatic ailments, such as coughs, colds, sore throat, bronchitis, and catarrhal diseases generally. THOUSANDS OF FAMILIES HAVE LEARNED THE USE OF PERUNA as a household remedy in the treatment of these ailments. They have learned to trust and believe in Dr. Hartman's judgment, and to rely on his remedy, Peruna.

AGE TOLD BY THE PULSE.

From Birth to Death the Beats Have a Steady Decrease.

How old are you? Ask your pulse. The human pulse has a wide range, even in perfectly healthy persons. The female pulse always beats faster than the male, and from birth to death the pulse beats steadily decrease. It has been said by great authorities that the age and sex of a person could be ascertained by the rate of the pulse alone. Babies at birth have a pulse beat of 150 times a minute, and in case of a girl and in the case of boys. At the age of four or five the pulse beats will have fallen respectively to 110 and 105. Maidens' and youths' pulses average 95 and 90. Mature men and women average 80 and 75. Elderly men and women have an average of 60 and 50. An old woman's pulse rarely, if ever, sinks below 50, but under such a pulse heat below 50 is quite common. There are, however, great variations consistent with health. Napoleon's pulse is said to have beaten only 44 times a minute.

Great Stunt by Geronimo.

An Apache Indian chief when in his prime, ran 40 miles on foot, rode 500 miles on ons stretch, as fast as the horse could gallop, and on the completely wore out the column which finally captured him that three sets of officers' horses were needed in the chase, and not more than one-third of the troopers who started were in the finish, says a writer in Outing.

Wrinkled and crafty and cruel is his swarthy face to-day, but the fire of his inherent energy has died and he is no more than a relic of the Geronimo of whom Gen. Miles said after their first meeting:

"He rode into our camp and dismounted, a prisoner. He was one of the brightest, most resolute, determined men I ever met, with the sharpest, clearest dark eye. Every movement showed power and energy."

Out of His Line.

A man living in the country far from physicians was taken very ill one denly ill. His family, in great alarm, not knowing what to do, sent for a neighbor who had a reputation for doctoring cows.

"Can't you give father something to help him?" asked one of the sons.

"Wa-al, I don't know nothin' about doctorin' people."

"But I want more than we do, for you can doctor cows. Now what do you give them when they are sick?"

"Wa-al," I allers give Epsom salts. You might try it on him."

"How much shall we give him?" inquired the son.

"Wa-al, I give cows just a pound. Your father is a quarter as big as a cow—give him a quarter of a pound."

Attempted Train Wrecking.

Owotonna.—Because he was angry at a Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad section foreman, Albert Yase, a resident of this city, took revenge by placing a railroad tie across the main tracks a short distance north of this city. The early morning northbound passenger, a through train from Chicago and heavily loaded, struck the tie, but was not derailed. The pilot of the engine struck the timber and tore a large hole in it, after which it was ejected in such a manner that, instead of lying across the tracks, it passed under the engine, and then, bumping from side to side, the timber was carried for several hundred feet.

The striking of the tie was reported to the section foreman and from him to headquarters. Two detectives were detailed on the case and arrested Yase. He at first denied the act, but when taken before Judge Johnson in the municipal court he pleaded guilty to the charge and was held to the June term of the district court.

To Make Turpentine.

Hastings.—A. L. Hoffman and a number of associated business men will go into the manufacture of turpentine from pine stumps in the near future. Mr. Hoffman has visited Hinkley and has investigated the industry from every phase and he and his associates are satisfied that there will be a good thing not only for themselves but in addition prove of immense advantage to the country in that it will permit the farmers not only to clear their land without expense, but to get good pay for the clearing. It is the intention of the gentlemen to install the central cymery in Hinkley and to put in groups of cutters wherever they can secure for a sufficient number of stumps. It is expected that the enterprise will ultimately represent an investment of $100,000.

Dog Balks Pursuers.

Duluth.—After knocking out one of its pursuers with a blow on the solar plexus, a young doe which made its appearance in the western part of West Duluth, made its escape to the woods unharmed.

The appearance of the animal caused much excitement, and a crowd of men and boys started in pursuit. Near the Kingsley church the animal became entangled in a wire fence. Lee McNulty who was one of the foremost of the pursuers put out his hand to grasp the animal when it butted him in the solar plexus, knocking him temporarily. His effort to put McNulty out enabled the deer to free itself from the meshes of the wire, and it soon out-footed its pursuers.

Many Were Hurt.

St. Paul.—The accident report of the labor commissioner for March shows the number of fatalities to be the heaviest in six months, the number being 102, while the nearest approach to this record was 101 in October, 1906.

While the March list of accidents is a long one, most of the injuries sustained were of a minor character, only two fatal injuries being reported. The rest were small cuts, burns, bruises, and so on, and as usual the large percentage of accidents occurred in the railroad shops.

Woman Found Dead.

St. Paul.—Lying head first in a bog, a woman identified as Mrs. O'Donnell was found by one of the employes of the trunk factory, Kentucky and Fenton streets, on the West Side.

Mrs. O'Donnell had been living in a small shanty in the rear of the trunk factory and it is supposed that while trying to turning home late at night she stumbled and fell into the bog hole, many of which are to be found on the West side. Her head and shoulders had been covered and she died from suffocation.

Will Inspect Cadets.

Minneapolis.—Annual inspection of the university cadets by a regular army officer will occur this year at the university on Friday, May 10. Capt. Sheldon, of the Eleventh United States infantry, now detailed to general staff duty, will conduct the inspection, which will last all day. On the next day the cadets will tender a complimentary review to President Northrop.

Something broke and slipped the rollers and Mr. Ellis crawled under the house to investigate and fix the roller, when the house slipped from the roller and fell to the ground, crushing Ellis between the heavy beam partly protected him from a fatal accident.

Minneapolis.—The forestry commission has purchased nine pounds of white pine seed and two pounds of pitch pine seed which will be planted in the state park at the Pillsbury reservoir. The seed cost $11 and will yield 200,000 trees, about eighty years being required to bring the trees to marketable growth, which is a diameter of from twelve to fifteen inches breast high.

Aldes.—An unknown man was run over and probably fatally injured by a Milwaukee freight train here. The man, who was about forty-five years old, had been about the village for several days. Both legs were cut off below the knees and all that the trigger got in his coat pocket. The shot tore the back off the shoe and the entire heel.

St. Peter.—While in session in this city the board of directors of Gustavus Adolphus college for the twelfth time elected Dr. J. P. Uhler as vice president of the institution. Dr. Uhler is completing his twenty-fifth year as a member of the faculty.

Shooting Scrape.

Hibbing.—A shooting affair which narrowly missed being a murder took place here when Joe Conkovitch, 24 years old, is alleged to have fired a shot which wounded a man whose name could not be learned, and who is now in the hospital seriously wounded.

The shooting is said to have been the result of an altercation which took place between Conkovitch and the stranger, in which the former got the worst of it and took refuge in flight. He secured a revolver, and returning is alleged to have fired point blank at the stranger. The bullet struck him in the forehead, but instead of piercing the skull, glanced off after making a serious wound.

Conkovitch is under arrest. He denies the shooting.

Gets $18,000 for Arm.

St. Paul.—A verdict of $18,000, the largest ever awarded in Minnesota, it is said, for the loss of an arm, was given by a district court jury in George F. Sillie in his suit against the Northern Pacific railway and Walter Henricks. He sued for $25,000.

Sillie, a brakeman employed by the Northern Pacific, was on a freight train last September that "broke in two" at Detroit, Minn. He went between the separated cars to adjust the air brake apparatus. He had signaled Engineer Henricks not to move the main part of the train until the adjustment had been made. But the engineer backed up too quickly and Sillies' right arm was so severely crushed that it had to be amputated.

Earth Swallows Team.

Winona—Clark G. Corey, who lives in Wiscoy Valley, a dozen miles from this city, lost a valuable team of work horses in a peculiar manner this week, the earth literally opening up and swallowing them. Mr. Corey's hired man was at work in the field with a three-horse team, when suddenly the animals broke through into a hidden sink hole, dropping into a deep cavity. The top horn was pulled out alive, but the other two were dead before they could be rescued. In the early days when the land was first being broken sink holes were found frequently, but now it is very seldom that one is discovered, especially in an old field such as this was.

Found Dead.

Rochester.—The infant child of Mrs. Elizabeth Campbell was found dead in its bed. The child had not been ill, and apparently had been in the best of health. It had been put to bed in the afternoon for its regular nap. Later, when a caller arrived and inquired for the child, the mother went to the bedroom and to her horror found that her baby was dead. The coroner was notified and Dr. F. E. Mosse made a careful examination, but could find no cause for the sudden demise, but it is thought it was due to a hemorrhage.

NEWS NOTES.

Mankato—Stray dogs drove a valuable flock of sheep into the Sauer river on George Hutsleit's farm, and most of them were drowned.

Mankato.—Mankato barbers met and agreed to raise the price of shaves from 10 to 15 cents on May 1. It was decided to leave the price of instruction alone for the present. The barbers of the shops get used to the higher price of shaves.

Stillwater.—At a meeting of the council of this village it was decided to award a franchise to C. W. Foster of Crookston for a local telephone system. He has made a deposit as an evidence of good faith. He purposes to have the system in working order by August 1.

Minneapolis—Enrollment at the university has passed the coveted 4,000 mark for the first time in the history of the institution. Registrar Pierce announced that the enrollment at present is 4,016. The number a few more may be added when complete returns from some of the departments are secured.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, April 17—Gov. John A. Johnson had his salary raised by the senate today from $5,000 a year to $7,000. The senate did the kindly deed by making the house bill provide for this increase. The measure is now up to his excellency for signature. It does not sign it it will become a law any how in three days. The bill secured 47 affirmative votes, and but 2 against it, Senators Anderson and Wright. Senator Wright warned the senate that this was a great session for making salary increases, and that to pass this bill was simply making campaign matter for the democrats two years from now but his fellow members couldn't hear him. Senator Clague offered amendments to the bill to raise the salaries of the state auditor, treasurer and secretary of state to $4,200, but these the senate overwhelmed on objection by Senator J. F. Calhoun of Minneapolis.

This was the event of the day in the senate. In the house it was the killing of the state fair bill. The bill needed the assurance of certified checks of indebtedness to the amount of $250,000 for new fair buildings, the certificates to be eventually paid off through profits of the fair. The bill was introduced some time ago by Messrs. of Stayton, following the defeat of the $1,000,000 exposition bill. The Morso bill secured but 38 affirmative votes, and 68 against it. The state fair management will now not get a cent outside of whatever sum may be allotted to it by the appropriations committees in the general omnibus bill. Such an allowance will simply be for the protection of what will permit of no new buildings or enlargements. The house took a recess before voting on the bill to hear an explanation of the needs of the fair grounds from R. W. Randall, fair secretary. His appeal for aid, however, fell on deaf ears.

Of the important bills passed today include S. F. 316, Durment, to prohibit discrimination and rebating by life insurance companies; the bill gives Rockne, to compel railroads to file plats of all new lines with the railroad commission; S. F. 844, McGowen, to the bill in the house, this clause was cut out before the house passed the measure. Senator Sullivan charged trickery in getting the resolution, on the ground that there was an agreement in the senate the bill should not be again enamended. Senator Wright withdrew the amendment but afterwards made a hot rebuttal to Sullivan's charge. Later if a charge of trickery were directed against him he wished to hurl it back squarely at the senator from Washington county.

The house in taking up the special order of the day today, took the proposed amount of money it carries from $1,000,000 to $700,000. Of the $700,000, $250,000 is to be used a new engineering college building, and the remainder for extension of the university's service. The bill was passed by the senate with the full $1,000,000 appropriation. The house cut out the dental school proposition entirely and a proposed new dental building.

The house in passing the bill creating the capitol grounds commission to have charge of extension of the capitol grounds did so by a vote of 62 for, and 40 against in the measure. The bill cuts out the original big appropriation desired by the people of St. Paul, and leaves only a commission without money. "This is the lemon we are handed in place of the original magnificent scheme proposed," said Attorney Ambrose Tighe of St. Paul put it with much disgust.

Of bills finally passed today by the house, included, S. F. 222, Alderman, establishing state fish hatchery at Waterville, Le Sueur county; S. F. 315, Durment, prohibiting rebating and discriminations by life insurance companies; S. F. 271, Gunn, authorizing the state railroad commission to order safety appliances on roads where they deem them necessary.

In the senate, bills passed included; H. F. 459, Robinson, prohibiting child labor under 16 years of age; H. F. 312, Tighe, prohibiting legislative bribery and fixing severe penalties.

Petrified in Grave.

St. Cloud.—The body of Mrs. J. J. Salfinger, buried in the Melrose cemetery in 1900, was exhumed and buried in another lot. The men making the disinterment, handling the box and examining, expected to find nothing but the skeleton to remove, when, to their surprise, they found the body preserved body. Upon touching it they discovered it had turned to stone. The face was of an ashy gray color, as rigid as rock and nearly as heavy.

Red Wing—According to a census just taken in connection with the new city directory, Red Wing has a population of 9,610. This is actual count, and the figures are not based on the number of names in the directory. The census shows that the city increased 1,465 in about twenty months, or since the state census was taken in June, 1905.

Discovery Endangered World.

In the time of Louis XV. of France, a chemist named Lavoisier made an exhibit on a canal at Versailles of a kind of fire so rapid and devouring that it would not be quenched, water only giving it fresh activity. Louis forbade that the invention should be made public and the inventor died soon after, carrying the secret with him to the grave.

AR'TEMUS WARD AND THE RAILWAY BORE.

Mark Twain tells a capital story of Artemus Ward's encounter with a "railway bore"—a species that he particularly detested—who took the seat beside him in a carriage on a journey to Washington. Artemus was engaged in reading and in no mood for conversation. But the bore was not to be balked.

"Say," he remarked to his victim, "do you think Grant'll get the nomination for president?"

Artemus looked up from his book, gazed curiously at the stranger, and said:

"Grant—Grant—who is Groot?"

Perplexed for a moment, the inquisitor exclaimed:

"You don't mean to say ye never heard of Gen. U. S. Grant?"

"Never heard of him," answered Artemus, solemnly.

This confession dazed the bore for a few minutes, but he returned to the charge. "They say old Greeley is agin' him."

Once more the serious eyes were directed at the bore. "Greeley?" Ward asked. "Old Greeley? I have never heard of him, either. It appears to me, sir, you know more strangers than any human bein' I ever met."

It took the interlocutor fully ten minutes to recover his surprise. Meanwhile Artemus was reading his book. Finally the talkative one could endure it no longer. "Say, you fool, did you ever hear of Adam?" he exclaimed.

"Adam? Adam?" replied Artemus, meditatively. "Wh-what was his other name?"

This closed the conversation.

A STIRRING STORY.

"What is true?" queried the party at the other end of the conversation.

"That a woman never uses her husband's meerschaum pipe for a hammer more then once," explained the t. t.—Chicago Daily News.

Remarkable Self-Control.

"There's one thing I will say," remarked Mr. Millions, "and that is that my daughter Arabella, has a fine disposition."

"Indeed!"

"Yes, sir. The way she can listen for hours to her own playing on the violin shows remarkable self-control."

A "Ringers' Jug."

A beer jug in a belfry is happily somewhat of a rarity in these days At the beginning of the last century however, people were not so particular The ringers' jug at Beccles, in Suffolk holds six gallons, a sufficiency to sustain the ten weary ringers, though the weight of the bells did exceed six tons. The vessel is made of red earthenware and has three handles, one of which is concealed by the neck. It bears the following inscription in quaint spelling:

"When I am fill'd with liquor strong,
Each Man drink once and then ding dong.
Drink not too much to Cloud your Knobs
Least you forget to make the Bobbs.

A gift of John Pattman Beccles." On the reverse side is the maker's name, "Samuel Stringfellow, Potter."—London Strand.

The Scallop.

The scallop can anchor itself as well as any ship. It never fails to drop its anchor on the approach of rough weather. The scallop, lying in its bed of shoal water, foresees a storm in true sailor fashion and at once puts out a tough and elastic little cable from a point near its hinge. This cable it fastens firmly to the nearest rock. It is then secure in the vilest weather. He who wades through scallop haunted shoals as a storm approaches may see the tiny shellfish mooring themselves on all sides with silent bustle.

Men-of-war on Paper.

Each man-of-war is built upon paper before a single plate of steel is forged. Not only are the length and breadth of a ship decided upon, but the naval constructor can tell to an ounce how much water she will displace when her armor and guns are mounted upon her, how many times her propellers will revolve in a minute with a given pressure of steam and how many tons of coal an hour must be consumed to attain a certain rate of speed.—London Graphic.

His Gloomy Life.

"What," asked the sweet girl, "was the happiest moment of your life?"

"The happiest moment of my life," answered the old bachelor, "was when the jeweler took back an engagement ring and gave me sleeve links in exchange."

Ideas From Nature.

Walking on the outskirts of Bolton one autumn evening, a clever young man became interested in watching the seeds falling from a sycamore tree. He observed that they acquired a rotary motion before reaching the ground, and, inquiring into the cause, he found that the two wings were slightly turned in opposite directions, which caused them to revolve in falling. The idea of making a screw propeller on this principle at once occurred to him.

Galvani, a natural philosopher of Italy, was dissecting a dead frog one day while a pupil was making experiments in electricity by his side. He observed that the muscles of the frog, being exposed, gave signs of motion whenever the nerves came in contact with the scope. Galvani discovered the existence of a new principle in this phenomenon, [illegible] fertile branch of [illegible] the name of galvanism.

Great Writers Not Correct Writers.

There is not a single great author in our literature in whose works numerous errors have not been pointed out or thought to be pointed out. They are charged with violating rules involving the purity if not the permanence of the language. A somewhat depressing inference follows from the situation thus revealed. The ability to write English correctly does not belong to the great masters of our speech. It is limited to the obscure men who have devoted themselves to the task of showing how far these vaunted writers have fallen short of the ideas of linguistic propriety entertained by their [illegible] betters. As a result of these critical crusades there is no escape from the dismal conclusion that the correct use of the language is not to be found in the authors whom every one reads with pleasure, but is an accomplishment reserved [illegible] for those whom nobody can [illegible]

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

After next Wednesday we can take a ride on the cars for two cents a mile, and not run any more risk of getting our neck broken than we have before that time.

By the time Harry K. Thaw gets through with his next triel and gets a settlement in full with all of his attorneys, he will not have to go to Europe to buy a certain brand of cigerets in order to dispose of his surplus cash.

An exchange says: "We always wondered where all the Johnsons came from until a visit to the beautiful city of St. Peter, when, all become clear. On the corner of Broadway and Wabash streets stands a red brick building with white letters on a black background: "Johnson Manufacturing Company."

We understand that some of our resolution signers are mak[illegible] dire threats of what they would do if the SUNBEAM should [illegible] their reputation. Now the [illegible] to fix that would be to [illegible] have "Resolution [illegible] resolutions to the [illegible] anything published [illegible] his paper in the past. Make the company a present of one half of it and take stock for the other half, and we will not attempt to railroad resolutions through the company that you are robbing them.

The members of the Minnesota house must be rather a cheap lot, to say the least. In passing the antipass bill to take effect December 31, 1908, so that they could enjoy their passes from the railroads for nearly two years, is about the worst that any legislature has done for a long time. Their constituents should see that every one who voted for the bill should get a free pass to stay at home for all time.—St. Hilaire Spectator

The Plummer war goes merrily on with the Pioneer still on the gain among sensible people for standing by his principals. Of course the Thief River Falls News can be depended on to throw a little mud to help out a dirty deal, at any time, at so much per throw, and we expect they will give the "alt" a job as soon as he gets hatched out and becomes a dignified louse, as the editors of that city have made themselves famous as men to stir up ill feeling against that place, among the people tributary to it, and we are firmly of the opinion, that they would be better qualified for a position behind the four tined dung fork, of some farmer, than to be the representatives of the newspaper interests of a live, business city like Thief River Falls.

The Eye of the Needle.

When Christ says in his sermon "that it is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than it is for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven" he does not mean a sewing needle, but a hole through which a camel had to pass through in getting into a fortress. It was the custom in old times, and in parts of Arabia still, for the people of a village to build a fortress against the robbers of the desert, into which they carried an underground passage in a zigzag form barely large enough for a camel lying down on its side to work itself through into the courtyard of the fort, and the Saviour beautifully compares the struggles of the animal to what the rich man must suffer in order to gain paradise. The hole was called "the eye of the needle."

In the old stone cabins, or walled cities, in Ireland specimens of these eyeholes may be seen. Most of them have been partially destroyed, but there is one almost perfect at Grianan Elleach, in Donegal and so like the eastern eyeholes that one would think they were made by the same workmen. The Irish annals relate that Elleach was erected by a Tuath de Danaan chief 1,300 years before Christ.—Exchange.

The Magic Flat.

"This is our library," said the New York woman, leading her visitor into the front room. "And that cozy little room back of it is the music room. The 'den' is the big bright room on your left. Come over and see it. Yes, we have just five rooms in all. The small back ballroom we use as a packing and storage closet. Isn't it cozy?"

"Y-e-s," agreed her visitor doubtfully, "but where do you sleep and eat, and all that?"

"Oh," said the New Yorker indifferently, "my husband and I sleep in the 'den' on the oriental couch, and mother sleeps in the music room on another couch that pulls out at night. We eat on that funny little table in the library. You've no idea how big it can be made when the leaves are in. And we dress in the bathroom and keep our clothes in the packing room. So, you see, it's all very convenient."

"What do you do in the kitchen?" inquired the other laconically.

"Oh, we keep the doors in there at night, and in the daytime we sometimes use it—to cook in."—New York Press.

An Impressario's Advice.

Some years ago after the regular Italian opera season had ended at the Academy of Music, New York, that building became a sort of trying on arena for would be prima donnas and tenors. One day during the open and shut interim between the seasons Max Maretzek met the tenor Adams and Mme. Pappenheim.

When the tenor said, "Congratulate us, Max; we have just leased the academy for classic operas—no candy rot for us," the impresario replied:

"I wish you great success. But tell me your proposed repertory."

To this Adams responded, "'Antigone,' 'Orfeo,' 'Iphigenia,' 'Sapho,' 'Alceste,' etc."

Maretzek suavely said: "That is magnificent. But do me a favor as an old and experienced friend. Give the 'Trovatore' once each week in order to pay salaries."

This advice was not followed, and very soon the academy was again for rent.—New York Tribune

The First Man Dressmaker.

As far back as 1730 there was in Paris a man dressmaker, probably the first of his kind. His name was Rhomberg, and he was the son of a Bavarian peasant from the neighborhood of Munich. He owed his success to his genius for concealing and remedying defects of figure. He drove a beautiful carriage on the boulevard and had an escutcheon in the shape of a pair of corsets and an open pair of scissors painted on the panel of each door. He left a large fortune to his heirs.

Doctors and Solemnity.

The days are past when every self respecting doctor was expected to dress in a style tastefully blending the divine with the undertaker. But a "sustained and impenetrable solemnity" is still a priceless possession for those who would achieve success in medicine. If this is a natural gift, so much the better; if not, it should be acquired at any cost.—British Medical Journal.

A Possibility.

"Don't be too anxious to get a husband," said the wise matron. "Don't go around hunting for one."

"Think I should just sit down and wait for one, eh?" replied the maiden.

"Yes, for you'll sit up and wait for one often enough after you've got him."

Quite Natural.

Husband—What did you think when you heard the chandelier fall last night? Wife—Why, I thought you had been detained on business again and were getting upstairs as quietly as you could.

Inaccurate Umbrellas.

We English, of course, get what we call hardened to horrible climatic changes. Nevertheless I am convinced that our solemnity of demeanor is generated by our gray skies, our piercing east winds, our heavy, yellow fogs and our slushy roads and pavements. The waterproof face is the direct result of a firmament of lead. Many of us English people look like inaccurate umbrellas.—London Queen.

Twice Two.

"Do you really believe two heads are better than one?"

"Give it up, but I know we wouldn't amount to much without Nervosoids."—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE JACK OF HEARTS

BY RICHARD BRANSTEIN

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Like a rose shut in a book
Like a dried flower found after many years
Is the bare pages claim control
To reach into the heart within the soul.
—Rickerill.

A Poor Clown dressed as a Jack of Hearts; a Kirally ballet Girl; a Man who had lost the power of loving, and a Woman wearing gloves of scarlet—these belong to my story.

Twenty-odd clowns, 600 ballet girls, and five other tier of loges crowded with humanity—these have no part in my story, having each sad all, like the rest of us, stories of their own.

But they are, on my page, fused into one by the blare and trumpeting of circus music and the damp odor of sawdust, as the great canvas-covered arena of Madison Square garden is filled with the gaudy radiance of a shifting, sonic-obeying ballet.

Suddenly, amid a trembling, a sudden change in music, a fresh detachment of dancers comes fluttering out of a canvas gateway. It is gay in wild rose—yellow and jaunty with buoyant ribbons of pale green. Among them is one noticeable for extreme youth and a certain crude beauty. She takes her primitive steps with the awkward grace of a child. She is a common little thing, her freckled face covered with grease-paint, and her round, wide-open eyes heavily lined.

And with the ballet in green and gold comes a detachment of droll clowns, cleverly gotten up as a pack of cards.

It is lower bar a Woman leans with cold eyes to watch their absurdities. Her hair is massed about her head like the coils of pale gold snakes. She is in white, but her neatness handles, with which she gesticulates as she talks, are covered with gloves of scarlet. Over her shoulder leans a man, whose heavy-lidded eyes watch unobtainently the girl of the ballet.

Five hundred corypbees grouped as a mammoth flower, and under the bar where the Man and Woman sit, a human atom poises as the satrems point of one of the petals. Bounding, swaying, ill at ease, startled into fresh mistakes by the attention she excites, the Girl glances upward, and looks stupidly into their faces.

Between them comes tumbling abruptly a clown dressed as a Jack of Hearts. His eyes gleam, shy and cunning, through the ghastly white of his make-up.

And then the ballet writhes, spreads and palpitates into the semblance of a glittering star, but for some unreasonable reason, the eyes of the Man and of the Woman follow the Girl with careless interest.

Little simpleton!" murmurs the Woman.

"Pretty simpleton!" corrects the Man with emphasis.

"I'll take her home with me to supper," suggests she, rubbing her gloves softly.

"And why?" asks he of the heavy-lidded eyes.

"Caprice! A fancy to see what these animals are like; she is like a kitten. She purred when I caught her eyes."

"Kittens scratch."

"Not if one strokes their fur well."

"Or—grow to be cats."

"Thanks." Her face clouds as she watches him.

"Oh—as you like," he continues, yawning behind his hand discreetly.

Just then two other men entered the box, and the Woman turned to them. But the Man followed the Girl with his glance, so like an unholy curse.

And vaulting, grimacing, tumbling, came and went the clown dressed as a Jack of Hearts.

"Like a rose shut in a book, in which pure women may not look," quoted the Man with the weary face in the box, as he watched the Girl of the innocent face. For he was of the artistic temperament and somewhat of a poet.

But the Clown, who had no poetry in his soul, but only a poorly cooked dinner in his stomach, followed his glance, until he also noticed the Girl.

"Oh, ho!" said the clown, and turned a few handsprings in an absent-minded way.

For he had not a particle of delicacy, being a very vulgar sort of a fellow, given more to drink than to desirable. And emotions with him generally avoived themselves into tumbling of some kind. Besides, he had never heard of Rossetti.

The next figure of the ballet was the last. In it the dancers carried large hoops which were hung as with glowing jewels, with small illuminated globes, while all were entangled in dress of fantastic hues which were burned by men in the upper balconies.

And still that sturdy, womanly little figure, the New Girl in the ballet, with the round, freckled baby face covered with paint, marched and counter-marched quite bravely with the rest.

And the Woman with the scarlet gloves saw that her companion still found her worth watching. She smiled, hesitated, then scribbled with a tiny pencil a few words, an address on a slip of the programme. Tearing one glove from her hand with her teeth, less festive, she crowded the bit of paper into the middle finger.

When the Girl of the ballet passed the box again, the Woman leaned far over, smiled and dropped the glove—

Into the hand of the clown dressed as a Jack of Hearts.

He was an absurd fellow that clown. He fumbled the glove, clasped it to his breast; he even kissed it. Finally, he robbed it. So he was a thief, you see, as well as a clown and a Jack of Hearts. He was really droll, and all laughed, even the Girl to whom he presented it at last.

For there was a scarcely perceptible break in the ranks of figurantes, and for that one of them carried something as red as blood in one plump hand which grasped so firmly the iron hoop hung with waxing fairy lamps.

The Clown grinned beneath his paint and tumbled on his way. He only knew the Girl as he knew the 499 others in the ballet.

About six months later the Clown read in a penny paper of an auction which had been held in a house on a fine street. Enormous sums had been paid for trifles. A ribbon had been sold for enough to pay his salary for a month; an inkwell had brought a little fortune, and A Scarlet Glove, of which the mate was lost, had sold for $100. The women was fond and vain of the clothes admirers had bought her effects, for, in a way, she had been famous. It was repeated of her—recalled with delight in connection with her death —that she had been responsible for the suicide of a man who had been inconsiderate enough to blow out his brains in her drawing-room.

And she had sighed as she had said:

"After all, one may buy a new carpet."

When the Clown read it, he stared, shifted a quid of tobacco from one cheek to the other and took from a small, greasy book an artificial violet, pilfered upon a bit of programme. He then compared it with that given in the paper.

"Five queer things turns out!" he said, in a more laconic than elegant manner.

Having no poetry in his soul that was his way of expressing it.

He, however, the Man of the heavy-lidded eyes had paid his hundred dollars for the odd scarlet glove, he had a glass of vermouth.

As he sipped it, he sighed: "Poor Fellas! Dead! And still beautiful! Verily knowing all things—she even knew when to die."

Then, being, as I have said, much of a poet, he quoted from Swinburne's "Fellas":

"No diver brings up love again
Drogged once, my beautiful Fellas
In such cold seas."

And then he also went his way and forgot.

As for the Girl of the ballet, she never forgot; for, to forgat, it is necessary first to know.

But a spider with wicked, spiteful eyes is busy at night weaving a dusty web in the Girl's humble, stuffy, little room. He lives over behind a bit of metal in the grate, and is spinning silken threads from it to where just above on the plaster is pinned the scarlet glove of a master.

And I have avery reason to believe that the fussy angel, who is generally supposed to carry a pen behind his ear has at some time made an entry within the book which may or may not resemble this:

"Saved by Sam Branigan—tumbler —Jack of Hearts—clown of Barnum's and one common woman's soul.

"P. S.—To be remembered later."

WAS THE HUNTER'S FRIEND.

He Liked to Enjoy Himself and to See Others Do the Same.

There's a man living about two miles from Atlanta to whom every hunter would be glad to take off his hat. His name is Huff, and, being a hunter himself, is full of sympathy for the man who enjoys a day in the woods with a gun. This sympathy he has expressed in his own peculiar emphatic way. The sportsman who chances to wander into the vicinity of Mr. Huff's home is liable to run up against a notice tacked onto a tree or fence reading like this:

"Hunting is prohibited on these premises. Come in when you hear the dinner horn blow."

That's the kind of man Mr. Huff is, and, what's more, he means exactly what he says so that notice, as can be testified to by the writer. Said Mr. Huff:

"You know I can't enco in awhile, myself, and I know just how aggravating those 'no hunting' signs look to a fellow hunting is one after a bird or a rabbit. So, one day, I thought I'd put up some signs of my own and I went up to Atlanta to get them printed. I went to Jake Kenk's printing office —you know Jake, of course—and I asked him how much he charged for that kind of a job. He said to write out what I wanted printed and then he could tell better.

"So I wrote that down, as you saw it over there on the tree, and handed it to him. He read it and then he says: 'Not a dogoned cent. How many do you want of them?' Jake, many do you want of them?' Jake, you know, I am old hunter himself.

"Well, he printed a bunch of them for nothing, and more than that, he added the postage on them, too."

If there be a happy hunting ground, somewhere in the future, we believe that Mr. Huff will be accorded all its privileges and that he won't be bothered with any "No Trespassing" signs, either.—Oil City Blizzard.

FOR BIRTHDAY OF POET.

Luncheon Suitable for Anniversary of Shakespeare's Natal Day.

Tuesday is the anniversary of the natal day of the immortal bard of Avon and if any of our readers are planning luncheons or dinners for that day the following quotations will be appropriate:

"There's nothing ill can dwell in such a temple."

"Will! please you taste of what is here?"

"Hay good digestion wait on appetite and health on both."

This one is suitable for a physician or druggist: "If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him.—Henry IV.

For a minister or teacher: "Whose words all ears took captive."

For a bridegroom: "He is the half-part of a blessed man, left to be finished by such as she."

"Her voice was ever soft, gentle and low, an excellent thing in woman."

"Sweets to the sweet."

"I am glad to see you, much good it do your heart!"

This menu may be served and it seems to me that if memory does not fail that Shakespeare's favorite colors were purple and gold; anyway, it would be a pretty conceit to use purple cardboard and gold lettering for the menu and other decorations could be kept in these very effective colors.

"This treasure of an oyster."—Antony and Cleopatra.

"Expect spoon-meat."—Comedy of Errors.

"This fish was well fished for."—Winter's Tale.

"What is this, mutton? No, sheep, sweet lamb."—Love's Labor Lost.

"Tis I, the early village cock."—Richard III.

"I have a dish of doves."—Merchant of Venice.

"The queen of curds and cream."—Winter's Tale.

"A dish fit for the gods."—Julius Caesar.

"The daintiest last, to make the end more sweet."—King Richard III.

"Monarchy of the vine."—Antony and Cleopatra.

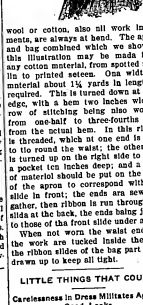
This menu being interpreted conrse by course adds interest to the feast. Here is what to serve: Oysters, soup, spring lamb, creamed chicken patties, broiled squabs, cheese soufflé, ice cream or sherbert, strawberries, bonbons, wine or cordials.

There is a delightful book called "Songs of Shakespeare," with music by Schubert, so if there is anyone to sing I am sure these songs would add great ly to the occasion.

A Dutch Function.

The correspondent who asks for a novel church or club entertainment, I am sure will find the description of this affair just suited to her needs. The invitations were decorated with windmills and the suited note passed in wooden shoes. There were 12 living pictures copied from masterpieces by Holland artists, those taking part were dressed and posed as near like the original as possible. Each member of the club was responsible for only one picture, so the work was equally divided. The tableaux wao shown on a stair landing where the audience could see from drawing-room and hall, and the effect was lovely.

A Holland brand of cocoa was served by young girls dressed in the quolot "Dutch" costume of orange and blue. Tha decorations were also of these colors, with yellow tulips and several pictures of Holland's young queen, Wilhelmina.



This entertainment was so successful that tha ladies wars asked to repent it.

MADAME MERRI.

APRON AND WORK BAG.

Pretty Garment That Combines Two Useful Purposes.

An apron that forms a bag for work is most useful, as not only can the work be kept clean, but the ball of wool or cotton, also all work imple ments, are always at hand. The apron and bag combined which we show in this illustration may be made from any cotton material, from spotted muslin to printed sateen. One width of material about 1¼ yards in length is required. This is turned down at each edge, with a hem two inches wide, a row of stitching being also worked one-half to three-fourths inch from the actual hem. In this ribbon is threaded, which at one end is used to tie round the waist; the other end is turned up on the right side to form a pocket ten inches deep; and a slide is made to match the ribbon at the back of the apron to correspond with the slide in front; the ends are sewn to gether, then ribbon is run through the slids at the back, the ends being joined to those of tha front slide under a bow.

When not worn the waist and and the work are tucked inside the bag, the ribbon slides of the bag part being drawn up to keep all tight.

LITTLE THINGS THAT COUNT.

Carelessness in Dress Militates Against Good Looks.

One of the small matters that militates most against a good appearance is the falling of stray hair at the back. This can be obviated by skillful audjustation and the use of fine hairpins, the best are good; hairpins are items where cheapness is dearest in the end. Most of the best pins come from France, and as they exist they remain unbent, with tha japanning well on; "bronzing," as it is called, for bronze pins hava come to stay. With regard to brushing the hair, unbleached bristles, being much softer than ordinary kinds, are more efficatating to the scalp.

But beside hair there are one or two other items that are most conducive and necessary to a good appearance. First and foremost among these is to have the nails well polished. Most people, even if they do not devote themselves to all the adjuncts of beauty culture, nse a little grease on the face. If they are not in their first youth they would be most unwise not to massage the face, however slight, by daily using some emollient and working across the lines that begin, alas, too soon, and a very good cold cream, gullibees of animal fat, is invaluable for the purpose.—Home Magazine.

ZEAL WITHOUT COMMON SENSE.

Striking Example Related by the Late Dr. Field.

A Presbyterian clergyman was praising the late Dr. Henry Martin Field of Stockbridge, who for 44 years edited the Evangelist.

"Dr. Field did so much good," he said, "because he went about his work diplomatically, sanshly reasonably. I once heard him declare that reformers failed often because the moment they etorted a reform they dropped common sense. Common sense was swallowed up in zeal. He said that a nerve cure faddist once entered a shop and landing the proprietor on one side whispered mysteriously: 'Ah, my friend, you can do the race untold good if you will only take the agency for our anti-tea preparation. It is warranted to cure in a week the most confirmed and nerve-racked tea tippler. Never again—'

"But the dealer laughed and drew away. 'You have made a mistake,' he said. 'I can't take such an agency as that. Don't you see that this is a temp?'

"Oh, no mistake,' said the reformer eagerly. 'It is because you run a temp that I have sought you out. You come into constant contact with the very people we are trying to reach.'"

A MISSOURI WOMAN

Tells a Story of Awful Suffering and Wonderful Relief.

Mrs. J. D. Johnson, of 603 West Hickman St., Columbia, Mo., says:

"Following an operation two years ago, dropsy set in, and my left side was swollen to such an extent that I was confined to my bed. The doctors said he would have to tap out the water. There was constant pain and a gurgling sensation around my heart, and I could not raise my arms above my head. The kidney action was disordered and passages of the secretions too frequent. On the advice of my husband I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. After using two boxes my trouble has not reappeared. This is wonderful, after suffering two years.'

HOW CLASSIC WAS WRITTEN.

Bret Harte's Great Poem Result of an Inspiration.

The war correspondent, Frederic Villiers, has recorded n talk with Bret Herte epropos of the poem, "Plain Language from Truthful James," one most keenly in the States," said Harte:

"On hearing of his death (I) sat down about three in the afternoon to write an editorial on the great author. I wrote one and then tore it up. Then another, after much pains, was written. This did not please me, so I tore it up. I merely sat together and threw it into tha waste paper basket; it would not do. It was getting late, and I was not keeping the paper waiting for press. I was drumming on my desk, absolutely without another thought in my head; I had run dry. Suddenly I mechanically began to write and the result was the poem you see seem to like so much. Well, Mr. Villiers, you are not far out. I like it, too."

BLOOD GETS SOUR.

Gives Advice and Tells of Simple Home Mixture.

At this time of year, says a well-known authority, the Kidneys become sluggish, clogged and inactive, failing to filter out the poisons and acids, which sour the blood, causing our entire body to feel rundown, but the worst forms of Rheumatism, Nervous and Stomach troubles, Backache and pain, Annoying Urinary effiictions.

It is worth anyone's time now to get from soma good prescription pharmacy the following ingredients: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shnking well in a bottla and take in teaspoonful doses after your meals and at bedtime.

This simple home-made mixture will force the Kidneys to normal, healthy action, so they will filter and strain all uric acid and poisonous waste matter from the blood, and expel this in the urine, at the same time restoring the "full blood count"—that is, 95 per cent. red blood corpuscles—which is absolutely indispensable to perfect health.

Dependence Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

WEIGHT AND HEALTH

THIN, NERVOUS PEOPLE NEED TONIC TREATMENT.

This Woman Took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, Gained Thirty Pounds and Has Been Well Ever Since.

How many women—and men too—are suffering from a general decline in health which the ordinary remedies seem unable to check! How many husbands see their wives wasting away, steadily losing health and beauty, and are powerless to help! Consumption and other germ diseases find in these debilitated systems easy prey, for the lowered vitality is unequal to the task of fighting off the infection of these diseases to which most of us are almost daily exposed.

The symptoms indicating the decline which may have results as fatal could scarcely be better described than in the statement of Mrs. William Manley, of 93 Court street, Utica, N. Y. Her case is a typical one. She says:

"For six months after the birth of my baby, I suffered from sick, dizzy headaches, which seemed like a rush of blood to my forehead, just back of my eyes. Sometimes they twitched so I could hardly see and black spots floated before them. The least exertion brought on this sickness. My appetite was poor and I was often sick to my stomach.

"If I tried to work my feet soon became swollen, paining me terribly. I had sinking spells and grew pale and nervous. I was so weak that I weighed only 95 pounds.

"One day when at tha drug store to get headache powdors I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills instead. I soon noticed tint my headache was disappearing and my nerves gradually grew stronger. In this way, as a hearty appetite and I now weigh over 130 pounds. I believe the pills to be the best tonic and builder a woman can take, as they certainly helped me when my health was at its worst."

Sold by all dealers, or sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

RUSTIC WINDOW BOX.

Ornamental and Useful Article to Beautify Home.

Instead of using an ordinary green painted window box why not make an artistic one in which the color does not clash with the plants contained in it, but rather harmonizes with them and brings out the beauty of the foliage to the most advantage, asks a writer in Popular Mechanics.

Such a window box can be made by anyone having usual mechanical ability and will furnish more opportunities for artistic and original design than many other articles of more complicated construction.

The box proper should be made a little shorter than the length of the window to allow for the extra space taken up in trimming and should be nearly equal in width to the sill, as shown in Fig. 1. If the sill is inclined, as is usually the case, the box will require a greater height in front, to make it set level, as shown in Fig. 2.

Fig. 1

Plan of the Window Box.

The box should be well nailed and screwed together and should then be painted all over to make it more durable. A number of one-half inch holes should be drilled in the bottom, thus allowing the excess water to run out and prevent rotting the plants and box.

Having completed the haro box, it may be trimmed to suit the fancy of the maker. The design shown in Fig. 3 is very simple and easy to construct but may be replaced with a panel or other design. One form of panel design is shown in Fig. 3.

Trimming having too rough a surface will be found unsuitable for this work, as it is difficult to fasten and cannot be split as well as smooth trimming. It should be cut the proper length before being split and should be fastened on with brads. The half-round hoops of barrels will be found very useful in trimming, especially for filling in purposes, and by using them the operation of splitting is avoided. After the box is trimmed, the rustic work should be varnished, in order to thoroughly preserve it, as well as improve its appearance.

BETTING OUT TREES.

Yearly Practice of Planting Trees a Good One.

On our farm we have made it a practice every spring to set out some trees. We choose this season of the year because we have had better success in getting trees to grow than we have by planting them in the fall. This holds good not only with forest trees, but also with fruit trees and even strawberries.

Of late years we have been putting our trees along the highway side, and we have some beautiful trees growing there. Some of those we set our first are now six or seven inches in diameter, having made this growth in the last 15 years. And these, too, being hard or sugar maples, have grown as slowly as any trees, almost, that one might choose to set out. In our state, New York, writes R. L. Vincent in Farmers' Review, there is a state law providing for certain tax deductions for setting out trees along the highway, but we have never taken advantage of it, being very well satisfied with the added beauty, as well as the prospective usefulness to us of the trees.

Not far from our place there is a farm with so many trees of the variety mentioned, the sugar maples, along the road that the owner can tap quite a sugar orchard right there if he wishes to. The trees have gained a good size now, so that they would not be materially injured by careful tapping. There is this great advantage in a sugar bush of this sort. It is easy of access. One need not travel around over rough roads to do the work. It is always neat and clean and the work of gathering the sap is not hard. Some day we will all pay more attention to the matter of setting out trees than we do now, and it will be a great thing for the country when we do.

The Only Way.

There is no safe method of determining the butter qualities of a herd except by testing or churning the milk of each cow separately. The bulk of the milk is not a sure indication. Very often the cow that gives but a moderate quantity of milk may yield the largest amount of butter. In breeding up a herd a knowledge of the characteristics of each cow will enable the dairyman to breed for the best results, as the superior cows may be used for breeding to thoroughbred bulls. It does not pay to keep the calves unless the merits of their sires and dams are well known.

DON'T GRUMBLE AT TRIFLES,

Twenty-five Bushels Wheat and Forty-five Bushels Oats Per Acre Are in Western Canada.

Saltcoats, Sask.,
8th December, 1906.

To the Editor.
Dear Sir,
I willingly give you the result of my four and a half years' experience in the District of Saltcoats.
Previous to coming here I farmed in Baldwin, St. Croix County, Wisconsin, and as I have heard a great deal about the Canadian North-West, I decided to take a trip there and see the country for myself. I was so impressed with the richness of the soil that I bought half a section of land about five miles from the town of Saltcoats. I moved on to the land the following June and that year broke 90 acres, which I cropped in 1904, and had 39 bushels wheat per acre. In 1905, with an acreage of 160 acres, I had 24 bushels wheat and 35 bushels of oats per acre. In 1906, with 175 acres under crop, I had 25 bushels wheat and 45 bushels of oats per acre.
From the above mentioned yields you can readily understand that I am very well pleased with the Canadian West. Of course, I have had to work hard, but I don't mind that when I get such a good return for my labor.
To anyone thinking about coming to this country I can truthfully say that if they are prepared to work and not grumble at trifles, they are bound to get on. Some things I would like different, but take the country all round, I don't know where to go to get a better.

Yours truly,
(Signed) O. B. OLSON.

GONE FOREVER.

Ten years ago a farmer put his initials on a dollar bill. The next day he went to the nearest town and spent it with a merchant. Before the year was out it came to the dollar back. Four times in six years the dollar came back to him for produce and three times he heard of it in the pocket of his neighbors.

The last time he got it back four years ago. He sent it to a mail order house. He never has seen that dollar since, and never will. That dollar bill will never pay any more school or road tax for him, will never build or brighten any of the homes of the community. He sent it entirely out of the circle of usefulness to himself and his neighbors.

Patronize your local merchant who helps you to pay your taxes, support your schools and churches, and lends a helping hand in times of sickness and trouble.

HENS KNEW THEIR BUSINESS.

Never Would They Lay Anything but the Freshest of Eggs.

There is a German dairyman and farmer, whose place is not far from Philadelphia, who greatly plumes himself upon the absolute superiority of his products above all others in the vicinity.

On one occasion he personally applied to a Germantown housekeeper for a transfer of her custom to himself. "I heard dot you haf a lot of trouble with dot dairyman of yours," he said. "Yust you gif me your custom and der will be no trouble."

"Are your eggs then to grow fresh?" asked the woman.

"Fresh!" repeated the German, in an indignant tone. "Let me dell you, madam, dot my hens nefer, nefer lay anything but fresh eggs!"

Good Theory, Poor Practice.

To encourage temperance the British admiralty allows 36 cents a month to sailors who forego their daily ration of rum, but a sailor who does not wish to drink rum can draw his rations and sell them to other sailors at 60 cents or even seven a month, the temperance plan is not so successful as was hoped.

APPENDICITIS.

Not at All Necessary to Operate in Many Cases.

Antomobiles and Appendicitis seare some people before they are hit.

Appendicitis is often caused by too much starch in the bowels. Starch is hard to digest and clogs up the digestive machinery—also tends to form cakes in the cecum. "That's the blind pouch at entrance to the appendix.)

A. N. H. girl had appendicitis, lived on milk for awhile—then Grape-Nuts and got well without an operation.

She says: "Five years ago while at school, I suffered terribly with constipation and indigestion. Pains much starch, white bread, potatoes, etc., which she did not digest.)

"Soon after I left school I had an attack of appendicitis and for thirteen weeks lived on milk and water. When I recovered enough to eat solid food there was nothing that would agree with me, until a friend recommended Grape-Nuts.

"When I began to eat Grape-Nuts I weighed 98 lbs., but I soon grew to 115 lbs. The distress after eating left me entirely and now I am like a new person."

(A little Grape-Nuts dissolved in hot water or milk would have been much better for this case than milk alone, for the starchy part of the wheat and barley is changed into a form of digestable sugar in making Grape-Nuts.)

ADVICE TO RHEUMATICS

Noted Physician Tells How to Prevent and Cure Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder Troubles.

(By Geo. Edmund Flood, M. D.)
If you would avoid Rheumatism and Kidney and Bladder Troubles, be moderate in the consumption of heavy, rich foods, substitute as far as possible soups, broths, fresh milk and drink water—lots of water. Take plenty of time to eat, and don't eat after you have had enough, even if it does taste good. If your work is confining take a moderate amount of exercise each day in the open air.

Of course, neither diet, water, rest nor exercise will cure these afflictions. I advise them as preventives only. For the benefit of the readers of this article who are now afflicted with Rheumatism, Kidney, Bladder or Urinary trouble, and desire to be cured quickly, I give below, complete in every detail, the famous prescription which has made me so successful in the treatment of these diseases. It is the most certain cure for these diseases that I have ever used. It is pleasant to take, it is not expensive, it can be filled by any druggist, and I believe it is the greatest prescription for Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder Trouble ever written. It is also a valuable spring tonic and blood purifier. If you are a sufferer, save this, take it to your drug-gist and have it filled, or get the ingredients and mix them at home.

Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic, ½ ounce.

Concentrated Barkola Compound, 1 ounce.

Fluid Extract Prickly Ash Bark, ½ drachm.

Aromatic Elixir, 4 ounces.

Adult dose, take one teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime; children, one-fourth to one-half teaspoonful after meals.

After you are cured follow the advice I have given you in regard to diet, exercise and water, and you will not need the services of a physician again for these diseases.

French Sailors Use Drugs.

The extent to which the narcotic habit prevails in the French navy was illustrated a few days ago by the proceedings of a court-martial at Brest. The defendants were half a dozen men of ordinary rank, who were charged with a considerable number of robberies. All the men were victims of opium or the other drug habit, or both combined, and were in the habit of bemuddling themselves daily with these drugs and the robberies had been committed to gratify their passion. Severe sentences were passed.

Up to a week or so ago I had tried many other remedies and several doctors, and spent about three hundred dollars, without any success, but this is to-day the seventh day that I have been using the Cuticura Remedies (costing a dollar and a half), which have cured me completely, so that I can again attend to my business. I went to work again to-night. I had been suffering for eight years and have now been cured by the Cuticura Remedies within a week. Fritz Hirschfalt, 24 Columbus Ave, New York, N. THE CHANGE OF LIFE

Sensible Advice to Women from Mrs. Henry Lee, Mrs. Fred Certia and Mrs. Pinkham.

MRS HENRY LEE MRS. FRED CERTIA

Owing to modern methods of living not one woman in a thousand approaches the period of natural change without experiencing a train of very annoying and sometimes painful symptoms.

This is the most critical period of her whole existence and every woman who neglects the care of her health at this time invites disease and pain.

When her system is in a deranged condition or she is predisposed to nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholia, dread of impending evil, palpitation of the heart, irregularities, constipation and dizziness are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period of change. Nearly all this change may be expected.

Mrs. Fred Certia, 1014 So. Lafayette Street, So. Bend, Ind., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"Both I and my daughter have been successful in restoring to health, actually thousands of women, you cannot well say without trying it, "I do not believe it will help me." It is your duty to yourself and family to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

When a medicine has been successful in restoring to health, actually thousands of women, you cannot well say without trying it, "I do not believe it will help me." It is your duty to yourself and family to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

are passing through Change of Life. For several months I suffered from hot flashes, nervousness, headache and sleeplessness, and thought nothing could relieve me. I had made up my mind there was no help for me, when I began to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, my bad symptoms ceased, and it brought me safely through the danger period, built up my system and I am in excellent health. I advise all women to use Pinkham's Vegetable Compound unsurpassed for women during this trying period of life."

Mrs. Henry Lee, 60 Winter Street, New Haven, Conn., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"After suffering untold misery for three years from Change of Life, I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I wrote you my condition, and you told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and followed your advice, and to-day I am well and happy. I cannot praise your remedy too highly, and as a mother, and for years previous I had tried in vain to get relief, I would not be without it. Consider your medicine a sovereign balm for suffering women."

Women passing through this critical period should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. If there is anything about your case you don't understand write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice. It is free and has guided thousands to health.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Publication American Journalist Who Has Traveled Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested Point of View. Will Contribute Sketches Similar to This, Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

ONE OF AMERICA'S LARGEST ENTERPRISES

Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.

Missionaries, and sundry other forms of merchandise. But the church members, as church members, who put up the money, profited not at all by this.

Apparently, the missionaries themselves, of whom America maintains 3,776 in Japan, China, Korea, the Philippines, Burma, Siam, India, Thibet, Persia, Turkey, Egypt and the South American countries, do not get rich out of this vast sum. According to the official figures, which I gathered before leaving the United States, the missionary's salary ranges from $600 to $1,800 a year. The last-named figure is paid to veterans of the Baptist denomination, who are married and have families; the former represents the salary promised to the missionaries of the China Inland Mission, the Christian and Missionary Alliance, and a few other undenominational bodies.

What It Pays to Be a Missionary.

The unmarried college-bred man who goes to the foreign field gets about $700 a year; it may be a hundred dollars more, or, more likely, a hundred dollars less, according to his denomination. A married man gets usually from $1,000 to $1,200, with $100 extra for each child, if he belongs to one of four or five denominations. An unmarried woman gets $500, $600 or even $700 a year, with no prospect of increase. The missionary's stipend is based not on the idea of compensation but of simple support. A mere living is all that it is designed to afford the missionary. All who choose this calling, say the boards, must renounce hope of earthly gains.

Every missionary contracts to stay seven years before receiving a furlough; then his expenses home will be paid, and he will receive one-half salary while off duty. He is forbidden to engage in outside money-making pursuits. As a rule, if he writes a book, its royalties must be turned back into the treasury of his board. So it strikes one that, even considering the lower cost of living in the Orient, the financial inducements to a cultivated young person to become a missionary are rather meager. Wherefor this fact shuts out all but second class men and women remains to be found out.

Sending That Penny to the Heathen.

Everybody has heard the charge that for every penny which gets to the mission field, 99 cents is required to send it. Business men, who believe in business methods even in religious affairs are the most frequent critics of the expenses of the conduct of the missionary propaganda. I determined to collect this matter up, with quite surprising results. Here are the official figures, in all their dryness, of the cost of collection and administration of foreign mission funds last year by leading denominations:

	Per cent.
United Presbyterian	4 1-3
Methodist, North	5 2-5
Methodist, South	5 7-10
Baptist, South	6 1-10
Presbyterian, North	6 3-10
Presbyterian, South	7 7-10
Reformed Church	8 7-10
American Board	10 3-4
Protestant Episcopal	11 1-10
Baptist, North	11½

On the way to these interesting figures I learned that last year the average American church member gave 64 cents in foreign missions, the record being held by the United Presbyterians, with $1.77 per member. It seems that there has been a general increase in giving, the Southern Baptists having doubled their foreign mission gifts within a decade, and the Southern Presbyterians nearly so.

Smoothing the Investigator's Path.

I found these missionary board officials a civil lot. I could have wished the Armstrong committee such luck in its investigation of insurance matters. The boards open wide up, and then deluge one with information upon his approach. In fact, the considerations which, more than any other, leads to prodigiose me, as an investigator toward the missionary people, is the heartiness and frankness with which they seem to welcome an investigation. Without hesitation they have afforded me every facility for looking into their work at home and in foreign lands. They say: "Find out the worst and tell the public, including us. We want to see the thing with the eyes of a disinterested observer."

A New Side of College Life.

Picked up in the forest of facts amid which I found myself, is the news that Yale university has established a missionary lectureship, with Prof. Harlan P. Beach, an ex-missionary, as incumbent; that Yale, Harvard, Princeton and the University of Pennsylvania all now have foreign mission enterprises of their own, manned by graduates and supported by alumni and students.

On the foreign field—to make a big jump—there are now 400 translations of the Bible. Of native converts the American missionaries claim half a million, while the total native Christian population of so-called "heathen" lands is a million and a half.

Hard Knocks for the Missionaries.

Quite different are the stories I hear in other quarters. One of the highest officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship company assured me that one who knows, that "the missionaries are a lot of grafters. But," he added, with the characteristic commercial spirit of the day, "I do not want to see their graft stopped, for it pays us to carry them."

A Hong-Kong merchant aboard ship declared that "the missionaries are a pack of scoundrels. They are overbearing, lazy, pestiferous fellows, recruited only from the very lowest ranks of society in America and Great Britain." That last was a little more than I could swallow, for it went contrary to my personal knowledge in numerous instances. The missionary may prove to be a bad egg when he reaches foreign shores; but every college man in the land knows the stock from which he springs. I recalled while leaning over the rail conversing with Mr. Hong-Kong merchant, that a few weeks before I had read an enthusiastic autograph letter from President Roosevelt to Rev. Dr. Arthur H. Smith (father of the project of bringing Chinese students to American universities) concerning the latter's books on China. A few days previously Dr. Smith had been the president's guest at luncheon.

As a matter of candor I may say that thus far I am having some difficulty in running down to particulars the countless charges against the missionaries. I hope to have better fortune in foreign lands. As an illustration of my troubles, there is the instance of a fellow passenger on the Trans-Pacific steamer, the wife of a Philippine official. She had learned the nature of my quest. "I am glad you are going to get after the missionaries, and I hope you will rip them up the back," she began, breezily. "We who reside and live out here know that they are a bad lot." Yet she could not, when urged, become more definite, and, although long a resident of Manila, and an Episcopalian, she confessed that she had never heard or met Bishop Brent, the brilliant head of the Philippine missions of her church.

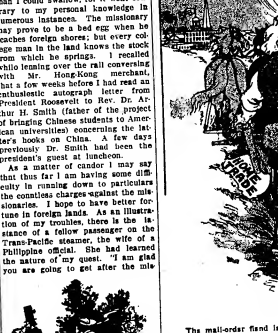
Good Morals But Bad Manners.

Already I have a dim suspicion that one reason for the antipathy which many travelers have to missionaries is to be found in the latter's attitude toward life aboard ship and in port cities. The missionary is, I infer, often narrow and intolerant, and destrous of imposing his standards upon everybody. He is prone to make unnaturally remarks about the amount of drinking that goes on, seven days a week, aboard ship. The incessant gambling, also, of the smoking room and ship saloons gets on his nerves. I believe, in expressing the opinion that my practices should be counted good form aboard ship that are contrary to the law of the land when ashore, that is the way he justifies his tactlessly-aired opinions.

Tourists do not like to have the narrow standards of the missionaries thus flung at their heads censoriously; and they are not likely to form an entirely favorable estimate of their critics. "Too many young missionaries," said a famous veteran missionary to me a few minutes ago, "think that they must start out by trying to convert the whole ship. They do not try to mingle socially and congenially with their fellow passengers, but to acquire an identity as missionaries, rather than as men and women."

NO VALID REASONS

PATRONIZING MAIL ORDER HOUSES IS WITHOUT EXCUSE.



GOODS NOT EVEN CHEAPER

With Freight Charges Added and Quality Considered the Home Merchant Does Best.

(Copyrighted, 1906, by Alfred C. Clark.)

The reasons why people should trade at home are numerous, but so far as we are able to learn but one reason is advanced for purchasing goods of mail order houses. That one reason—a saving of money—is often true in fact for many instances the express charges or freight and cartage will bring the cost of an article that is quoted in the price list seemed a wonderful bargain, almost or quite up to the price charged by the local dealer. But even were one able to save a few cents on the purchase price by buying away from home, it appears to us that the loss is infinitely more than the gain, for he who sends the money which he earns in the home town out to swell the coffers of wealthy dealers in distant cities cannot fail to forfeit in a considerable degree the respect of those around him, nor can he under these conditions preserve his self-respect intact.

The man who patronizes mail order houses must have a sneaking feeling

The Mail-order fiend is encroaching upon our town like a devastating prairie fire, and we should turn to with a will, and by the aid of the home trade plow run a protective furrow around our institutions from destruction. Such is the duty of every loyal resident.

that everybody in town knows that he is a hindrance rather than a help to the community. He is not wanted in public positions, and when questions of local interest are discussed, his opinion carries far less weight than the man who contributes his share to the prosperity of the community by spending his money where he earns it.

He is addition to losing in a large degree the respect of others and his own self-respect, the man who does not trade with the town in which he lives fails to find the contentment which is necessary to happiness. Having done nothing to make the town better, he is unable to see the many advantages it possesses, and is constantly finding and thinking of its deficiencies. He does not move out, however, but stays on year after year, a chilled and parasitic, getting all he can and giving as little as possible in return. There is an unwritten law of nature that makes it impossible for one to really taken an interest in a place until he has done something for it, and he is only wasting his time and share toward building up the town in which we live that it becomes a real home to us.

Perhaps the local dealers in country towns do not always have in stock just the article you desire, but they are usually willing to order whatever their customers want, and under ordinary circumstances can supply you as quickly as you can procure the goods from a mail order house. When you buy of the home merchant, the goods are before you and you see what you are getting. In buying by mail there is always a chance that when the goods arrive they will not prove to be just what you expected you are in a hurry for some article there is no time to send to New York, Chicago, or elsewhere. Your need is immediate and imperative. You are glad under such circumstances to trade with the home merchant, yet if other people followed your example and patronized mail order houses, there would be no home merchant to trade with. If others bought of him only when they wanted things in a hurry, and sent out of town for the greater part of their supplies, he would have left for more promising fields long ago, or if he had stayed in those circumstances, the sheriff would finally have closed his doors. You wouldn't like to live in a place without stores, and yet it may be that you send your money to some big concern in a distant city, you lessen the amount of money in circulation in your own residence town. If you had spent it at the home store, some of it at least would have been paid out by the proprietor in the form of wages to his employes, they in turn would have expended it for the necessities of life, and it would have passed from one to another of the home dealers, proving an important factor in the prosperity of the community. Having sent it to the mail order house the probabilities are that it will never again benefit anyone in your home town.

You should trade with the home merchant because he is the one from whom you ask and receive favors. Perhaps you have had a run of ill luck; have lost your position, had long-continued illness in the family, or have experienced difficulty in collecting money due you. You are in stratened circumstances. Would a letter to the mail order house, stating all these circumstances, secure for you a supply of the necessaries of life on liberal credit terms? Most assuredly not. An appeal to the proprietors for aid in your extremity would be berren of results. It is the home merchant who stands ready to extend the credit necessary to tide you over an emergency, and for this reason, if for no other, he should have your loyal support in your times of prosperity.

Perhaps you are financially independent, and have never known the necessity of asking for credit. Even then you are indebted to the home merchant for many of the advantages you enjoy. The proprietors of a mail order house would laugh you to scorn were you to ask them to subscribe toward the building of your new church, the improvement of your school building, or the expenses of maintaining your fire department. The home merchant contributes liberally to the support of these institutions so essential to the public comfort and well-being, and you cannot afford to withhold from him your patronage.

You know your local dealers. Perhaps they have grown from childhood to manhood in your home town; you were boys together, they have watched by you in sickness, and comforted you in sorrow, they are a kindly interest in your welfare. Do you not prefer that your trade should increase the small profits rather than add its quota to the millions of dollars annually sent to the mail order houses? If the home merchants prosper the town will be a better place in which to live. Their prosperity will be manifested by improvements in the appearance of their own property, and by their increased liberality in contributing toward public improvements, and by helping them by your patronage, you will also be helping yourself and the entire community.

Sporting Gossip.

A little chap waiting for a car at the Manhattan end of the Brooklyn bridge recently was picked out by two lemon pool men as a likely victim. They got to talking to him and wound up by suggesting a drink. Then they suggested a game of pool. The little fellow said he didn't know much about pool, but to be obliging he would play a few games. To make the games interesting they bet a dollar on one ball, better known as the lemon ball. One of the lemon men won the lemon ball, but he saw to it that the little fellow got the game. The second, third, and fourth games were won by the little fellow, but either one of the lemon men was sure to get the balls. The fifth game played, the little fellow apparently grew desperate and offered to bet $15. To give their new-found friend a chance to get his money back, the two agreed to plunge. The little fellow got the lemon ball pushed into the pocket he then thought it was an accident, and the sixth game found them offering to bet $20 on the lemon. They were taken up, and to their surprise the little fellow got it again. The seventh, eighth, and ninth games saw the lemon ball pushed into the pocket by the little fellow. The proprietor of the billiard parlor, who is on the square, held the stakes, and when the lemon men cried quits more than $130 was handed over to the intended victim.

Before bidding the lemon man goodby, the little fellow handed him his card. It read: "Frank Hoppe." He is a brother of Willie Hoppe, the billiard champion.

After several years of enforced retirement, "Major" Taylor, the famous negro cycle racer, may again be seen on the big tracks, and it is reported that he will soon be riding in Paris. It will be recalled that Taylor stock dropped when he refused to meet National Champion Frank L. Kramer. The report comes from a Paris sporting paper, which adds a wealth of detail predicting great work for Taylor in a round-the-world tour via Australia. Unfortunately for the French paper, "Major" himself denies the story. Of late years Taylor has been regarded as one of the solid citizens of Worcester, Mass., where he has been living really on his income from well-invested earnings. Some corroborative evidence for the French statement is the appearance of an alleged cablegram from Taylor in the advertising of a French manufacturer of bicycles, in which the American states positively that he is returning to France, and asks to have a mount reserved for him.

Charles F. Barker of Boston successfully defended his title as national checker champion in the recent tournament at Boston. Barker receives the first prize, $150. The other prize-winners in the recent tournament were Heffner, L. S. Heed of Bronxville, N. Y., England and Charles H. Rose four finishing in the major division; H. Zink of Boston, Willis A. Hill of Lowell and George Andrew of Boston, the last three finishing in that order in the minor section.

Constance S. Titus, champion amateur sculler of America, is to compete for England and Germany next July. He will leave here in the letter part of May, going direct to Henley to complete training preparations already begun on Carnegie lake, Princeton. Titus will compete at Henley for the diamond sculls, which represent the championship sculling event for amateurs in Great Britain, and try to fill Hal Chase's shoes before a crowd of 10,000.

"Oh, no, I will take the utility job for mine. Then they won't expect too much."

Jack Johnson, the negro champion pugilist, has been matched to fight Jim Jeffries, the former champion, on July 4 at Reno, Nev. Jeffries has been in retirement for some time, and has been training on his ranch in California. Johnson has been fighting in Australia, and has been defeating all comers. Jeffries has been the champion pugilist for some years, and has defended his title successfully against all comers. Johnson is a negro, and Jeffries is a white man. Jeffries has been urged to come out of retirement and defend his title against Johnson, and has finally consented to do so.

George Moriarity, the Chicago boy who has been subbing for Hal Chase at first, was the happiest Highlander of them all when the announcement was made that Hal was to join Griffith's team again.

"Yes, it was a great opportunity of making myself famous," said Morry, "but you know a creepy feeling kinder sneaks up a young player's spine when he thinks about getting up on Washington Heights and trying to fill Hal Chase's shoes before a crowd of 10,000.

"Oh, no, I will take the utility job for mine. Then they won't expect too much."

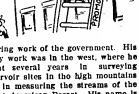
Washington Day by Day

News Gathered Here and There at the National Capital

WASHINGTON.—Judge J. B. Ballinger of Seattle, the new commissioner of the general land office in the interior department, has set the politicians and lobbyists to guessing. When members of the senate and house call to see him on official business he refuses to converse with them in whispers, but makes them talk out loud so that everybody within earshot can hear what is going on. Western senators and representatives are especially displeased with this new disposition of things conversational in the land office. Those of them who go there to confer with him usually have business that they do not want everybody to know about, at least until they have secured what they want, but Judge Ballinger is proceeding upon the hypothesis that public business is everybody's business, and so he insists upon all classes of visitors speaking in tones that plainly convey the meaning of their words to all parts of the room he occupies. To some senators and representatives who have objected to his tactics the new land commissioner has politely suggested that they write him fully on the subjects of their attention, and that he will reply by mail. But, curiously enough, even this method is not satisfactory to many of them.

Recently one of the biggest senators from the west stalked into Judge Ballinger's office while he was surrounded by a crowd of newspaper men.

"Come out to lunch with me," somewhat confidently said the senator.



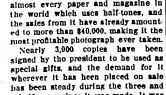
"It's not my lunch time yet, thank you," replied the commissioner.

"Then I'll wait for you," said the senator.

"I'm afraid if you do you'll wait until about six o'clock, because I've got so much work piled up on my desk that I probably shan't be able to get away before that hour."

The senator then took his seat in the reception room and waited, with what patience he could command, his regular turn to talk to the commissioner, but when he did secure a conference he had to talk out loud and this made him go away angry—also empty handed.

WILL SPEND MILLIONS RECLAIMING DESERT SOIL

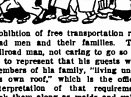


ARTHUR POWELL DAVIS, the new chief engineer of the reclamation service, will spend more than $1,000,000 a month, employing more than 10,000 men, in reclaiming 2,000,000 acres of desert land included in the 25 irrigation projects now under construction by the government. He has just been selected for this responsibility by Secretary Garfield of the interior department, on the recommendation of Director Newell, whose assistant Mr. Davis has been for the last few years in the vast work being done to conserve the waters of the arid west. The appointment is a notable instance of the promotion for merit policy of the administration.

Mr. Davis was born in Illinois on February 9, 1861. He was educated in the public schools of Junction City and Emporia, Kan., and later completed an engineering course in Govan Washington university. At the age of 23 he entered the United States Geological Survey as a member of the topographic branch, and since then he has been closely connected with the topographic, hydrographic and engineering work of the government. His early work was in the west, where he spent several years in surveying reservoir sites in the high mountains and in measuring the streams of the Great American Desert. His name is attached to many of the original maps of Arizona, New Mexico and California. The reports of his investigations are valuable contributions to the knowledge of the arid country and its reclamation, and have been of especial value in the preliminary work of the reclamation service.

In 1899-1901 Mr. Davis had charge of the hydrographic work on the Nicaragua and Panama canal routes, and his reports furnished much needed and important information concerning both plans. He joined the reclamation service immediately after the passage of the reclamation act, and since that time has taken part in all the engineering work connected therewith.

Mr. Davis is a man of great industry and is enthusiastic in developing efficient and businesslike methods in the operation of the service.



ROOSEVELT PHOTO THAT HAS BROUGHT $40,000

THE most widely published and best known photograph in existence is said to be that of President Roosevelt taking a fence on his favorite hunter. This has been printed in almost every paper and magazine in the world which uses half-tones, and the sales from it have already amounted to more than $40,000, making it the most profitable photograph ever taken.

Nearly 3,000 copies have been signed by the president to be sold as special gifts, and the demand for it wherever it has been placed on sale has been steady during the three and a half years since it was made. It was made with a shutter that opened and closed in one fifteen-hundredth part of a second. The president, accompanied by an orderly, left the cabinet meeting one morning and joined the photographer at Chevy Chase in the suburbs of Washington. It was necessary for the president to mount his horse over the fence a dozen times before a successful picture was taken.

President Roosevelt is probably the most photographed man in the world, with the possible exception of Emperor William, and photographers assert unreservedly that he is most difficult to pose. He is nervous, and is often engaged in what might seem a bit or miss style; but every picture ever taken of him is thoroughly characteristic.

PRIVATE CAR GUESTS FEAR LAW'S IRON HAND

OUT in the city of St. Paul, Minn., there is a company of estimable young persons who are sitting up nights wondering whether they are going to get into the clutches of the interstate commerce commission. They have violated the rate law, and stand to be fined from $100 to $2,000 apiece if they should have the bad luck to be convicted. It is a case of accepting free transportation, and under circumstances which were delightful when the breach of the law was committed, but have lost something of their glamor since it has been discovered that it was a misdemeanor.

As the interstate commerce commissioner has heard it, a prominent official of the St. Paul got up a private car party for some of his friends among the younger set of St. Paul society. The law exempts from the prohibition of free transportation railroad men and their families. This railroad man, not caring to go so far as to represent that his guests were members of his family, "living under his own roof," which is the official interpretation of that requirement, took them along as maids and valets for the members of his family who were of the party. That was a joke which the young folks enjoyed, and added zest to the fun.

It happens, however, that the commerce commission has been receiving information of such violations of the law rather frequently of late, but has never had it in detail sufficient to enable it to undertake a prosecution until this case occurred. Now the commission is considering whether it ought not to reduce this private car party to the example state.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

EGYPT'S MAN OF IRON OUT

Lord Cromer, Great Britain's plenipotentiary on the Nile, the great man in Egypt, who in 29 years raised the land of the Nile from a state of beggary to a condition of prosperity, has resigned his post on account of ill health.

It had been known for some time that the health of Lord Cromer was affected, but there was no idea when he issued his voluminous report on the progress of the government recently that his retirement was impending.

Lord Cromer has been the real ruler of Egypt since 1883, the khedive being mere plaster in his hands. He built the great dams in the Nile, which have added millions of acres of fertile land to the ancient country of the Pharaohs. Egypt was sunk in the deepest debt in the 80s, but now her coffers are overflowing.

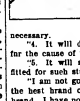
He has had almost public service after he entered the royal artillery in 1858. Four years he acted as secretary of Lord Northbrook, while the latter was viceroy of India. In 1877 he was appointed a commissioner of the Egyptian public debt. In 1879, when the Khedive Ismail was deposed, he represented England and France as one of the controllers-general. In 1880 Lord Comer's services in Egypt received public recognition by his appointment to the office of financial minister on the viceroyal council of India. In 1883 he succeeded Sir Edward Malet as British agent, consul general, and minister plenipotentiary. Lord Cromer is a man of quick decision and great determination. In Egypt he ruled with an iron hand and was an uncompromising servant of British supremacy.

The retirement of Lord Cromer will involve no change in the British policy with regard to Egypt.

EX-OFFICIAL ON TRIAL

The government's prosecuting officers are trying hard to head to jail Binger Hermann, former commissioner of public lands, and member of congress from Oregon. Besides the case which has been on trial in Washington there are indictments and prosecutions waiting for him at home.

Hermann is one of half a dozen prominent men charged with conspiracy to defraud the government, and Hermann is the only big fish that has so far escaped the net. The conspiracy of which Hermann is accused is said to have been entered into while Hermann was commissioner of lands. It is alleged that through the influence of Senator Mitchell, who was to be paid $500 for his services, certain lands in northern Oregon were to be set aside as a forest reserve, to be known as the Hyde Mountain Timber reserve.



Surveyor General Meldrum with one Robinson Mitchell, and others were to be given advance information as to what lands would be included and they would take advantage of this advance information to get possession of the school land sections.

By paying $1.25 an acre and getting some person to sign a "release of a right in purchase" these lands could be corralled by the conspirators before any one suspected what was to happen.

Then as soon as the reserve was created the government would issue "lieu land scrip" for these lands, giving their holders a right to take in lieu of these lands any other public lands outside the reserve. The profit was to come from locating on valuable timber lands the lieu scrip. It is figured that the men in the deal were to clear $750,000.

Senator Mitchell was convicted, but died before sentence was executed. Hermann has claimed right along that he was persecuted. He is putting up a hard fight.

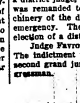
WOMAN ELECTED JUDGE

Katherine Waugh McCulloch, justice of the peace of Evanston, is the first woman judge ever elected in that part of the country. In giving information about how the election will be conducted under petticoat administration, she said:

"I am glad of my election because:

"1. It is the thin end of the wedge which, by consistent work on the part of the woman, can be driven home.

"2. I feel certain that it will help to a realization that which women lawyers in particular desire—the placing of a woman judge on the bench of the municipal court of Chicago.



"3. It will bring to a test the declaration of many men that the intent of the law precludes a woman from occupying the position I am elected to fill. I want to fight that out in court if necessary.

"4. It will do more than anything that has happened in a long time for the cause of woman's suffrage.

"5. It will stimulate the study of law by women who are peculiarly fitted for such study and practice.

"I am not going out looking for cases, but if a man feels unable to get the best brand of justice in a man justice shop he may try the petticoat brand. I have not a swelled head. I don't think a justice of the peace is any better than a good cook."

FREED BY "UNWRITTEN LAW"

Set free of the charge of murder by the "unwritten law," Congressman George K. Favrot, of Dalton Rouge, La., has been released from jail by the court of which he himself was Judge when he shot his boyhood chum, Dr. H. H. Aldrich, dead for a remark about Mrs. Favrot.

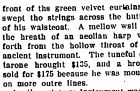
Aldrich was Favrot's family physician. Mrs. Favrot is a strikingly handsome brunette of the southern type. The tragedy caused a sensation through Louisiana, as the three principals belonged to the oldest and most aristocratic families in the state.

Favrot held the offices of congressman from the Sixth district and judge of East Baton Rouge parish. The congressional election had occurred the day preceding the killing, November 7, 1906, and five hours before Dr. Aldrich was shot down Judge Favrot passed the death sentence on a negro for murder.

By an oversight in the Louisiana constitution, there is no substitute for a district judge, and Congressman Favrot, being unable to grant himself bail, was remanded to prison, and there he remained with the entire court machinery of the district tied up because the law did not provide for such an emergency. The supreme court declared the only solution was a special election of a district judge, and this was done.

Judge Favrot was indicted by a grand jury which he himself had called. The indictment was quashed because one of the jurymen was illiterate. A second grand jury has just refused to return an indictment against the congressman.

Round About New York



Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

NEW YORK.—The earnings of the Standard Oil company for some time have been establishing new high records. The net earnings for the current year are expected to reach a figure between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000, or twice the amount neated to pay dividends at last year's rate of $40 a share. The litigation in which the company is involved is the only thing that prevents the Standard Oil company from increasing its disbursements to shareholders. It is said in the event of a satisfactory conclusion of this litigation there will be a melon cutting of no small proportions.

That the management of the Standard Oil company does not believe the present market price of the securities is too high is evident from the fact that the stock is down on the books at a valuatin f $500 a share. Included in the assets are more than $100,000,000 of government bonds.

Producers of oil are sharing in the prosperity of the Standard Oil company. Eastern as well as western oils have witnessed a sharp advance, which has served to stimulate production materially. There is a pronounced scarcity of high-grade oils in the Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana districts, due to the enormous increase in the demand for by products of petroleum, and it is believed it will not be many years before the Standard Oil company will be depending more upon western than eastern oils.

The same results can not be obtained from the low-grade as from the high-grade oils and it will be necessary for the company to increase its refining and pipe line capacity as it becomes more dependent upon the products of the Texas, California, Kansas and Oklahoma fields. As soon as the litigation in which the Standard Oil Company is involved is out of the way the question of increasing the capital stock to a figure that will be more in harmony with the market valuation of the securities will be taken up for consideration.

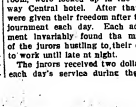
AT the recent Stanford White sale there was not more than two minutes of chaffering on each article before it was snapped up by eager purchasers. Harps without strings went for $100 because they were made in France in the reign of Louis XIV., and gilt-framed Italian armchairs sold for $180 because of the abiding faith of the purchasers in their antiquity.

The sale opened with an offering of weird musical instruments such as the novels of the romance days speak about familiarly. A zither which looked like an elongated soup ladle went for $1. Then the crowd of purchasers in the music room at the White residence saw more value in zithars and two others went at $15 and $11 each.

The attendants held up an attenuated lute, whose freehoard stuck out like the hands of a gardener's spade. This was a chittarone, English, middle of the sixteenth century. As the negro in the butter-pecan livery lifted the chittarone up to the jittie stand in front of the green velvet curtains he swept the strings across the buttons of his waistcoat. A mellow wail like the breath of an aeolian harp wool forth from the hollow throat of the ancient instrument. The tuneful chittarone brought $125, and a brother sold for $175 because he was moulded on more outre lines.

Another strange instrument was the dulcimer, a contrivance which looked like a modern zither inclosed in a giant glove box. When the pianist-auctioneer set it on the stand and let down the four sides of the box, each depicting delightful pastoral scenes wherein kirtled shepherdesses toyed with berihboned crooks, the creator of the stage atmosphere came again to the fore and dropped $300 before the lure of those shepherdesses. Then they sold 13 harps, most of them sans strings and partially broken by infirmity, but all antiques. The lowest price paid for a harp was $65 and $250 was the high-water mark.



EASTER FLOWER BILL OF GOTHAM $1,000,000

SOME one with a fondness for statistics has discovered that the sum spent for Easter flowers in this city amounts to almost $1,000,000. This estimate is based on a canvass of flower shops and is as near the correct figure as can be arrived at without a great deal of time and labor being spent on the task. That society is becoming more extravagant in floral decoration every year is the statement made by one of the florists to the Four Hundred. This same florist says that aside from the amount of money spent at Easter, there is more money put up daily for flowers than ever before. There are also more expensive flowers in the market than there ever were before, because so many of the country gentlemen horsebreeds, with fine conservatories, are constantly bringing out newer and higher grades of flowers for the market as well as for the pleasure of raising them. For instance, Mr. H. McK. Twombly, who has a fine place at Madison, N. J., has this year brought out some very fine orchids.

These orchids have been retailing for two dollars each. On the surface it would appear that the poor would be able to get little pleasure out of flowers at Easter, but the truth is they get more real pleasure out of them than the rich. In the first place, the poor appreciate them more when they get them, and the fact that they do not get them until the day after Easter does not make them enjoy them any the less. There are many societies here for the special purpose of distributing flowers among the poor, and after any event at which they are used profusely, the members collect them and distribute them among the hospitals, institutions and the poor of the tenement house districts.

THAW JURRORS SUFFERED LOSSES BY LONG TRIAL

NEARLY all of the jurors in the Thaw trial, who recently failed to reach a verdict in the long drawn out case, experienced severe financial loss in sitting on the case. While the jurors presumed at the ontset that they were in for a long siege of it, none of them had any idea that the case would extend the length of time it did. During the trial many of the jurors, prevented from attending to business affairs with their accustomed regularity, suffered losses they can never recoup. Others fell far behind in their work, and it will be months before they can catch up.

Besides this, the houses by which some of the jurors are employed as managers or in other responsible capacities found their affairs sadly lagging, and financial losses that can not easily be estimated have resulted.

The fact that the jurors, from the death of the wife of Juror Joseph B. Bolton, three weeks after the trial began, were allowed to go at the close of each day, helped only in part. Those who availed themselves of the opportunity to go to their offices were so overwhelmed with work that it was a severe strain on them.

Before the death of Juror Bolton's wife the jurors, when not in the court room, were locked up in the Broadway Central hotel. After that they were given their freedom after the adjournment each day. Each adjournment invariably found the majority of the jurors hustling to their offices, to work until late at night.

The jurors received two dollars for each day's service during the trial.

JAMESTOWN FAIR IS OPENED TO WORLD

PRESIDENT IS CHIEF FIGURE IN THE CEREMONIES AT NORFOLK.

Quells Incipient Panic—Reviews the International War Fleets, Makes a Vigorous Address and Presses the Gold Button.

Norfolk, Va., April 27.—President Roosevelt, the diplomatic, naval and military representative of 37 of the nations of the world, and the governors of a score of states participated Friday in the opening exercises of the Jamestown Tercentennial exposition.

From the firing of a salute of 100 guns by the United States army, through the picturesque review of the international fleet of war vessels anchored in Hampton Roads, through the ceremonies of dedication at which the president spoke, and down to a late hour at night, when the chief executive went aboard the naval yacht Sylph to spend the night in the lower bay, the day was crowded with notable incidents.

President Averts a Panic.

Not the least impressive of the day's events was the action of the president in assuming command of the situation in front of the crowded grandstand from which he spoke, when a panic seized the surging throng of spectators. Pressed against the guard ropes by thousands of eager persons in the rear of the gathering, who were forcing their way forward, the safety of life and limb of those who had the more favored positions was endangered.

President Roosevelt had just been introduced by Harry St. George Tucker, the head of the Jamestown Exposition company, when the disorder and unrest in the crowd reached its height and the civil guards in front of the grandstand seemed about to be swept from their posts. With the agility of a schoolboy, the president jumped upon the table which had been placed in the speakers' balcony and, waving his arms, cried out to the men of Virginia to live up to their traditions of gallantry and cease the commotion which was threatening the lives of the women and children in the assemblage.

Soldiers Quiet the Crowd.

The crowd heeded the president's warning at once, but when he had settled down into his speech, and the words were fairly blown from his mouth by the southeasterly gale which was sweeping the great parade, the immense audience became uneasy again, and those on the outskirts began to press forward once more. The president was interrupted and mounted officers and men of the United States cavalry were called in to take charge. They rode up and down along the front of the crowd and gradually opened it up and relieved the pressure.

The military encamped about the exposition grounds began the day's ceremonies with the firing of the three-century salute. Soon afterward, from across the waters of Hampton Roads came the boom of ship cannon, signaling the beginning of the most formidable fleet of international battleships and cruisers the world has witnessed in many years.

Review of the Great Fleet.

On board the tidy cruiser yacht Mayflower, the president, with a few especially invited guests, was greeted first by a roar of 21 guns from each of the vessels, and English and American. Then, as he steamed along the lane of the visiting men of war, he was saluted individually and in turn by every battleship and cruiser at anchor in the roads. The massive pictures viewed from above by thousands and from the decks of excursion and pleasure craft by almost as many more, were at once inspiring and impressive.

When his yacht had anchored in the very midst of the naval fleet, the president received on board the flag and commanding officers of the foreign fleet and the flag officers of the home squadrons.

Booming cannon again greeted the president as he stepped upon the temporary structure which is eventually to be a magnificent water gate known as Discovery Landing. President Tucker, of the exposition, personally welcomed Mr. Roosevelt, saying simply:

"Mr. President, Old Virginia salutes you, sir."

The president returned the salutation and, with Mrs. Roosevelt, was driven to the grandstand on the side between the lines of soldiers from the Twenty-third United States infantry.

Presses the Golden Button.

The ceremonies of dedication were brief, the features being the addresses of President Tucker of the exposition and President Roosevelt. The latter, at the conclusion of his address, pressed the gold button, which formally marked the opening of the commemorative enterprise. Then followed an informal luncheon to the president and 40 other guests in the Auditorium of administration building. The repast ended, the president repaired again to the grandstand, from which he reviewed the parade of United States soldiers and sailors. A reception by the president in the Auditorium brought the day's events at the fair grounds to a close.

At night the warships were beautifully illuminated.

BIG FIRE IN MINNEAPOLIS

WISCONSIN CENTRAL FREIGHT DEPOT IS DESTROYED.

High Wind and Many Explosions Balk the Firemen's Efforts—Loss Will Be $400,000.

Minneapolis, Minn., April 26.—Fire destroyed the Wisconsin Central freight depot in this city Thursday, entailing a loss of $400,000. The flames broke out from an unknown origin and almost in an instant the entire building was a mass of flames.

A strong northwest wind made the firemen's task a hard one, and the firemen fought the flames from every point of vantage, but were time and again forced back by explosions of oil on the tracks and in storage.

At 4:10 a terrific explosion occurred and with a roar the walls on the west side fell in, tearing down a large platform upon which the firemen had been stationed. Soon afterwards the east wall followed, covering up the passenger tracks entering the Union depot.

The employes were working in the building at the time and were forced to take a hurried exit to save their lives. About 18 box cars containing freight of every description, valued at $100,000, were sidetracked under the shed; and these proved fuel to the flames. The train crew worked heroically to save them, but were unsuccessful for a time. Finally they succeeded in pulling a string of cars out. Among the freight was a carload of automobiles which had just arrived. These were destroyed.

SHORTAGE OF $92,000 FOUND.

General Manager of Woonsacket Concern Forced to Resign.

Woonsocket, R. I., April 26.—A shortage of about $92,000 in the accounts of the Woonsocket Electric Machine and Power company was revealed Thursday by the issuance of the stock holders of the company of a circular letter announcing that a heavy shortage had been discovered. The letter, signed by order of the directors, further stated that the resignation of Levi Cook, the general manager and general manager of the company, had been accepted.

John J. Heffernan, counsel for the directors of the company, said:

"I believe the amount of the shortage is about $92,000. Mr. Lincoln has resigned and has turned over to the company property which he claims is worth $40,000."

FREE LOVE BRINGS DISASTER.

Property of Socialist Colony Ordered Sold for Debts.

Bellingham, Wash., April 26.—"Equality," a socialistic Belling colony, started in 1897, and which for years was pointed to as a successful experiment in collective ownership and production, was ordered out of existence by a court order Wednesday. Judge Joyner, of Skagit county, directed that its property be sold to pay the colony's debts. The property consists of 600 acres of land, sawmill, printing plant and 20 dwellings.

The colony was established by a national organization known as the Brotherhood of the Cooperative Commonwealth, of which many prominent socialists were members. A portion of the colonists adopted the doctrine of free love and disaster followed.

PEACE TREATY IS SIGNED.

Conferees at Ampasala Agree on Terms of the Pact.

Washington, April 26.—Details of the treaty of peace and amity between Russia and Japan since which went into effect at Ampsipa on Tuesday last were received at the state department Thursday through a cable from from Philip Brown, charge of the American legation at Guntemala. The treaty is similar to that entered into a year ago and known as the Marblehead pact, and it includes a provision for a conference of peace to congress to be held in Nicaragua in the near future, and a special commission to treaty between Nicaragua and Salvador.

SLAIN BY FORMER SWEETHEART.

Oil City Man Killed by Woman Who Commits Suicide.

Oil City, Pa., April 25.—Thaddeus Stevens Ross, of this city, was shot three times and instantly killed here Wednesday night by Stella Stroup. The woman then shot herself through the heart.

The tragedy occurred in the office of Dr. George W. Magee while the physician was at lunch. Both victims were members of prominent families. Ross was to have been married Wednesday night at nine o'clock to Miss Drusilla Sampsell, of this city.

Ohio Merger Abandoned.

Sandusky, O., April 26.—That the wine interests in the Lake Erie district, valued at over a million dollars, will not be merged was the announcement made Thursday afternoon by James Flynn, who for more than a year has been bending his efforts in this direction. The reason assigned by Flynn is that the prices fixed by officials of the various individual concerns in every instance is prohibitive.

Discharged.

Dover, Del., April 26.—Frank H. Butler, charged with the murder of the Marvin child, was discharged from custody for the want of sufficient evidence.

HOW WOULD YOU LIKE TO BE THE NURSE GIRL?

NEITHER PLUTOCRACY NOR MOB RULE HERE

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT MAKES ADDRESS AT OPENING OF JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION.

Declares Best Way to Maintain Peace Is to Be Prepared for War—Great Problem Is to Exercise Just Control Over Vast Wealth.

Norfolk, Va., April 27.—"This great republic of ours shall never become the government of a plutocracy, and it shall never become the government of a mob," said President Roosevelt Friday afternoon in his address at the opening of the Jamestown exposition. Mr. Roosevelt paid a compliment to each of the nations taking part in his fair, and added: "To particular let me express a word of hearty welcome to the representative of the mighty island empire of Japan, that empire which, in learning from the west, has shown that it had so much, so very much; to teach the west in return."

Refers to Civil War.

The president touched a tender chord when he said of the great civil war: "High and prosperous though we are as a people, the proudest heritage that each of us has, no matter where he may dwell, north or south, east or west, is the immaterial heritage of feeling, the right to claim as his own, all the valor and all the steadfast devotion to duty shown by the men of both the great armies, of the soldiers whose leader was Grant and the soldiers whose leader was Lee."

The president's reference to his visit to the foreign warships and the American navy was turned in an impromptu manner upon the recent gathering in New York to discuss world politics, and he held up those men as righteousness as virtue and blessings that go hand in hand. He said that if the time ever comes when the world must choose between them "Shame to it if it chooses peace." The thought for this expression was suggested by the Bible, which the president said contained a good deal of sound reading that would not be out of place in a peace conference.

Excerpts from Address.

The most important utterances in the president's address are as follows:

"The world has moved so far that it is no longer necessary to believe that one nation can rise only by thrusting another down.

"I believe that there is a rising tide in human thought which tends for righteous international peace; a tide which believes us to guide through rational channels to sane conclusions; and all of us here present can well afford to take to heart St. Paul's counsel: 'If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.'

"We cannot afford to forget the maxim upon which washington insisted, that our aim in war is never war is to be prepared to meet it.

"This is an era of combination alike in the world of capital and in the world of labor. Each kind of combination can do good, and yet each, how ever powerful, must be opposed when it does ill. At the moment the greatest problem before us is how to exercise such control over the business use of vast wealth, individual, but especially corporate, as will insure its not being used against the interest of the public, while yet permitting such ample legitimate profits as will encourage individual initiative.

"We show ourselves the truest friends of property when we make it evident that we will not tolerate the abuses of property. We are steadily bent on preserving the institution of private property; we combat every tendency toward redneing the people to economic servitude; and we care not whether the tendency le due to a sinister agitation directed against all property, or whether it is due to the actions of those members of the predatory classes whose antisocial power is immeasurably increased because of the very fact that they possess wealth."

ON BURGLAR TATE'S TRACK

POLICE FOLLOW THE ESCAPED FELON TOWARD MILWAUKEE.

Said to Be with Notorious "Eddie" Fay—Capture of Both Men Expected Soon.

Chicago, April 27.—Edwin R. Tate, "gentlemen burglar," charged with dynamiting the school board safe at Peoria and destroying evidence against Newton C. Dougherty and other rich and influential citizens of that city, is on his way from Chicago to Milwaukee. Detectives from Capt. O'Brien's office Friday picked up the trail of the men, who walked away from the Peoria authorities under suspicious and sensational circumstances and his capture is believed to be a matter of only a few hours.

Tate is with "Eddie" Fay, according to police information. It is now believed by the police that Fay, who is another notorious safeblower and burglar, really executed the job of blowing the Peoria safe under an agreement with Dougherty and his accomplices which was negotiated through Tate.

Capt. O'Brien's men had shadowed the home of Fay in Englewood and discovered that Tate was there. She men were sent from the city hall, led by Detectives Tobin and Duffy, and plans were laid to surround the house and capture both men. The detectives were all heavily armed in anticipation of a desperate resistance.

Before the detectives reached the house, however, they received word that both men had left and boarded a train for Milwaukee.

The authorities in that city were at once notified, and all the intermediate towns were also warned to be on the lookout for the fugitives. Two detectives left at once for Milwaukee and Capt. O'Brien is expecting information of Tate within a few hours.

PURE FOOD LAWS DEFIED.

Preservative for Meats Is Found in Use in Kansas.

Topeka, Kan., April 26.—Dr. S. J. Crumbine, secretary of the state board of health, announced Thursday that he had discovered in use here a preservative for meats, the manufacturers of which, he asserts, are openly defying the state and federal pure food laws. The preservative is said to contain the usual chemical tests show that it contains charcoal and pure sulphur, which when formed into a sulphur dioxide gas that is absorbed by the meat and has the same effect as borax. The manufacturers in their circulars state that the preservative makes it possible for butchers to evade the law, containing but half the powder itself does not touch the meat.

Secretary Crumbine has notified all pure food inspectors in Kansas to warn butchers against the use of the preservative and he says he will submit the matter to Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the bureau of chemistry at Washington.

JUDGES OF CONTEST HAZED.

Tied to Trees by Displeased Freshmen of Shurtleff College.

Upper Alton, Ill., April 27.—Having decided in favor of the sophomores in an oratorical contest at Shurtleff college Saturday night, which decision was displeasing to the freshmen, Prof. M. Wayne of St. Louis, and Rev. Mr. Hall, general advertising agent for the Missouri Pacific system, two of the three judges, were seized by the freshmen, tied to trees on the campus and left helpless until morning. Attorney Harold Johnston, of St. Louis, the third judge, who rendered decision in favor of the freshmen, was not molested.

Prof. Magan and Mr. Dey struggled for hours to free themselves after being tied to the trees, but to no avail. Before dawn they were released and permitted to return to St. Louis, chilled and chagrined.

Mrs. Chytraus Is Dead.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 26.—Mrs. Alexander Chytraus of Chicago, whose husband arrived from that city Wednesday, died Wednesday night.

LIE IS PASSED IN HERMANN'S TRIAL

ANGRY COUNSEL ARE SHARPLY REBUKED BY JUSTICE STAFFORD.

Cass Given to the Jury—District Attorney Baker's Scathing Arraignment of the Former General Land Office Commissioner.

Washington, April 27.—The question whether Binger Hermann, former member of congress and former commissioner of the general land office, is guilty or not guilty of destroying public records was placed in the hands of the jury Friday afternoon, at the conclusion of the twelfth week of his trial.

The argument in the case, which was begun last week and progressed daily without interruption since that time, culminated in the lie being passed between counsel for the defense of United States District Attorney Baker's summing up for the government Friday. Justice Stafford administered immediately a severe reprimand, saying he should regard any further colloquy between counsel as contempt of court and would act accordingly. When Mr. Baker had concluded, the court called the jury up to go to luncheon, cautioning them against talking of the case among themselves, particularly, because of the "brain storm" which had been raging. He told the jury that "a calm statement of the case" would be submitted to them by the court on their return. This charge was completed at 2:27 o'clock.

"Lie" Says Lawyer Worthington.

The incident which aroused the ire of Attorney Worthington for the defense was the reference made by Mr. Baker to the testimony of Mrs. Hermann, wife of the defendant, some weeks back in the trial. Mr. Baker asked the jury if they had noticed Mr. Worthington's face when Mrs. Hermann was asked if she had discussed with anyone the testimony she was to give on the stand.

"I by no means to insinuate that in any way signalled to the witness during her testimony. If you do, it is absolutely a lie," interjected Mr. Worthington with much heat."

"Oh, no," responded Mr. Baker, "I simply mean that your face turned red—that you blushed."

"That is false," shouted Mr. Worthington, and as he did so the court admonistered his warning.

Mr. Baker concluded with a scathing denuneiation of the defendant, saying that after six years of distinguished accommodation of public land office, he had destroyed his 35 letter press books to conceal the traces of his dishonesty.

Mrs. Hermann in Tears.

During the argument and charge of the judge Mrs. Hermann and several women relatives eat beside the defendant in the courtroom, which was crowded with sensationalists. Mrs. Hermann wept silently during many of the severest passages of the prosecuting attorney, and when she left the courtroom her eyes were red with crying. The defendant also appeared during the ordeal, but plainly showing the strain he was enduring.

Upon receiving the charge the jury at once retired to its room on the upper floor of the court building. Justice Stafford, after waiting for more than an hour and receiving no sign of a conclusion being reached, left the court for his home, with instructions that he be notified should an agreement be reached.

FARMERS SHORT OF HELP.

Serious Condition is Reported from the Northwest.

St. Paul, Minn., April 27.—Reports coming to the Great Northern railway headquarters here indicate that the farmers of the northwest are suffering from lack of help during seeding time. A telegram from Devil's Lake, N. D., to W. Hill, president of the Great Northern, says: "Seeding just commenced and 25 per cent of the farmers in this locality have not enough help. Condition serious. Can you help?" Another telegram to E. Campbell, fourth vice president, says: "Two hundred men needed, wages $35 to $40 per month."

FAMOUS SURGEON DROWNED.

Dr. Von Mosetig-Moorhof Falls into the Danube.

Vienna, April 27.—Prof. Albert Ritter von Mosetig-Moorhof, the famous surgeon and introducer of iodoform, while walking on the banks of the Danube Friday fell in the water and was drowned. It was at first thought that he had committed suicide, but inquiries tend to prove that his death was accidental. The professor was subject to sudden fainting fits, due to calcification of the arteries. His body has not been recovered.

For Monument to Bill Nye.

Los Angeles, April 27.—Sentiment among the humorists of the country appears favorable to building a monument to the late Edgar Wilson Nye (Bill Nye). A letter to the general membership of the American Press Humorists, issued Friday by the secretary-treasurer, Frank Thompson Searaight, of this city. Plans also are announced for the fifth annual convention of the press humorists in Los Angeles, September 15 to 22 next.

IN WESTERN CANADA.

Delicate in the...Old Home; Better Health in the New.

Churchbridge, Sask.,
December 1st, 1906.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir,

I came to this country from the State of Wisconsin three years ago, and must say that I am greatly pleased with the outlook in this western country. For my own part I am entirely satisfied with the progress I have made since coming here. I have raised excellent crops of grain of all varieties. Last season my wheat averaged 23 bushels af wheet to the acre, oats 60 and barley 40.

We had a splendid garden this year, ripening successfully tomatoes, muskmelons, water melons, sweet corn and kindred sorts.

The country is well adapted to wheat growing and mixed farming, and to my mind it is the best country under the sun for a man with a family and small means, as it is possible for a man to commence farming operations with much less capital than is required in the older settled districts.

The climate is all that could be desired, being very healthy and invigorating.

My wife came out about six months ago, and although inclined to be delicate in the old home, she has enjoyed the best of health since coming here.

In short, I am more than satisfied with the land of my adoption, and I am also satisfied with the laws of the country.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) JOHN LANGDON.

Coach Horses Join Fox Chase.

They bed some spirited horses in the old coaching days. Just 100 years ago a remarkable proof of this was given, and fortunately recorded for the astonishment of later motoring generations, in the case of the Liverpool mail coach. Horses were changed at Monk's Heath, between Knutsford and Lymm, says the London Tribune.

On this particular occasion a pack of fox hounds was met in full cry just as the horses from Congleton were freed from the coach, and they started off with the harness on their backs and followed the run to the finish. One of them, a blood mare, actually took the whippers-in and took every jump after him through the two hours. And in the evening they took the mare coach to Congleton as merrily as if they had been in the stable all the time.

Has Record of Bad Luck.

J. M. Scanlan, a well known writer on San Francisco topics, says the most unlucky man on the Pacific coast. He has established a record for bad luck in California that have failed. He says that every check he receives from the postoffice is returned. The other is usually the case. But one lucky event of his life occurred while he was a private in the confederate army. While kneeling behind a breastwork a cannon ball struck the top of the embankment, covering him with dirt and gravel. He had been an upright young man f would have been killed," he reported, saluting his superior officer. Friday he regards with much suspicion.

TRY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS FOR YOUR RHEUMATISM.

They Have Cured the Disease in Almost Every Form and Even in Advanced Stages.

Rheumatism is a painful inflammation of the muscles or of the coverings of the joints and is sometimes accompanied by swelling. The pain is sharp and shooting and does not confine itself to any one part of the body, but after settling in one joint or muscle for a time leaves it and passes on to another. The most dangerous tendency of the disease is to attack the heart. External applications may give relief from pain for a time but the disease cannot be cured until the blood is purified. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine for this purpose. Their action is directly on the blood, making it rich, red and healthy. They drive out the impurities that cause the disease.

Mrs. Ellen A. Russell, of South Goff St., Auburn, Me., says: "I had been sick for fifteen years from impure blood, brought on by overwork. My heart was weak and my hands colorless. I was troubled with indigestion and vomiting spells, which came on every few months. I had no appetite and need to have awful spells, falling down when at my work. I frequently felt numb all over. My head ached constantly and I was dizzy.

"About two years ago I began to feel rheumatism in my joints, which became so lame I could hardly walk. My joints would swell and become very tender.

"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were recommended to me by a friend. After I had failed to get well from the doctor's treatment, I began using them. In a few days the rheumatism was at its worst. I had taken only a few boxes, when the swelling stopped and not long afterward I felt the pain in my joints becoming less and less, until there was none at all. The stiffness was gone and so was the pain. I have never had any return of the rheumatism.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured all diseases as nervous and general debility, indigestion, nervous headache, neuralgia and even partial paralysis and locomotor ataxia. As a tonic for the blood and nerves they are unequalled.

A pamphlet on "Diseases of the Blood" and a copy of our diet book will be sent free on request to anyone interested.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

A Fatal Bridge.

St. Paul—With tho head crushed and both arms and both legs shattered to splinters, the body of an unidentified man was found lying on the railroad tracks beneath tho south end of the "high" bridge at St. Paul. From the clothes it is apparent that the dead man was a laborer, and all circumstances surrounding his death indicate suicide.

The high bridge which stretches across the river above the upper flats, seems to possess a peculiar fascination for those unfortunates who grow to think that life is not worth while. During the bridge's existence thirteen people have jumped or fallen from its giddy heights. Three men, two who fell from the railing of the bridge, and one who sought to end his life, lived to tell the story, but the other ten met death either in the rushing waters of the river or on the hard ground along the banks.

At its highest point the high bridge spans the river at a height of 180 feet, and a fall from any section of it is almost certain death. For a person seeking to end his life it is excellently adapted, for it is an easy matter to climb the five-foot iron railing and fall into the river. Twelve victims of the bridge have been men and the thirteenth a woman, who was the second of the list of suicides.

Loses 31 of His Herd.

Mankato—W. W. P. McConnell, former state dairy and food inspector, and during the past winter having charge of a farmers' institute corps, has had his fine dairy herd of Jersey cows on his famous Minneopa stock farm tested for tuberculosis. Tho test was made by Dr. Whitcomb, an expert of the state sanitary and live stock board of which Mr. McConnell is a member, and of approximately 100 animals, mostly pure bred, 31 were condemned and have been shipped to the South St. Paul stock yards, where they will be slaughtered. The test was made as the result of the recent slaughter of five or six head from the herd in the local packing house and the condemning of all but one by Dr. Harry Dell, the government inspector. The loss is a heavy one to Mr. McConnell, but he was determined to purify his herd. For five or six years he has been supplying the milk to a creamery, having discontinued his milk route, but other milk men occasionally bought supplies of him when they were short. When the milk route was in operation it supplied some of the best trade in the city.

St. Paul Man Run Over.

Mankato—William Mattoke, a brakeman on an extra freight train on the Omaha road, while assisting in making a flying switch in the yards in this city, was struck by a stationary car and thrown under a moving car that he had been clinging to. Conductor Peterson, noticing the accident, ran to the prostrate and unconscious man and pulled him part way from under the track before the wheels ran over him. Mattoke's right leg was crushed and had to be amputated at the knee, the bones of his left foot were broken, and he was badly cut and bruised. He is now in a local hospital with chances favorable to recovery. He resides with his parents in St. Paul and is a single man about thirty years old. But for Peterson's prompt assistance he would have been instantly killed.

Starves Cows to Death.

LeSueur—Charles A. Roche, a prosperous farmer of Ottawa, in this county, was brought here before Municipal Judge Felix A. Borer, on complaint made by State Agent John A. Moak of the state humane society, charging Roche with cruelty to animals in that he was neglecting to feed his cows properly and was starving them to death. Roche pleaded guilty to the charge, and, it appearing that two cows were already dead and the others mere skeletons, Judge Borer imposed a fine of $30 and costs, which Roche immediately paid. Max Distel of the local board, lodged the complaint with Agent Moak.

Record for Institutes.

Mankato—W. W. P. McConnell of this city, who has completed his winter and spring work as the head of a corps of state institute conductors, assisted in holding 69 institutes in a territory extending diagonally across the state from the Red River valley to Southeastern Minnesota. The total attendance at the institute was about 40,000, or an average of 572 at each institute, which is larger than ever before.

NEWS NOTES.

Redwood Falls—United States Senator Moses E. Clapp of St. Paul will deliver an address here on Memorial day.

Royalton—The eight year old daughter of Victor Sawdy is dead as the result of burns. The child and a companion had started a fire in an old tin pail. The girl's mother bade her extinguish the fire, but in doing so the child's clothing took fire.

Mankato—The village council of Vernon Center has awarded a contract to install a water works system in the village, including engine, pump, boiler and tank, for about $3,000.

Mankato—Ralph O. Olson of Alden has purchased the Citizens' bank at Kaister and will make it a state bank. Mr. Olson already is engaged in the banking business at Alden.

Royal Arcanum.

St. Paul—Officers of the Royal Arcanum for the Grand Council of Minnesota were elected at the seventeenth annual session. Delegates to the number of sixty were present from Royal Arcanum lodges throughout the state.

The officers for the ensuing year are: Grand regent, Charles T. Boener, of Minneapolis; grand vice-regent, George H. Grant, of Stillwater; grand orator, Frank L. Gregory, of St. Paul; past grand regent, William H. Barbor, of Minneapolis; grand secretary, George T. Hughes, of Duluth; grand treasurer, Robert D. Cone, of Minneapolis; grand chaplain, M. J. Mullin, of Duluth; grand guide, Julius E. Fitch, of Albert Lea; grand warden, Daniel W. Drake, of Dover; grand sentry, J. C. McSteen, of St. James; representatives to the supreme council, Robert A. Walker of St. Paul and Frank L. Palmer of Minneapolis; alternates, James Craig of Merriam Park and Edward J. Davenport of Minneapolis.

B. Frank Pay was re-elected a grand trustee for a term of three years. J. W. Nattrass of St. Paul was elected to fill the one-year term of C. T. Boener, made grand regent, and B. F. Smith of Minneapolis will fill out the two-year term of M. J. Mullin, elected grand chaplain.

Suicide by Drowning.

Minneapolis—Despondency caused J. F. Gartner to make all arrangements for his own funeral and then take his own life in Lake of the Isles, where his dead body was found by workmen.

The body was found shortly before noon by men engaged on boulevard work, between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth street, and was at once removed to the county morgue, where it was positively identified as that of Gartner.

Gartner, who was about 70 years old, went to Hume & Davis, undertakers, a week ago and arranged for his funeral. He told where he was to be buried and selected his casket, saying that he would probably die in a few days. Accustomed to queer requests, the undertakers paid little attention to the matter.

Gartner lived with his daughter, Mrs. Charles Lampe, at 4 Grove place, and was superintending the erection of a dwelling for his son-in-law, W. C. Leber, at Lake of the Isles. He did not appear at the house as usual a week ago and the police were asked to search for him.

Injury by Saw Fatal.

Hallock—Arvid Dahlin is dead from blood poisoning, which was caused by an injury which he received while he was running a slab saw at Williams. He attempted to remove some of the sawdust lying inside the saw, his hand coming in contact with the blade and was nearly severed from his arm. He was taken to Beaudette for treatment and later to a hospital at Winnipeg, where he died. His body has been brought here for burial.

NEWS NOTES.

St. Paul—Central conferences of English Evangelical Lutheran churches meets here.

St. Paul—Railway officials say the ruling of the interstate commerce commission on the 100-trip tickets will not be tested in the courts.

Winona—None of the men hurt in the quarry accident at La Moille were fatally injured. The report that three of the bosses were hurt was incorrect.

Mankato—The Blacksmiths' Horseshoers' and Wagonmakers' Association held another meeting in this city, attended by over 100 representatives of those industries, and took in 44 new members.

Little Falls—A big judicial ditch, designed to straighten the course of the Leaf river in Wadena and Otter Tail counties, has been ordered constructed, and dredges will be put at work at once.

Tower—Arthur Johnson, a young man employed as a brakeman on the Tower Lumber company's logging road, was instantly killed near Lake Vermillion. He was coupling cars when one of the logs on a car became loosened and fell upon him, crushing him to death.

Elmore—The large Mud Creek ditch, which is to start south of this town, soon will be commenced. The contract for the excavation of the ditch proper has been let at $66,428.28, and work will begin as soon as the contractor can get the machinery to the place. The job will be completed by Dec. 1, 1908.

Mankato—In spite of the ruling of the county attorney, sustained by the attorney general, that license cannot be legally granted at Dunnell, Martin county, two applications for saloon licenses have been made and will be heard by the council, which is said to be favorable to license. The vote on license was a tie at the election.

Faribault—While the cadets of Shattuck school were at drill during the evening a sneak thief entered one of the rooms in Phelps' cottage and stole articles to the amount of $100 or more. A valuable diamond set scarf pin, some money and other articles are missing. No arrest has yet been made.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, April 20—A reflection of the recent meeting of the North Star Press association in St. Paul was seen today in the unusual action of the senate in suspending the rules three days before the close of the session to advance a new bill over all pending legislation. The bill was introduced at the request of the governor and by Senator Sullivan of Stillwater, and related to the publication of the annual statement of insurance companies in newspapers for greater publicity. The present law calls for such statements to be published in each of the three most populous counties. The new bill says one publication must be in one of the three most populous counties while the other two required may be in legal papers in any county in the state. The bill passed with but 5 votes against it in spite of vigorous protests from Senator George R. Laybourn of Duluth. It is understood the influence of the Home Print Association, the organization of weekly papers, has endorsed the bill as well as the North Star association.

One of the features of today's session was the introduction of the session road and bridge bill, by Senator Frank Clague of Lamberton. This bill merely "cuts the pie" of $400,000 already appropriated in a general bill for the purpose by Senator Canfield.

The Knutson house committee which for a long time past has been investigating ore lands with a special reference to the J. J. Hill deal, has reported to the house. The report reviews the testimony of James J. Hill and Louis W. Hill and shows that the Lake Superior company, which held the extensive ore lands, was in fact a subsidiary company to the Great Northern and was organized because the Great Northern could not, under its charter, hold and work the mineral lands.

The report is signed by Knute Knutson, Burdette Thayer, W. H. Putman, Adam J. Wood and Clarence B. Miller.

St. Paul, April 22—The big legislative events today were the introduction in the house of the omnibus appropriation bill, and the tax levy bill.

The appropriation bill came from the house committee on appropriations in the morning, and its consideration by the house was not completed until shortly before midnight. The bill as introduced, carried an aggregate appropriation of $11,500,000. The total amounts added to the bill during the day were $74,800, while items aggregating $37,900 were cut out, thus leaving a net increase of $36,900. The only large item cut out was an appropriation of $25,000 for a light and power plant for the state fair at Hamline. The state fair appropriations were made a special feature of attack. Every item was contested, the onslaught being led by A. J. Rockne.

The tax levy bill was advanced to the calendar and will be considered tomorrow. It fixes the tax rate at 1.5 mills, which will raise $1,500,000 a year. It is believed by many that the bill will have to be amended to make the rate at least 1.7 mills. The state levy last year was only 1.2 mills.

The senate today passed the road and bridge appropriation on motion of Senator Frank Clague and with practically no opposition. The bill provides $200,000 a year for the next two years, the division of the funds being according to a bill passed yesterday and previously explained.

Two important bills are still pending in conference committees. One is the anti-pass bill, the other the measure creating a state tax commission. It is probable the committees will report on compromises tomorrow.

St. Paul April 23—The legislature remained in session morning, afternoon and night, this being the last date for the passage of bills, and final adjournment will take place tomorrow before noon. The house adjourned at ten minutes to twelve after breaking loose from all restraint. Bills were passed on roll calls, but it is safe to say few knew what they were voting about. Paper wads, small books, bundles of printed bills, sailed through the air and were thrown from one end of the great chamber to the other. The floor was literally covered with spent ammunition. The senate was more sedate and attended strictly to business, though good humor prevailed. The upper body remained in session until considerably after midnight, pushing the clock back for convenience sake and to prove the old saying of "what's the constitution between friends."

Most important action of the day was the passage of the omnibus appropriation bill. The senate spent most of the day considering the measure as it came from the house, and ended by adding $94,000 to various items. During the evening the house ratified the senate amendments without further change. This leaves the total appropriation carried by the bill, $11,630,000. It was thought wise because of the size of the aggregate appropriation, to increase the tax levy, and accordingly the tax levy bill was changed so as to make the rate 1.7 mills.

A very important measure enacted today by both houses, was the conference committee tax bill. It provides for three commissioners at $4,500 each, and permits the state board of equalization to exist in an advisory capacity until 1909. It is said former senator Samuel Lord of Kasson will be one of the commissioners.

Another measure worthy of special mention which was enacted today on report of a conference committee, was the anti-pass bill. In its revamped form, it prohibits not only passes, but franks and special privileges of all sorts from public service corporations to favored ones.

The house today passed the drainage bills which had been amended by the senate. These bills mean much for northern Minnesota. One is relative to a judicial ditch system, one for a county system, one for a state system, and another relative to assessments of costs, private land abutting to be charged for private benefits, state land to have the assessment added to the selling price of the land. An important bill for the city interests which had its final passage in the house was the so-called Mueller law, a copy of the Mueller law of Illinois to permit municipalities to absorb properties of public service corporations by issuance of bonds.

By a bare majority the Sundberg senate bill for state hail insurance passed the house in the shuffle tonight. It secured the necessary 60 votes, with 42 registered against it. It provides for a constitutional amendment which must be submitted to a vote of the people, to permit of an optional acreage tax to be charged against farmers who want state hail insurance.

The sleeping car tax bill came out from conference committee today and was passed by both houses. It provides for a 6 per cent gross earnings tax, or an advalorem tax, at option of the company taxed.

Gov. J. A. Johnson today sent the legislature his second veto. It was against the Wright bill for a wide-open system of pensions for those who fought in the Indian uprisings of 1862.

An important senate bill which passed the house in tonight's hurry, was the one reorganizing the state militia on terms of the federal law, and increasing the term of the adjutant general, the head of the state militia, from 2 to 6 years.

St. Paul, April 23—The legislative session came to a conclusion today. There were pleasantries in both houses, and presentations of gifts to presiding officers and others. In the senate, Senator Albert Schaller voiced the sentiments of his fellow members in eulogizing the presiding officer, Lieut. Gov. A. O. Eberhart of Mankato, and ending by presenting him with a magnificent chest of silver which occupied a place in the aisle in front of the senate. Senator Schaller said he had attended many sessions as a member, but never had one proved as pleasant as this one. He also spoke in the highest terms of the presiding officers fairness as well as ability. Lieut. Gov. Eberhart responded feelingly, and in his remarks took occasion to thank the newspaper men of the senate and the employes for efficient work.

Senator J. F. Calhoun made a brief speech in which he presented Samuels A. Langum of Preston with a cream and sugar silver service. By a rising vote on motion of Senator Schaller, the senate gave expression to a desire that Mr. Langum continue as secretary of the body two years hence.

Following adjournment the senate employes met in a committee room and presented Lieut. Gov. Eberhart with a handsome traveling bag, Sergeant of Arms Ego of Minneapolis with a gold watch, and Mr. Langum with a riding saddle.

In the house, W. A. Nolan of Grand Meadow acted as gift spokesman, and gave Speaker Lawrence A. Johnson a gold watch. He also presented in the name of the house, a gold ring to each of the desk force, A. E. Johnson, John T. Jones, Archie Vernon, and Oscar Arneson. Mr. Jones in the name of the desk force, handed Speaker Johnson with a Knights Templar charm.

One important action before adjournment, was the passage of a resolution by John G. Lennon of Minneapolis, calling on the the authorities of the state to increase the assessed valuation of the iron mine properties in the state to $225,000,000. The resolution went through by an overwhelming majority.

St. Paul—The Norwegians are planning to hold a big celebration in the Auditorium on May 17, the Norwegian Fourth of July. Addresses will be given by William Jennings Bryan, Senator Knute Nelson and Governor Johnson. In addition to the addresses there will be music.

Discovery Endangered World.

In the time of Louis XV. of France, a chemist named Depre gave an exhibit on a canal at Versailles of a kind of fire so rapid and devouring that it could not be quenched, water only giving it fresh activity. Louis forbade that the invention should be made public, and the inventor died soon after, carrying the secret with him to the grave.

Always Exaggerate.

Little One's Prayer.

Mary always gets a little piece of candy every day to keep her from being naughty. One day she was naughty, and she did not get her candy. That night when she was going to bed she said her prayers as follows: "Our Father, who art in heaven, please give me my daily candy."

Don't call a man a fool because he disagrees with you. A wiser one than either of you may insist upon putting you both in the same class.—John A. Howland.

THE ORIGINAL "MR. DOOLEY."

Character Made Immortal by Finley Peter Dunne.

The original Mr. Dooley, now gone his way, was a character well known to George Ade, John McCutcheon, Vance Thompson and many other Chicago newspaper men long before Peter Dunne made him a national celebrity. It was Vance Thompson, by the way, who swooped down on the old gentleman in a sleepy hour, borrowed two dollars from him before he rightly realized it, and vanished again into the outer darkness while he was still rubbing his eyes. This little episode he subsequently referred to as "th' hurricane touch."

Similar anecdotes of the old man's wit are cherished as particular possessions. George Ade has one that be entitles "human gratitude." Late one night he was surprised to find the proprietor asleep behind his own bar. On being roused, that worthy showed a marked disinclination for business and a strong desire to be let alone. So Ade pulled down the blinds, stacked up the cuspidors, locked the cash register and called a cab. With some difficulty he elicited an address and then for what seemed hours they jounced over out-of-the-way streets until at last the cabbie drew up before a ramshackle little box of a frame house with a stairway running up the outside. All this time the passenger had slept sweetly. Out of the cab and up the rickety stairs, puffing and blowing, Ade bundled his charge. On the top step he lost his footing and the two of them rolled higgledy-piggledy to the street. The old gentleman sat up regarded Ade with the utmost indignation, and spoke the first words of the evening:

"Jorge," said he, "yo thripped me."

Sentry Needlessly Worried

Charles Allen, a negro trusty at No. 3 police station in Armourdale, was a member of the Twenty-third Kansas regiment which went to Cuba during the Spanish-American war, says the Kansas City Star. While he scrubbed the floor of the police station recently he told how Lem Thompson, another negro in the same regiment, killed a supposed Spaniard.

It happened while the regiment was doing garrison duty at San Louis de Cube. Thompson was on guard one night. While he walked past a bamboo brake he heard something moving about in the tall grass. It was in the enemy's country and Lem supposed that he was about to encounter a Spaniard.

"Halt!" cried the guard as he raised his gun.

On came the Spaniard, paying no attention to the command.

"Boom!" Thompson fired, threw down his gun and started toward the garrison. When the soldiers heard the noise and rushed out they met Thompson running toward them.

"I killed a Spaniard down there in the grass," he said.

When the soldiers approached the bamboo they heard a rustling sound in the grass.

"He's still kicking," one of them said.

They went closer and discovered Thompson's Spaniard. It was a small burro with large ears and a shaggy hide. The little animal had a bullet hole in its head.

Volcanic Dust Showers.

A strange occurrence is reported from Lower Silesia, where now the rigors of hard winter prevail, writes a Berlin correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette.

During a storm in the Liegnitz district there has fallen a great quantity of yellowish-brown volcanic dust, depositing itself in a layer so thick on the frozen country roads and sheets of water that skating and sleighing, which had been in full swing for days, have both been stopped.

As the season of the year is most unusual for occurrences of this kind, and there is neither any record of volcanic eruptions in Europe or of the dustfall taking place anywhere else, the visitation is causing a good deal of perplexity among German scientists.

Queen Wilhelmina of Holland is one of the busiest monarchs in Europe, and is never happier than when attending to affairs of state. Even as a child she was fond of asserting her authority. One day she sent for a certain minister and announced that she had quarreled with and dismissed her governess. The minister gravely asked: "When does your majesty wish her to be beheaded? You know it is the custom in Holland to behead all those who are officially disgraced. It will be necessary for your majesty to be present at the execution, and—" Here the child queen abruptly left the apartment and the governess was reinstated at once.

Origin of the "Dark Horse."

The term "dark horse" is such a familiar one, even to persons who do not frequent horse races, that few stop to wonder at its origin, and fewer still know anything about the circumstances to which it owes its creation. Its origin is due to Lord Beaconsfield, who used the phrase in "The Young Duke." In this novel he speaks of a dark horse which had never been thought of and which few had so much as observed. The dark horse, however, rushed past the grand stand to victory. This dark horse was actually one of dark color, but to-day the color is no longer taken into account. A dark horse may be anything, so long as he swoops from the ranks of the unnoticed to the glory of the winning post.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The new county division bill till lays in the pigion hole at St Paul, and our Nelson county friends in Polk county may as well ang up their pet fiddle.

We always like to note prosperity of Duluth, and they will soon be the mighty city for the entire North West, and the twin cities will be placed on the side rack.

Some of our Highlanding friends would done better to taken the advice of Joe Duchamp, about ho "foul bird", but we will try nd clean up the nest, that John nd Joe tried to dirty.

We received a copy of the "Industrial edition" of the Duluth Evening Herald last week and certainly shows that Duluth is a live city and have a live newspaper to let people know it.

The people of Red Lake Falls are offered $900 reward for the election of the man that stole he county seat remove petition, t appears that Red Lake Falls ated to lose that petition Guess ey will go down and try to Hunt" it up for them $500.

The road and bridge fund of $10,000 known as the "pork barel" as passed in the form of a ill reported from the Road and Bridges committee gives Red Lake county $2150, and now it is to be nvided the older parts of the county will not try to "hog" all he pork and leave the new part he empty barrel

John To The Rescue.

That we hit the nail squarely on the head when we accused John Eastman of drawing the set of resolutions to stir up a muss, between the people on this way and Thief River Falls, was proven by his answer last week, of "The Trouble with Hunt." Now the main trouble with, "Resolution John," was that there was nothing in it for him, if things had continued to run as smoothly as they were when he sprung his dirty deal. What he wanted was to stir up a good big row, then throw himself into the "breach," (at so much per throw), as the saviour of Thief River Falls. But the people down there are beginning to get "next", to you John, and them slick deals don't go as good as they used to.

He says we did not support the Thief River Falls candidates for office last Fall. Well they took the advice of John Eastman and never asked us for any support, until about a week before election, and the other fellows did ask us for our support, and got it. That it was not a county seat removel scrap was proven after election to the satisfaction of all fair minded people.

We have not, up to the present time taken any part in the county seat removel scrap, but we shall take the time to look the matter up and get into it, as we can see that we are not to be left in peace on the homestead "near the land" so may just as well jump into the troubled waters first as last. We shall look the matter up from the stand point, of the best interest of the farmers and tax payers of the eastern part of the county, then take our stand, and stay by it.

An Eye For An Eye.

On next Wednesday the new petition for the removal of the county seat will be started out among the defenseless people of Red Lake county and the only way the average voter can dodge it is to get out of the county for the next sixty days. It is a question if the necessary number of signatures can be obtained at this time as the people are pretty will tired of the way the last one was handled. About the only thing the average man can see in signing is that it will furnish a bunch of attorneys with a good paying job for a few years to come, and then, if it turns out like it did before the people will be called upon to pay their bills. —Pilgrimer Pioneer.

While the above is quite a one sided view to take of the situation, yet editor Latta may be justified in taking it, in view of the fact that Thief River Falls papers have gone out of their way to try to injure him. The scripture to the effect, that "if a man smite you on one cheek, turn the other also" is not practiced now, days so much as the old law, of "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth."

Tried To Stop The Boat.

It is reported that a crazy man tried to stop the Dan Patch, up its way up the river on last Monday. He seemed to be under the delusion that he had been appointed captain of the Dan Patch and was to take possession of it wherever he found it. Captian Hung reasoned with him, and finly got him to go ashore and proceeded on his way up the river. The last he saw of him he was standing on the bank of the river a short distance this side of "short" president O'Brien frantically waving a paper which he called his commission.

How Some Mates Marry.

Statistics compiled by authorities on the condition of the deaf and dumb in this country present one significant fact in regard to the matrimonial affairs of that body of citizens. It is reserved for them alone of the many deprived of the power of speech have been sough in marriage by men whose free senses were unimpaired and a few women whose tongues were in good working order have consented to the theories in men who could not hear what was being said. Cynics find in these revelations matter for many caustic remarks pertaining to the conventional and listening powers of the sexes. Whether or not these sarcastic observations contain a modicum of the comparative willingness and unwillingness of men and women to marry unless a question, but the fact remains Curious Almshouses.

The most curious almshouse in England is St. Mary's hospice, at Chichester. There eight old ladies live actually in the church, which is a fine old building dating from 1300. It was originally a monastery, but when Queen Elizabeth came to visit there she turned it into an almshouse to endure as long as almshouses exist. The old ladies have two neat little rooms each down the sides of the main church, with windows looking out on the garden. They have each a coal supply, a kitchen range, water and gas. At one end of the church is the chapel, where daily services are held. The choir stalls are beautifully carved old oak, the original seats that the monks used. The church stands in a quiet little square.

Just Help Himself.

He—If I tried to kiss you would you call for help? She—Would you need it? —Smart Set.

Naturally.

Gunner—Yes, he is a champion golf player, and so is the girl he is going to marry. Not only that, the minister who will perform the ceremony is very fond of the game.

Giver—Ah, I suppose he will be pleased to link them together.—Chicago News.

Bound to Crop Out.

"Yes, I believe I did say you were always lying about yourself."

"I'll have you to understand, sir, that I am not used to this kind of talk. I'm a gentleman, sir."

"There you go. Can't keep from it, can you?"—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Time to Get Busy.

Her Husband — I thought you were going to visit your mother?

His Wife—And so I am.

Her Husband—Well, you had better begin to pack your trunk at once. The train leaves in forty-eight hours.—Detroit Tribune.

Physical Culture.

A rational system of physical culture should insure to every man and woman who adopts it a perfectly erect, poised figure, a straight spine, a broad, deep and capacious chest, uplifted and flexible, and harmonious development of all the muscles. He or she should be easy and graceful in every movement, possessed of marked muscular power and endurance, splendid health and a voice of notable equality and sweetness.

So much would the rational system of physical development do for those who followed it, and any method which will not accomplish all of these things, is far its least promising students, is in so much incomplete and false. The object of physical culture methods is to endow the body a mare perfect instrument, mare strong, mare enduring, mare obedient, to the commands of the will.—Outing Magazine.

A Story of Sir Robert Ball.

Sir Robert Ball, the noted British astronomer, on one occasion went to a remote town in Ireland to lecture on his favorite topic. Arriving at the station, he looked for the expected conveyance, but found none. After all the other passengers had disappeared a man stepped up and said, "Maybe you're Sir Robert Ball?" On receiving an affirmative reply the man hastily apologized, saying, "Sure, your honor, I'm sorry I kept you waiting, but I was towld to look for an intellectual giant man." Sir Robert thought that under the circumstances it would be better not to inquire what was the man's idea of intellectuality.

Nemesis is lame, but she is of astonishing stature, and sometimes, while her tread is not yet unsatisfied, she stretches out her huge left arm and grasps her victim. The slightest hand is inviable, but the victim letters under the dire clutch.—George Meredith.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wa's her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon

Yes we had a good long cold winter all right. We expected it to be cold in December and January, but though it would warm up in February but it got a little colder that month. Then we lived in hopes that March would begin to be warmer, but it kept up the record. Then we thought April will surly be a spring month, but our wood piles still continued under the snow. Then we say wait until May for the flowers to bloom, but on the first day of the month we were again disappointed, and a first class blizzard came on May 1st and the snow is still with us, but we hope it will let up in June, but if it don't it might get warm weather in July.

Red Lake Falls have teams and men out opposing the signing of the petition for the removal of the county seat, and of course we can't blame them, as they would like to keep the county seat as well as Thief River Falls would like to move it.

While the present weather is discouraging, we are as well off as they are in Iowa, and other localities. There was four inches of snow at Dubuque Iowa on April 30th and their fruit crop wasentirely ruined. So if we go south we strike snow and if we go north we strike a little colder climate than this, so we may as well stay, and take our medicine here and save the expense of moving.

The board of directors of the Clearwater Creamery will meet at the creamery on Thursday May 21st at 11 o' clock A. M. all are requested to be present.

Give The Lawyers A Job,

Thief River Falls are out with a petition for a first class law suit, as the lawyers got out of a job when the old petition was stolen. Please understand things as they are; you are not signing a petition for County seat removel; but a petition for a law suit, and when they have been it a couple of years, the darned thing will come up missing again sure. If you have not got trouble enough of your own sign a petition to make more, as the lawers are in need of a job, and it won't take more than a calf, or a pig, or a few bushels of wheat, or a few pounds of cream, to pay your extra taxes, and your feelings don't need the money. Then just think of what a fine time lawers will have for two years dressed up in their plug hats and white vests arguing the big question, before the supreme court, while you are at home being "hunted" around the barnyard by a calf that you are learning to drink by the fingers. Then after the lawers have made every dollar they can out of the deal, you can have the satisfaction of reading in the Thief River Falls papers, that some son of a gun in Red Lake Falls had stole the petition, and in the Red Lake Falls papers, that some one from Thief River Falls stole it. Then the lawyers on both sides will put on a wise look and say "thats to bad for we just had them skinned to a stand still." Then you can skin the calf you learned to drink when they started the lawsuit to help pay the expenses. Oh yes sign and give the lawyers a job. They need it. But don't think you are signing a petition for county seat removal but to help the lawers out and you pay the expenses.

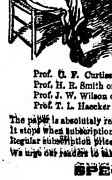
The Color of Flames.

You have often noticed the many tinted bars and bands that rise in the shape of "forked tongues of flames" from wood burning in the grate. It is ten to one, however, that you never have thought to form an idea of the variegated hues presented by flames. To bring the matter quickly to the point, we will say that the many colors are the result of combustion among the different elements of the wood. The light blue is from the hydrogen and the white from the carbon; the violet is from the manganese, the red from the magnesia and the yellow from the soda, which are constituent parts of the wood.

Cruel.

Miss Fortysummers—I had a proposal last night and refused it. Miss Crusher—You are always thinking of the welfare of others, aren't you, dear?



The tomorrow of which we dream never comes, but the real tomorrow upon arrival is merely a commonplace today.—New York Tribune.

The Ghost in the Secret Chamber

By E. Phillips Oppenheim

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Calcutta, Nov. 12.—I have had an adventure today. I was riding back here from Tom Sadler's place, where a few of us have been stopping since last Thursday, when I came upon a young lady in distress. She had been trying to ford a swollen stream, and her mare, a narrow-chested brute, had pretty nearly come to grief. It was a close thing, and no mistake. They'd have been down the stream anyhow in another minute, and I doubt if the great brute wouldn't have dragged her under even if she hadn't been able to swim. Of course I managed to pull her out, and found her not much the worse for her ducking. I took her home, as she really wasn't fit to go along, but I'm thankful to say that I escaped the parental blessing. The old gentleman—he's a tea-planter—was out.

November 20.—I can't get that girl's face out of my mind. I don't know that I ever saw a more lovely one. Strange thing for me to do, but I've actually dreamt of her three nights following. What an absurdity!

I am going up country to seek her at the Durbar.

December 20.—Just returned. I found the house shut up, and learned that the late proprietor and his daughter had gone to Europe.

December 30.—The mail has brought me strange news. My uncle and cousin have died suddenly, and I am Sir Reginald Shagshaft of Shagshaft castle, Northumberland. Good-by to India, and the army! I sail for England in a week.

February 20.—I am at Shagshaft castle, and a grand old place it is, but terribly desolate. It is built on the summit of a cliff. The screech of the sea gulls alone is enough to give one the horrors, and in all this great place there are only three servants, for not a girl in all the country round will come here because of the ghost, which is said to inhabit the western wing and to walk in the lonely nights. Mrs. Cross, the housekeeper, seems a decent sort of a person, but she firmly believes in the ghost, and came to me yesterday with tears in her eyes implori ng me not to introdu uqon tis hawick.

February 21.—I can't understand Mrs. Cross at all. To-day she would persist in telling me the story of a terrible tragedy which took place near here a few months ago—a man murdered by a girl—and insisted upon my giving my opinion about it. I said that if the story she told was true, it served the man right—and so it did. She seemed unaccountably pleased at my answer.

February 22.—I walked in the black copse to-night. Unless my eyes lie, I have seen a ghost. I was in the garden last night and distinctly saw a white figure move along the battlements of the western towers and disappear. It was the figure of a woman, and, strange though it may appear, it seemed somehow familiar to me.

February 26.—This morning I asked Mrs. Cross for an old manuscript copy of the history of Shagshaft castle, and I fancied that I had heard something about a secret room in the western wing.

What a nervous woman she is! I had scarcely got the words out before she fainted. There is something all about this which I cannot understand. When she came to, she declared solemnly that she had never heard of such a book. This must be false, for I have often been told about it; anyhow, I was only the more determined to thoroughly explore the western wing, so I commenced at once. On the topmost story, starting from the center tower and going to the right,

Count——.

I counted 12 rooms, all large, empty, and in a neglected state. When I reached the furthermost I turned round with a start to find Mrs. Cross just behind me.

"You have found the book?" she gasped. "You know about the secret chamber?"

"Precisely," I answered. "And it will go ill with its tenant."

Then she fell on her knees before me.

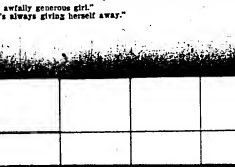
"For the love of God, don't hurt her Sir Reginald," she moaned. "Don't give her up; so young as she is, and so beautiful, and so innocent like. She'd never a hurt a hair of old Roger Martin's head if he hadn't offered her an insult worse than death; and she ne'er meant to kill him. He tried to take the gun from her, and it went off. What could I do when she came to me for help but hide her?"

"Stand up, woman, and tell me whom you have been hiding," I cried.

"She who killed old Roger Martin, the wickedest man in all the country side. Her father left her to his care. Little he could 'a known what sort of a man he was; and she came from India here last—"

She stopped short. My eyes followed hers, and standing in an aperture of the wall at the other end of the room, her arms stretched out appealingly to me, was the figure of a young girl. I knew her at once. My eyes remained fixed upon her—fascinated.

"Oh, it is you," she cried, joyfully; "you who saved me from drowning in the Ghooly river! You will not give me up? You will let me stay here? Before God, I swear to you that I never meant to hurt him."



February 27.—Most of the day I have spent with Maud Moray, and I have heard her story. Her father had died suddenly, and had left her to the guardianship of an old Northumbrian squire, a distant relative. She had come over to England, and had found that her new home was a tumble-down farmhouse on a wild moor, and that her guardian was a man of evil reputeé—a drunkard, and worse. She was only two miles away from Shagshaft castle, and she had often visited it, and, by her wondering praise of its grandeur and antiquity, had first won Mrs. Cross' heart. Then had come a terrible night, when, flushed with drink, old Martin Roger had been sent to her room by a desperate girl. I pass over her hasty, reluctant description of that awful scene. In her horror of what she had done her first instinct had been to fly, and she found her way by the pale light of the moon down the bleak moor to Shagshaft castle. What could Mrs. Cross do but promise to try and hide her. There was a part of the castle which neither man nor woman for many miles round dare visit, for, from generation to generation, it had been steadfastly believed to be haunted by the ghost of a former lady of Shagshaft. And so she had installed the secret chamber which none save she knew of, and Maud Moray had taken up her abode there. To increase the awe with which that part of the castle was already looked upon by the rustics, the new and fine tale was added upon the battlements at night clad in a white gown.

March 4.—I confess that I am madly in love with Maud Moray. Death alone shall part us. I have sworn it. She made my plans. There is a steamer starts from Liverpool for Buenos Ayres in a month's time. We will go by it. We will be married on board.

IN OLDEN DAYS.

Mark Antony was in great haste to join the boys in a little game of bridge back of the sphinx, but Cleopatra held him up.

"One moment, Mark," she said, sweetly.

"Can't you see I am in a great hurry?" exploded Mark. "What do you want now?"

"I want you to button my waist in the back, my dear. I can't reach it."

Then Mark flew off in a fury and kicked up the sands of the desert.

"Thank you, pet," exclaimed Cleopatra, when the last button was in its place, "but you are so angry; from now on we will have to call you 'Mad Antony.'"

And poor Mark was so unnerved he could not win a game and had to walk back to Rome.—Chicago Daily News.

Newest Sunbonnets Are Made to Match Material of Gown

Prettier even than lingerie hats are some of the new sunbonnets which are made to the floral lawn to match the gown. One style has a large stiffened brim, narrow and with shallow crown at the back, while the fronts are sharp and pointed. This is trimmed with a large bow of the lawn laid over the top. The other, with scoop shaped brim which turns back above the ears, is dashed with many bows and ends.

Pale pink batiste is used for the material of one sunbonnet, which is made to go with a pink dotted batiste. The Dorothy waist, borrowed from the little girl outfits, is the design for a comfortable morning gown which is substantial enough for lounging out of doors or tramping, and yet is so loose as to be practically a negligee. Cream colored crash linen is the material, and the bands and pipings all are in smooth linen of natural brown.

A WELCOME FOR MAY

Pretty Custom Once Common That Is Well Worthy of Revival Today—May Day Luncheon.

It is a custom worthy of revival that of sending gifts of flowers and fruit on the first day of May. So let us remember the hospitals and charitable homes for children for nothing is so acceptable to either old or young as a flower, the love of even very young children for fragrant blossoms is proverbial. Let us all bear this in mind and joyfully add another "day" to our calendar of special celebrations. It is one of the most hopeful signs of the times to observe how merchants, hostesses and schools are recognizing these delightful festival days. We should have too much of legendary romance and sentiment put into our altogether too practical, hurried lives.

Children eagerly welcome any innovation from the commonplace, so let them share in the preparations for May day. It makes them happier and in consequence better. If it is too cold to have outdoor fetes, the spirit and letter of the law may be carried out indoors. Most charming May baskets can be made by braiding crepe paper strips, then sewing it together, alternating strips of white and green work up effectively. A handle is braided and sewed on and the receptacle filled with flowers. Covers for potted plant and earthen form dishes are made in the same manner and add much to the beauty and attractiveness of these gifts.

A May Day Luncheon.

A fashionable hostess is going to have the most charming affair on Wednesday, she being one of the fortunate mortals who do not celebrate the first of the month by moving. In olden days our ancestors over the water did not change their abode with the change in season, and the May day festival was anticipated with keen delight by old and young alike.

Branches of fruit trees gathered several days beforehand and placed in lukewarm water which should be changed several times in 24 hours will burst into masses of delicious blossoms with which to decorate the rooms, transforming them into veritable bowers of beauty. The expense is little, as if the branches have to be sent by express from the country.

For the table centerpiece have a Maypole made from a broom-handle gilded and from the top place an embroidery hoop wound with ribbon from which fasten delicately tinted ribbons to radiate to each place. These streamers may be made of tiny real or artificial flowers fastened on a stout thread. At each plate have a small basket bearing the name-card and the salted nuts. This is a pretty quotation to write on the card:

Ho! the merrie first of Maie
Brings the daunce and blossoms gaie
To make of lyfe a holiday.

For the first course have strawberries in baskets lined with green leaves, tomato bouillon, broiled fish, sweetbreads, sweet-potato croquettes, peas, tomato and lettuce salad, ice cream in flower shapes and small daintily iced cakes.

MADAME MERRI.

Plaits Lead in New Skirts.

Skirts are decidedly plaited, although there is every possible variation of the plait shown. Good models have laid in plaits in front, back and sides with the braiding on the plain spaces between, but there will be a generous number of the genuine circular sort shown, as their plain sweep allows a better opportunity for the display of trimming on the skirt than any plaited model possibly can do.

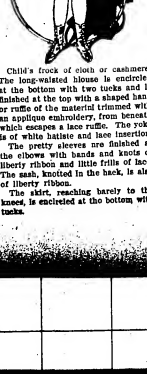
BELTS FOR WHITE GOWNS.

Embroidered Linen Now Is the Most Popular.

Embroidered linen is lovely, but take care that it is shaped well, and not bulky when drawn about the waist. If a woman has an antique metal buckle (especially if it be set in cabuchon stones of some sort) nothing could be prettier with a linen girdle. Kid has been done to death in cheap belts and has little style unless very well modeled. White silk belting is as good, both in point of taste and modishness as anything, and many qualities wash well, so it is not extravagant.

French makers of linen gowns and suits almost always provide with the gown a crush belt of linen, boned to fit and ornamented with large, linen-covered buttons. This gives a special finish to a gown, and is wonderfully good with all white frocks. High belts of contrasting taffeta nrc chic with colored linens.

Do not slur over this point in the costume, as it is of the greatest importance.



Silver belts have come back into favor, so if you have one and have not been wearing it of late, by all means bring it out and exploit it, for filigree and open-work girdles are decidedly the thing.

The same style girdle is naturally not suitable to every figure, and it is a wise woman who chooses according to her waist line.

A Two-Colored Hat.

Burnt orange and brown are the twain notes of one coquettish toque. The straw is the medium weight and is dented lengthwise and turned up at the side. Here a tan and brown braid buckle holds in place the full sweeping osprey plume. This is of white touched with the rich brown and burnt orange. The ribbon which surrounds the hat is a soft liberty in a golden brown shade.

DAINTY FROCK FOR LITTLE GIRL

Child's frock of cloth or cashmere. The long-waisted blouse is encircled at the bottom with two tucks and is finished at the top with a shaped band or ruffle of the material trimmed with an applique embroidery, from beneath which escapes a lace ruffle. The yoke is of white batiste and lace insertion.

The pretty sleeves are finished at the elbows with bands and knots of liberty ribbon and little frills of lace. The sash, knotted in the back, is also of liberty ribbon.

The skirt, reaching barely to the knees, is encircled at the bottom with tucks.

Pe-ru-na Relieves Spring Catarrh.

MISS DORA HAYDEN.

"Without hesitation I write to thank you for the great relief I have found in your valuable medicine, Peruna, and will call the attention of all my friends suffering with catarrh to that fact. Besides I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering with catarrh in any form."—Miss Dora Hayden, 819 6th St., S. W., Washington, D. C.

A Case of Spring Catarrh.

Mrs. N. P. Lawler, 423½ N. Broadway, Pittsburg, Kas., writes: "Last spring I caught a severe cold, which developed into a serious case of catarrh. I felt weak and sick, and could neither eat nor sleep well.

"A member of our club who had been cured of catarrh through the use of Peruna advised me to try it, and I did so at once. I expected help, but nothing like the wonderful change for the better I observed almost as soon as I started taking it. In three days I felt much better, and within two weeks I was in fine health. Peruna is a wonderful medicine."

"Agin It."

A female canvasser the other day came with a petition to an old farmer in the country and politely asked him if he would sign it. The old man eyed the document for a while with suspicion and then asked:

"What is it?"

"It is a petition in favor of a woman's movement," she replied insinuatingly.

Then I'm agin it," said the farmer, with the emphasis of a man who had some domestic infelicity. "A woman who's allus a-meddlin' in allus a-gettin' in trouble. If you've got anything to keep her still, I'll sign it."—Cassell's Journal.

The Eternal Feminine.

The sons of men rule the world, but the daughters of men govern it through them. It is woman who founds society in its artificial aspects, it is woman who creates class distinctions and insists on maintaining them. It is woman who imbues man with desire to emulate, who instils into him social ambition that inevitably brings to his traits the restless fever of acquisition, the madness of greed, the ambition for power through financial success. It is woman who is at once the social bulwark, the autocrat and the snob.—Woman's Life.

THE DIARY

THE ROUND BARN.

It Will Prove More Economical of Space Than Rectangular Barn.

The circular wall is the shortest form that can be used to enclose a given floor space, the square and oblong forms requiring respectively 11.5 per cent. and 40 per cent. more lineal feet of wall space than the circular form, to enclose the same number of square feet. In a three-story barn, similar to the accompanying cut, the difference in lumber, paint, time, etc, between the circular and oblong forms would amount to a good deal.

Three Floor Plans of Round Barn.

The efficiency and economy of labor in the circular barn is easily seen. Everything is under one roof, and feed room serves for all, there is no wading through drifts from barn to barn in winter, and by use of feed carriers and n wagon to gather manure, labor and time are reduced to a minimum.

The cut is reproduced from n design by the author and requires little explanation. The first floor is the basement floor, and contains stanchions for 59 cows, pens for sheep and swine, four calving pens, milk room provided with separator, testing appliance, churn, etc., feed room, root bin and an 18-foot silo. There is a driveway behind each row of stalls to allow of n cart being driven in to remove manure, and the feed is handled in n hand cart, similar to those used by all up-to-date dairymen.

The second floor is reached by two slightly elevated driveways. It contains stall room for 15 horses, the main granary, carriage and machinery rooms. The floor under the horses is rendered water tight by two layers of matched flooring sealed and coated with a tar compound. The liquid manure from both floors is conveyed by drains to a cement cistern.

The third floor is reached by a short viaduct, and here the silo is filled and all threshing done. Hay and bundles are unloaded by means of two circular hay carriers. Water from the well is pumped by a windmill into a storage tank just above the silo on the third floor, thence being piped all through the barn and house.

The floor of the second story is supported by the partition studs of the first floor, while the third floor and roof are upheld by the silo and four-inch posts. Six ventilating shafts run from the first floor up the side walls to the apex of the roof.

While the round barn may have its faults, in the opinion of Breeder and Feeder, it is becoming to be considered much superior to other forms in many ways and its adherents are increasing rapidly, especially in the dairy sections.

STRIPPINGS.

Any fool can spend money, but it takes brains to earn it.

Do not let the cows get hungry and unensy. Give them their ensilage and grain and plenty of hay.

Upon every farm where animals are kept for profit there should be a place provided for sick animals.

A man may be wise and not know it, and again he may think he is wise and still be awfully mistaken.

It is a very poor cow that will not respond to good care, generous feeding and comfortable surroundings.

Butter partakes quickly of the impurities in the air that surrounds it. For this reason butter should not be kept in any place where undesirable odors exist.

Place salt where the cows can help themselves daily. They are the best judges of the amount they should have. A lump of rock salt placed in a box in the yard is the best way to do this.

Producing Food Quality.

Much poor milk, cream and butter is produced because of dirty utensils. Careful methods in drawing the milk and in properly cooling it are set at naught if the milk is strained into an unclean can and allowed to remain there. It is not necessary that the dirt be present in sufficient quantities to be seen by the naked eye in order to render the can unfit for use. After it has been cleaned and dried the tin should have a clean, dry appearance and should not be greasy to the touch. A greasy coating on the interior of a milk can will spoil milk or cream in a very few hours. It doesn't cost any more to keep the utensils clean and the results obtained are more satisfactory.

ADVICE TO RHEUMATICS

Noted Physician Tells How to Prevent and Cure Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder Troubles.

(By Geo. Edmund Flood, M. D.)

If you would avoid Rheumatism and Kidney and Bladder Troubles, be moderate in the consumption of heavy, rich foods, substitute as far as possible soups, broths, fresh milk and drink water—lots of water. Take plenty of time to eat, and don't eat after you have had enough, even if it does taste good. If your work is confining take a moderate amount of exercise each day in the open air.

Of course, neither diet, water, rest nor exercise will cure these affections. I advise them as preventives only. For the benefit of the readers of this article who are now afflicted with Rheumatism, Kidney, Bladder or Urinary trouble, and desire to be cured quickly, I give below, complete in every detail, the famous prescription which has made me so successful in the treatment of these diseases. It is the most certain cure for these diseases that I have ever used. It is pleasant to take, it is not expensive, it can be filled by any druggist, and I believe it is the greatest prescription for Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder Trouble ever written. It is also a valuable spring tonic and blood purifier. If you are a sufferer, save this, take it to your druggist and have it filled, or get the ingredients and mix them at home.

Fluid Extract Cascarn Aromatic, ½ ounce.

Concentrated Barkola Compound, 1 ounce.

Fluid Extract Prickly Ash Bark, ½ drachm.

Aromatic Elixir, 4 ounces.

Adult dose, take one teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime; children, one-fourth to one-half teaspoonful after meals.

After you are cured follow the advice I have given you in regard to diet, exercise and water, and you will not need the services of a physician again for these ailments.

STUDENT MADE HIS POINT.

No Doubt the Policeman Understood What He Meant.

W. H. Matlock, the well-known English writer and political economist, said at a dinner in New York, apropos of a new definition of socialism: "I find that definition rather confusing. It reminds me of the young Oxford student's badinage with the policeman. 'Officer,' said the youth late one night, 'I'd like to ask you a question.'

"'Very well, sir.'

"'Does the law permit me to call you an ass?'

"'You move on,' the officer growled.

"'But stop a bit,' continued the youth. 'Does the law permit me to call an ass a policeman?'

"'The law don't say nothing about that,' was the gruff reply.

"'Then,' said the youth, 'good-night, Mr. Policeman.'"

Neighbors advised me to get Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and before I had used half of the cake of Soap and box of Ointment the sores had all healed, and my little one's face and body were as clear as a new-born babe's. Chamois Skins from Sheep.

Chamois skins in a majority of cases, according to a United States consular report recently issued, are really an oil tanned sheep or lamb skin lining. The supply of skins from the chamois is very limited. Enough could not be obtained in a year to supply the United States for more than a single day, n fair average crop from Switzerland being only about 5,000 to 6,000 skins. The chamois skin is heavier than the skin of the sheep or lamb, and much coarser. For strength and durability the chamois is preferable, but for ordinary use and appearance the oil-tanned sheepskin lining would, in most instances, be preferred.

Premier's Ticket Aided Murder.

A Russian journal tells the story of how the murderer of Gen. Lanzita, prefect of St. Petersburg, obtained admission to the semi-official party at which the deed was committed. After the crime all the guests were detained and their tickets were examined. There was one ticket the rightful owner of which was not present. It was no other than that of Premier Stolypin himself. The murder had been committed under cover of the invitation ticket of no less a personage than the prime minister. The premier had not been ab'e to go, and his ticket fell into the hands of a member of the secret police named Nakolaew. He resold it to the revolutionists for $16,000.

W. Bourke Cockran at a St. Patrick's day dinner told a story of an Irishman who was talking about the case of Baring Gould, whose obituary was recently printed by mistake, Mr. Gould still being happily in circulation: "So," said the Irishman, "they've printed the funeral notice av a man that ain't dead yet, how they? Faith, an' it's a nice fix he'd be in now if he was wan o' thim people that believes everything they see in the papers."

THE VALUE OF PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE

Personal knowledge is the winning factor in the culminating contests of this competitive age and when of ample character it places its fortunate possessor in the front ranks of

The Well Informed of the World.

A vast fund of personal knowledge is really essential to the achievement of the highest excellence in any field of human effort.

A Knowledge of Forms, Knowledge of Functions and Knowledge of Products are all of the utmost value and in questions of life and health when a true and wholesome remedy is desired it should be remembered that Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., is an ethical product of known excellence and with the approval of the most eminent physicians and gives universal satisfaction, because it is a remedy of Known Quality, Known Excellence and Known Component Parts and has won the valuable patronage of millions of the Well Informed of the world, who have attained of their own personal knowledge and from actual use that it is the most acceptable and best of family laxatives, for which no extravagant or unreasonable claims are made.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to worldwide acceptance as the most excellent family laxative. As its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well Informed of the world to be the best we have adopted as the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of—Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects, always buy the full genuine, bearing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, whether you call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna.

THE RELIGIOUS ROMANCE OF TRANSFORMED HAWAII

Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.

Honolulu, T. H. — As a paradise of outcast beauty, Hawaii is in the sixth century before had been driven north from the Samoan islands, over thousands of miles of sea, in canoes of their own making. As late as the thirteenth century they maintained relations, mostly warlike, with the people of the southern Polynesian archipelago. They never practiced cannibalism, though human sacrifice was one of their religious rites. They were n race of unusual vigor, longevity and comeliness. Their skill in handicraft was of the simplest. Their mind is attested by the marvelous feather cloaks once worn by Hawaiian royalty, and now the almost priceless possession of a few museums.

Such Was the Stock

from which came the Hawaii-old boy, bearing the euphonious name of Ohookiah, who, in 1809, was found weeping on the doorsteps of Yale college. He had fled from Hawaii, having seen his parents slain before his eyes in a civil war, and had made his way to America in one of the New England

THE OLD KAWAIAHAO CHURCH, WHERE MANY KINGS AND QUEENS WORSHIPED.

coverer, Capt. Cook, were populated by a race of remote Aryan origin, who in the sixth century before had been products and occupants all belonged to the chiefs and the king. A system of taboo safeguarded the power of these. It was taboo and death for a common man to let his shadow fall upon a chief, or to stand when the king's bathing water was carried by, or his name mentioned in song. It was taboo for a woman to eat with her husband. It was taboo and death for a man to enter his canoe on any day named as sacred by the priest. So on, the endless system of oppressions, despite which the race continued hardy and numerous, and against which the nation arose while the missionary ship Thaddeus was en route to the islands.

Ships for a New Religion,

having spurned the old, the natives gave eager welcome to the missionaries. The king and his chiefs were the first pupils, reversing the common experience, which is that Christianity works from the bottom upward. Within three months the king is said to have been able to read English. The Bible was translated and circulation spurred the missionaries on, so that within two years the native speech had been reduced to writing, and a spelling book printed in it. Within four years the chiefs formally agreed to renounce the Christian Sabbath, and to adopt the Ten Commandments as the basis of government. They also prohibited the practice of native women's swimming out to visit incoming ships for immoral purposes.

Shaping a Nation's Future.

Extraordinary success attended the efforts of the missionaries. Their organization of Hawaiians was practically conquered by them. Great revivals arose all over the group; hundreds and even thousands were baptised in a day; on one occasion Titus Coan baptised 1,200 natives, sprinkling them with a brush. Not all held out, however. Churches and schools were established. The first of the former was a grass building, like the native huts. It was shortly replaced by another of similar material, which seated 4,000 persons. When it burned, the present structure, on plain New England lines, was built by devoted converts, who quarried and carried the volcanic stone and dived into the sea for the coral with which to make lime. In this Kawaiahao church, which is now one of the sights of the city, many Hawaiian kings and queens worshiped.

As to education, it is enough to say that all the schools and academies and the colleges on the islands, had their origin with the churches. Conspicuous among them is the venerable Oahu College, which, in its Bishop museum, perpetuates the memory of the last of the royal line of Kamahamehas the Great. Punahou college enrolls the students of the best families of Honolulu. Of so high a grade were the educational institutions established by the missionaries that Californians used to send their children to Honolulu to be educated. English is now the only language taught to the children of this polyglot people; and the percentage of illiteracy on the islands is said to be lower than in some parts of New England. Nothing is more marked about the present-day religious activity of the islands than the prominence given to education. Industrial schools, kindergartens and night schools are too common to enumerate. Seminaries for young women, theological schools, and what may be styled "academies" as well as the night schools, are, one or all, a department of the work of almost every religious agency in the islands here, including the Buddhists. Naturally, the printing press has been used from the beginning, and the Hawaiian-English periodical west of the Rockies is "The Friend," which is still published by the Hawaiian Evangelical successor to the American board.

Savages Turned Missionaries.

The Kanakas, once missionary objects, are now missionary givers. They support mission work among their own people, and for 47 years have been generous givers to missionary work on the Gilbert islands, and elsewhere in Polynesia. At least 20 native Hawaiians have gone out as missionaries. There are now 75 ordained, native ministers on the islands. The theological seminary for natives, the Mid-Pacific institute, is just now expanding, so as to include in one institution the board's three schools, which begin the new era with an enrollment of more than 300 students.

The benefits to Hawaii from the missionary invasion may be summarized as follows: The native language was clothed. A reign of law and justice was established. People ceased to be mere vassals of the chiefs and lands, instead of belonging entirely to the rulers, were apportioned among the inhabitants. Self-government was instituted. The Hawaiian tongue was reduced to writing, and a system of education was introduced which to-day compares favorably with that of the mainland. The very land itself, the face of vegetation, was made to blossom with the verdant beauty which evokes exclamations of delight from every traveler. A people without a song, for whom it was said so late as 1841, that "their efforts to sing illustrated ploty rather than melody," have become famed musicians, with a band touring the large cities of the continent. The decline of the race has been arrested. Homes have been evolved where there was little worthy of that name. The spirit of chastity has been created within a race to whom it was not instinctive. Seventy thousand natives have been enrolled in the membership of Christian churches. A people who, less than a century ago were heathen, and objects of Christian benevolence, have themselves freely sent and carried the gospel to other islands. In a word, a future state of the American Union has been made out of the Sandwich islands.

TWO BIG QUESTIONS

THE "MORAL OBLIGATION" AND "DOES IT PAY?"

SHOULD BE CONSIDERED

An Honest Answer to These Will Keep the Trade with the Home Merchant Every Time.

(Copyrighted, 1906, by Alfred C. Clark.)

When the thrifty person or his wife sits down for the first time—or any time—with the mail order catalogue and its temptations, there are two, and only two, points to be taken into consideration.

One of these is moral obligation, and the chances are that that will be dismissed as sentimental nonsense.

The other is—Will it pay? and to that the thrifty person will be inclined to interpret an answer from the prices quoted in black-faced figures in the catalogue.

Neither of these questions should be lightly dismissed. Moral obligation is not sentimental nonsense, and black-faced figures sometimes lie.

The duty a man owes to his own community and his obligation to trade at home are no often reiterated in the country press that, possibly like some of the sermons, it has a tendency to harden the hearts of the sinners.

What has your neighboring town given you, Mr. Farmer? A market for your produce. What has made 25 to 50 per cent. of the present value of your farm? The accessibility of a market. You know what your grandfather did on that same farm. Drove his hogs and hauled his grain 20, 50, maybe 75 miles to the nearest market town, and received prices for them that would make you howl about the trusts. And he hauled back the family supplies for which he paid what you would consider monopolistic prices. Do you happen to know what the old farm was worth then? Well, the old farm was worth a deal of being $75 or $100 an acre.

Yes, the home town, with its handy market, has advanced the value of your property and made you worth several thousand dollars more than your grandfather was worth. The home town affords schooling for your children, and pays taxes on the many privileges which your family would not otherwise enjoy. The rural mail routes and telephone system radiating from the home town, as spokes from a hub, bring to your home the greatest convenience of modern times.

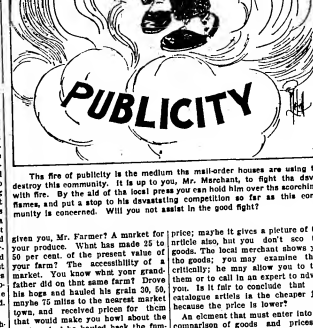
Have you ever noticed that the first thing the settlers of a newly-opened country do is to build a school house, a church, a blacksmith shop, a grain elevator, petition the department for a post office, and start a newspaper. They know from former experience that, with these things close by, life will be endurable, while without them existence and a moral obligation between the two. Are you, Mr. Thrifty Farmer, living up to that obligation when you do your trading with the mail order house?

It is the line of argument the farmer may answer that his greatest obligation, his first duty, is to his immediate household, and that among the duties to his family and to the heirs of his estate is that of practicing judicious economy—buying where he can buy the cheapest and to the best advantage. And this brings us to the end point in the argument—the paramount question in this commercial age—"Will it pay?"

Is it possible an affirmative answer to that question is accepted as the call of duty. As a matter of fact, "Will it pay?" is a good test to apply to any project or proposition. There are commercial, as well as political, demagogues, and the man who is appealed to on the score of patriotism or profit, duty or dollars, can scarcely do better than to sit down by himself and submit that question—"Will it pay?"—to his own best judgment. Provided always, that he goes to the very bottom of it.

What are the relative advantages of buying at the local store and ordering from a catalogue house? Advantages, understand, that figure in the question, "Will it pay?" Don't get away from that question. It certainly is very comfortable to sit down by your own fireside and select from a pretty and sulky plow from a printed description and a picture of the article; much more comfortable, in fact, than hitching up and driving to town on a raw day.

A consideration more important, perhaps, is that the printed price in the catalogue seems, in some cases at least, to be lower than the price quoted at the local store. Isn't that conclusive? Let's see. The catalogue describes the goods and quotes a price; maybe it gives a picture of the article also, but you don't see the article. The local merchant shows you the goods; you may examine them critically; he may allow you to take them out in all in an expert to advise you. Is it fair to conclude that the catalogue article is the cheaper just because the price is lower?



An element that must enter into the comparison of goods and prices is that in my attempt to fool the customer, the local merchant is decidedly at a disadvantage. His must show the goods; you merely describe them. His business depends wholly upon the limited traffic area, and his main stock in trade is his ability to inspire confidence within that circle. He cannot afford to make a practice of misrepresenting his goods.

The mail order house is not so tied down to the main street. Obviously is no fellow citizens, no mutual interests with its patrons. Its trade area is scattered and always shifting. Naturally these conditions do not demand extraordinary vigilance in supplying honest goods. And where Vigilantes is not a needed employe in the business he frequently takes off the payroll, which makes a saving in expense, as well as in the cost of the goods. Is it lower prices are quoted by the catalogue house, may not this account for it?

"Will it pay?" Is it a matter of economy to buy inferior and damaged goods when the same money, or even less, will secure you the best goods of their quality? Which course does a man's first duty to his own household dictate?

But to get at the bottom of that question, we must consider the far-reaching general effect of mail order trading. If single catalogue houses are to be capitalized at $40,000,000, and they must be reckoned with along with Standard Oil, the beef trust and railroad mergers. If they are allowed to suck the blood from our country towns, your grandchildren will find conditions much the same as those of your grandfather's time. Their markets will be 20, 50 or 75 miles away. The towns and villages will be deserted, and the "hubs" will be too distant to send the radiating spokes of rural mail, telephone lines and other modern conveniences far into the country.

CHARLES BRADSHAW.

The fire of publicity is the medium the mail-order houses are using to destroy this community. It is up to you, Mr. Merchant, to fight the devil with fire. By the aid of the local press you can hold him over the scorching flames, and put a stop to his devastating competition as far as this community is concerned. Will you not assist in the good fight?

Sporting Gossip.

Joe Gans, the lightweight champion of the world, will soon have an excuse if he will renounce all claim to the welter-weight title, of which he is the rightful holder, has some pretty good blows on the fighting game in general. While in Milwaukee recently the negro boxer said there should be a change in the system of weighing in by all means; that boxers should not be allowed to dictate terms so as to get an opponent so weak that he could not do himself or the club which puts up the purse full justice.

Gans is not the dense fellow some of the followers of the game imagine; on the contrary, he is a bright lad and has a good amount of common sense, and he can discuss sporting subjects with a knowledge that would surprise a great many. If Gans were a white boy he would be the idol of the boxing fans, but the fact that he is black makes a big difference.

In speaking of the weighing in proposition Joe said:

"That one deal at Goldfield, Nev., in which Billy Nolan compelled me to weigh three times in two days was enough for a start, and to make a weight that was out of all reason, should make Jeffries and the followers of the club promoters and backers of the game all over the country take notice. It was an outrage, even though it might be called a clever trick on Nolan's part, for it placed the club in a position of not knowing whether it could enter the ring fit to fight or not for a month. I believe the rules should be entirely revised, and instead of the old Marquis of Queensberry contests in this country, there should be a new set drafted for Americans and others to follow. I am not a firm believer in finish battles, although I stand ready to engage in them. I think 25 rounds should be sufficient to decide any contest."

Clarence H. Benamont, the brilliant outfielder who has been secured by the Boston National League club, is a native of Rochester, Wis., and turned his thirtieth year last July. He played with the Fox River Valley league during 1895-7 and until Aug 8, 1898, when he was signed by Milwaukee. His fine hitting and batting and superior base running led to his purchase by the Pittsburg club. He was not given a regular position on the Pittsburg club until June 26, 1899, and batted for .350 in 264 games and stole 38 bases. Since that time until last season, when he was hampered by a bad leg, he has been a mainstay of the Pittsburg club. One of his best years in the game was made in 1899 when he went six times to bat and made six hits, and Aug. 6, in Philadelphia, when he batted five times and made five hits including three triples and a double, a total of 12 bases. Twice that season he made four hits in a game.

Jiggs Donahue, now the star first sacker for the White Sox, was once a college star of great magnitude. John L. Zimmerman, prominent Democratic politician of Springfield, tells the story of Jiggs' first appearance as a ball player outside the town lots of Springfield. "A decade ago," said Mr. Zimmerman, "Olivet college paid far less attention to the amateur standing of the members of the teams than they now do. At Wittenberg we found that we had a pretty fair team, with the exception of a catcher, for we had no one to hold the pitcher. I began the figure on what we could do. Some one told me that Jiggs would be a good man, I searched him out and I think that he occasionally attended chapel, he certainly did no more. At any rate, he filled all the requirements, and Wittenberg had the best baseball team in her history as a result, although Jiggs at times found it exceedingly hard to suncoat his identity. From Wittenberg Jiggs went to Marietta and the year following became a full fledged professional. I have followed his career with the greatest interest since then, and I believe that I was more responsible than anyone else for bringing him out." For years Mr. Zimmerman has been a sponsor for Wittenberg athletics, but Donahue is the only real star of the first magnitude which the school has ever turned out.

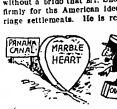
MISS SHONTS WILL NOT WED FRENCH NOBLEMAN



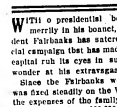
WASHINGTON—The departure of Theodore P. Shonts, former chairman of the Panama canal commission, with his two daughters, for New York, where he is now head of the Metropolitan fraction interests, has again revived talk concerning the engagement of Miss Shonts to the Duc de Chaulnes.

If there ever was an engagement it is now off, as Washington society has the story, and the reason for this failure of another international alliance is said to be the refusal of Mr. Shonts to grant the duesl demand for a settlement.

It is accepted here as the correct version of the departure of the duke without a bride that Mr. Shonts stood firmly for the American idea of marriage settlements. He is reported to have told De Chaulnes that he would give his daughter a stylish wedding, provide her with a trousseau fit for a princess, and a substantial wedding allowance that would keep her in pin money for a long time, but to enter into any agreement to settle an income on her for life before marriage, this he would not do.

Personally the head of the Shonts household wants to see his daughter happily married, and, if he had any objections to the French nobleman, was willing to put them aside if Miss Shonts was satisfied with the duke. So, according to some of the wife oacs, the match will never come off, as the duke is reported to "need the money," for while he is long on lineage and incumbered estates, he is short on cash.

CANAL ZONE MEN HURT PRIDE OF CONGRESSMAN



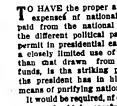
THE real reason for the estrangement between Speaker Cannon, eight other members of the senatorial party and the canal zone officials was not because of the quarantine regulations but because Speaker Cannon and his party did not believe they were properly treated.

When the steamship on which the Speaker and his party were arrived at Colon the men who are digging the canal and caring for the canal zone did not even send a rowboat out to meet them. The party boarded a train at Colon, going to Panama and after it had started and was nearing Culebra cut Speaker Cannon went strolling through the coach ahead. In it he found Chief Engineer Stevens, who recognized him and talked with him a few minutes.

"Well, good-by," the chief engineer said, waving his hand, as the train approached Culebra cut.

The congressional party headed by the speaker believed they had been so badly treated that they had the steward on the steamship prepare their luncheon for them. Each member of the party on the train carried a lunch box.

When the train pulled into Panama Superintendent Beard of the Panama Railroad company had prepared an elaborate luncheon for the members of the speaker's party. They went in the dining room and ate the luncheon, leaving on the table each member of the party left at his plate the customary price for a luncheon. Superintendent Beard found the money on the table, and, as his guests had gone, sent it back to the steamship with a curt note that he was not authorized to collect money for the luncheon.



FAIRBANKS' AMBITION OPENS HIS POCKETBOOK

WITH o presidential bco buzzing merrily in his bonnet, Vice President Fairbanks has satcred on a social campaign that has made the whole capital ruh its eyes in surprise and wonder at his extravagance.

Since the Fairbanks weather eye was fixed steadily on the White House the expenses of the family, it is said, have jumped from $30,000 to $100,000. Mrs. Fairbanks now is one of the most popular hostesses in Washington, and from the occasional receptions of two years ago has developed to two formal affairs a week.

Formerly the Fairbankses lived in a modest house at Eighteenth and Massachusetts avenues, the rent of which was $3,000 a year. Then they had only five servants in all, and they were without a carriage, hiring a vehicle whenever needed. Now they pay $12,000 a year for the mansion of Col. Edward Morrell, of Philadelphia, and they have more than a dozen servants, with twice that total several days a week. Over the Fairbanks' kiteben now presides John Rook, the cher who was the joy of Levi Z. Leiter and his friends.

Rook has so much money to spend that he gains precedence in the market over Pinckney, the buyer for the White House. Fairbnks has given his man a free hand to stock the pantry with the choicest luxuries, and just what this means may be gathered from the fact that at two receptions nearly 1,000 guests partook of a buffet suppor at which tarraple, every kind of shell fish and the finest imported wines were served. Lavishness is the keynote of the Fairbanks establishment, and to her credit be it recalled that Mrs. Fairbnoks now has added frequent and large theater parties.

TO HAVE GOVERNMENT PAY CAMPAIGN EXPENSE

TO HAVE the proper and legitimate expenses of national campaigns paid from the national treasury for the different political parties, and to permit in presidential campaigns only a closely limited use of money other than that drawn from the public funds, is the striking project which the president has in his mind as a means of purifying national politics.

It would be required, of course that all money should be publicly accounted for, vouchers should be made and carefully audited, and the purposes for which it could be used would be limited to speaking, literature and organization.

It is understood that the amount made available from the public treasury would be apportioned among the parties on some such basis as the relative votes polled at the last preceding national election. This would let in the small parties for their share.

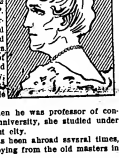
Politicians regard the scheme as Utopian, but are not at all certain whether it could be defeated if seriously presented to congress by the president.

The president has not developed details of the plan, and may be convinced yet of its practicability, but he has talked of it with much interest, and is thus far disposed to regard it as more than an impractical vision.

Politicians say that if the idea should be followed to its logical conclusions it would eventuate in nothing less than the creation of a great election board possessing unlimited opportunities for corruption.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

GOVERNOR QUITS UNDER FIRE



Herbert James Hagerman, the governor of New Mexico, who has resigned his office while under investigation by the legislature concerning his part in alleged extensive land frauds, is only 34 years old and one of the youngest governors in the country.

The charge is that the governor, without the knowledge and consent of the commissioner of public lands, delivered to the Pennsylvania Development company a deed for 7,000 acres of timber land; that he took the seal of the commissioner and unlawfully affixed it to the deed, that the land is worth from $25 to $100 an acre, but was sold at only three dollars an acre, that the federal law at the time forbade the selling of more than 160 acres to any one purchaser, and that therefore the territorial institutions to which these lands belonged were defrauded.

Ex-Gov. Hagerman is a product of the west. Born in Milwaukee, he spent his boyhood in Colorado and his youth in New Mexico.

Hagerman was appointed in 1897 by President McKinley second secretary of the United States embassy in Russia, E. A. Hitchcock, now secretary of the interior, was then ambassador at St. Petersburg. It was largely due to his good work as secretary of the embassy, both under Mr. Hitchcock and later under Charlemagne Tower, that his appointment as governor was secured. Mr. Hitchcock urged the appointment upon President Roosevelt. Following as it did close upon the chief of the Rough Riders, as did the governor of Oklahoma, but this is a mistake.

TO PAINT KAISER'S SON

Mrs. Ruth Jewett Burgess, wife of Prof. John W. Burgess, Roosevelt lecturer at the University of Berlin, has been commissioned to paint a portrait of Prince Augustus Wilhelm, fourth son of Emperor William of Germany.

Mrs. Burgess was born in Montpelier, Vt., 45 years ago, and was the only child of Hon. T. P. Jewett, a leading banker and financier of Vermont a generation ago. Early in life she showed a decided talent for art, and this was fostered by good developed. Thomas W. Wood, for many years president of the National Academy of Design of New York, who was a native of Montpelier and the founder of the Wood art gallery in that city, early took notice of Miss Jewett's talents and under his instructions she developed remarkable skill.

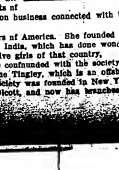
While in New York with her husband, when he was professor of constitutional and international law at Columbia university, she studied under William J. Whittemore and Kenyon Cox of that city.

During the past ten years Mrs. Burgess has been abroad several times, studying under the best art instructors and copying from the old masters in the famous galleries of the old world.

During the past winter while her husband was engaged in his duties at the University of Berlin, Mrs. Burgess has been copying several celebrated pictures in the Kaiser Friedrich and the Kaiser Friedrich Denkmal, the private galleries of the emperor. While engaged in this work her painting attracted the notice of Emperor William and the commission to paint the portrait of his son followed.

Mrs. Burgess inherited a large property from her father, much of which she has devoted to charitable purposes. She was much interested in the foundation of the Wood art gallery in Montpelier, Vt., which was presented to that city by Thomas W. Wood in the hanging there of more than 100 famous products of his brush.

PEACE ADVOCATE HONORED



Baron D'Estournelles de Constant, one of the distinguished foreign representatives et the recent dedication of the solingrad Carnegio institute at Petersburg, and who received the degree of LL. D. from the Western University of Pennsylvania, is one of the foremost authorities in the world on arbitration. He was a member of the first Hoque conference, sod is now ons of the French members of The Hague court.

He is organizing the representative men of every nation into an intercational federation, whose motto is "My country's good through the peace of the world." The arbitration group in the French parliment, organized by him, has enabled France to conclude many treaties of arbitration.

Baron D'Estournelles some time ago invited a delegation of 100 from the United States congress to visit Paris and make a tour of France as the guests of his group.

Baron De Constant, who married an American woman and is a personal friend of Andrew Carnegie, is also a great admirer of President Roosevelt. He proposed that the United States against Venezuela would have led to the use of military force but for his intervention the president demanded that the question be submitted to The Hague tribunal. Baron De Constant, a member of the tribunal, wrote the president, thanking him for saving it from extinction. He has been French ambassador to Turkey and to England. He has been a senntor of France and is an orator of note.

TO HEAD THEOSOPHISTS

Mrs. Annie Besant of Benares, India, has been nominated as world president of the Theosophical society, to succeed the late Col. Henry Steele Olcott, the president-founder of the organization. Col. Olcott, who was an old New York newspaper man and a veteran of the civil war, died recently following his return to India from Chicago, where he had attended the annual convention of the American section. On his deathbed Col. Olcott formally named Mrs. Besant, who had for years been his co-worker, to succeed him, a prerogative he held. The nominatinn must be ratified by a two-thirds vote of the societies of the world and the vote is soon to be taken.

Mrs. Besant is a noted writer and lecturer. She was born in Ireland. Her brother is Sir Henry Wood, secretary of the Society of Arts of London, who came to this country in 1903 on business connected with the world's fair at Chicago.

Mrs. Besant has made three lecture tours of America. She founded the Central Hindu College for Girls at Benares, India, which has done wonderful work in raising the condition of the native girls of that country.

The Theosophical society should not be confounded with this society at Point Loma, Cal., presided over by Catherine Tingley, which is an offshoot from the parent body. The Theosophical society was founded in New York city in 1875 by Miss. Blavatsky and Col. Olcott, and now has branches in all the civilized cities of the civilized world.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

HOTEL LIFE BECOMING A FAD AMONG THE RICH

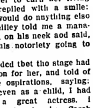
NEW YORK—The rich people of New York are not only music mad, but they are hotel mad. Hundreds and hundreds of people who have luxurious town houses, as well as country homes, are now living in hotels, and the demend fnr more end costlier hostelries continues unabated.

The building of the Waldorf end its subsequent merger with the Astoria, was responsible largely for the hotel life fad. This hotel, as it stands, cost more than $14,000,000, and it would puzzle one to figure out how such a large investment could be made to pay. The taxes alone are more than $150,000 a year, and this does not include water rates, insurance and repairs.

But it must pay, in spite of the size of the investment, for George Boldth has grown rich in its management. Ever Oscar the chef has made his name a household word in the gastronomy life reigns, which are still coining money for their proprietors. Whco John Jscob Astor built his famous hotel at Bereley street and Broadway he was derided. told him it would be a disastrous venture as the hotel was situated too far up town to catch the trade. Well, the hotel is still doing business and the lessee is said to have made a great fortune out of it.

Thousands of people who come to New York every year would not think of stopping anywhere else, any more than their fathers and grandfathers would in spite of the fact that it is now in almost the heart of the business and financial district.

OLD FASHIONED HOTELS STILL MAKING MONEY



CURIOUSLY enough there are many old fashioned hotels in New York, many of them out of the belt where gay life reigns, which are still coining money for their proprietors. Wheo John Jscob Astor built his famous hotel at Bereley street and Broadway his friends. told. him it would be a disastrous venture as the hotel was situated too far up town to catch the trade. Well, the hotel is still doing business and the lessee is said to have made a great fortune out of it.

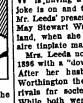
Tneo there is the Brondway Central ot Third street, which used to be the Grand Central, the hotel in which Ed Stokes shot Jim Fisk. It is still a flourishing institutioo. When Tilly Haynes, the proprietor, died a year or so ago he left more than $1,000,000.

Smith & McNeil's is another old time hotel which has kept its enormous business in spite of the march up town. It is near the Washington market and close to the ferries that bring the passengers from the various lines entering Jorsey City.

The partners started in with a cofee and bread in the market. Both of them became millionaires. Smith & McNeil's has the reputation of feeding a greater number of people than any other hotel or restaurant in New York.

EVELYN TIRED OF CITY; WANTS TO GO OUT WEST

BRONCHO busting is the sport to which Evelyn Nesbit Thaw has set her mind upon as the thing she would most eojoy. The solitudo of a western ranch, surrounded by snowcapped peaks and rustling in some valley far from the sbode of others of her race, is where she plans to spend the remainder of her life with Harry Thaw, when he is free to leave the grim Tombs cellroom.



"I am so tired of this; oh, so tired," she said tho other day. "I wont to leave it all—the crowds, the smoke, the big buildings, the lights, everything that reminds mo of the past.

"I want to go west with Horry—just Harry and I—and when he is oequitted we shall go. I have been in the west. I know what it is. I want to get away from this dressing, dressing, eternal dressing, and wear a short skirt and a sweater and ride bronchos astride."

In reply to a question, if she would go back on the stage if it ever became necessary for her to earn her living again, Evelyn replied with a smile: "No, indeed, I would do anything else first. Dan O'Reilly told me a manager almost wept on his neck sod said, 'Think of all this notoriety going to waste.'"

Mrs. Thaw added that the stage had lost its attraction for her, and told of her early stage aspirations, saying: "In Pittsburg, even as a child, I had longed to be a great actress. I thought I was going to be Sarah Bernhardt No. 2. My first rehearsal cured me of that.

Mr. Jerome told the jury I was a great ootrose. I wish he could have seen that rehearsal. I had one line to speak. It was something like 'Here comes the bride.' When I said it, Mr. Lederer looked at me and I flopped a little then end f would say "b-ride." It took him oil morning to teach me that one line."

DIVORCED MRS. LEEDS HAS LAUGH ON SUCCESSOR

WILLIAM B. LEEDS' divorced wife is having a $360,000 laugh. The joke is on and the expense horns by Mr. Leeds' present wife, who was Mrs. May Stewart Worthington, of Cleveland, when she married the millionaire tinplate magnate.

Mrs. Leeds no. 1. was divorced in 1896 with a "dowry" of a cold million. After her husband married Mrs. Worthington the two women became rivals for society's highest honors. While both were abroad Mrs. Leeds No. 2 bought a magnificent necklace of pearls for $225,000.

But when Mrs. May Stewart Worthington Leeds came home to New York she had the pearls mastrung and Bernard Citroen, named as the importer for Mrs. Leeds, swore the baubles were liable to a duty of only ten per cent., not being a necklace, but only so many unstrung pearls. The trifling duty of $22,500 was paid and Mrs. Leeds seemed to be to full possession of her necklace.

The government officials, however, demanded a reappraisement, declaring that it was a necklace and liable to an additional 82 per. cent. duty, with interest. The necklace was seized.

The case has been carried into the United States circuit couri, where it was held that Citroen must pay the amount of the protested duty before he could appeal from the decinloo of the local board of appraisers.

The agent for Mr. Leeds were forced to pay into the treasury department at Washington, under protest, $110,235 to be added to the cost of the necklace.

HAYWOOD JURORS WILL KEEP HOUSE

PLEASANT RESIDENCE RENTED FOR THEM BY SHERIFF AT BOISE.

Ready for Large Crowd—Peculiar Arrangement of the Courtroom—Senator Borah's Sharp Reply to Former Judge Beatty.

Boise, Idaho, May 4.—This jury which will try William Haywood, the first of the accused in the Steunenberg case, will keep house during the trial. The law of Idaho provides that such juries shall be kept together and in seclusion from public contact, and the higher courts have always insisted on a strict compliance with the provision.

Therefore, rather than take any chances with the publicity of a hotel in this case, Sheriff Shad Hodgin, responsible for the custody of the jurors, has hired a house for them. The house, an attractive, well built structure, standing on a nest lawn and garden, is just across the street and flanks the rear of Ada county courthouse, and within about 300 feet of the courtroom.

To make the daily journeys of the jury as direct as possible the sheriff has constructed a temporary railway from the rear of the second story of the courthouse. Its upper landing is the platform of a fire escape, and it is reached through the ante-room of Judge Woods' chambers. The jury can, therefore, be taken directly from the stairway without leaving the railed enclosure of the courtroom.

Will Be Well Fed and Watched.

An official cook has been retained, and arrangements have been made with local stores for a good and varied supply of food. Four bailiffs, two for day duty and two for night service—will guard the jury. The house will be carefully and constantly watched. Entry to the open lawn will be prohibited. One of the day bailiffs will remain at home while the jury is in court and the night bailiffs will do no sleeping during their watch.

The courtroom is being partly reconstructed in order to increase the seating capacity both in and outside the rail. Two unusual features of the courtroom are that the jury box occupies the space directly in front of the bench that is generally filled by the clerk and his desk, and the witness chair is in the middle of the chamber, between the ends of counsel tables and directly in front of the middle gate of the rail. The jury faces the room, but its chairs are so swivels that may be swung around to face the bench. The witness chair is on a platform and is visible from all points in the room.

Room for the Reporters.

Many extra chairs and tables are being placed on either side of the room within the enclosure for the use of the daily press representatives, and a long desk has been built along the outer side of the rail for the artist and writing artists. Special seats are being placed far members at the Boise bar and the seating capacity of the public part of the room increased to about 300.

Judge Wood and Sheriff Hodgin are cooperating in plans calculated to expedite the work and comfort of all engaged in and on the trial, under conditions as reasonable as circumstances and necessity will permit.

Senator Borah, one of the leading counsel for the state in the approaching trial, Friday issued a statement in reply to an interview given at Washington by former Judge James B. Beatty, who recently retired from the federal district bench in Idaho, in which Judge Beatty presided at the time the grand jury was in session recently and returned indictments against a number of persons for alleged timber land frauds. It is alleged that one of these indictments was found against Senator Borah, who has been general counsel for the Barber Lumber company, which is accused of having secured lands by fraud. The alleged indictment against Senator Borah, while admittedly found by the grand jury, has not as yet been reported.

Borah Answers Beatty.

Senator Borah's statement follows:

"I have read Judge Beatty's statement, and have only this to say: Judge Beatty for the last year seems to have utterly forgotten the high position he holds. During the last campaign for the senatorship he used his position in a shameless and utterly dishonorable way for his political advantage. His did not hesitate to demand and receive favors from litigants who had important litigation in his court, and so conducted himself as to compromise to a great extent his dignity and honor.

"I am sure it is to the credit and advantage of the judiciary that he is out of his way to Egypt."

Drops Suit Against Oil Trust.

Findlay, O., May 3.—George H. Phelps, who last Thursday filed a suit in the common pleas court here asking that the court issue an injunction restraining the Standard Oil company and its constituent companies from doing business in the state of Ohio, late Thursday afternoon asked the court to dismiss the petition. This was accordingly done, but without prejudice to the right of so-called independent oil operators or refineries.

GEN. KUROKI AT SEATTLE

FAMOUS JAPANESE SOLDIER GIVEN WARM WELCOME.

His Fellow Countrymen Wild with Enthusiasm—Brilliant Reception at the Rainier Club.

Seattle, Wash., May 3.—Gen. Kuroki and his staff, representatives of Japan to the Jamestown exposition, arrived in this city from the orient at half past three o'clock Thursday afternoon after several hours' delay on Puget Sound owing to fog. They received a royal and picturesque welcome by both local Japanese and Americans, who crowded every dock on the water front and lined the streets as the Japanese party passed through in a string of automobiles.

The general is the guest of the city. He is being feted and dined. Thursday afternoon the party was taken for a trip around the city in automobiles, visiting various points of interest. In the evening a brilliant reception was given at the fashionable Rainier club, at which the governor of the state, Albert E. Mead, and prominent business men were present.

Local Japaneso are wildly enthusiastic over the coming of their general. All the Japanese stores in the city were closed Thursday and there were many hundreds of Japaneso to greet the general when he arrived on the Aki Maru. Daylight fireworks were set off over Elliott bay and as the party landed the native cheers, or "banzais" were almost incessant. A hundred Japanese girls sang the national anthem and the general's carriage was almost covered with flowers presented by school children.

The government here is represented by Gen. Arthur MacArthur, Col. John L. Chamberlain, Col. Frank Winn and Maj. W. W. Hart, who with two enlisted men will act as the escort of the distinguished party from Seattle to Washington.

Gen. Kuroki's party is made up of 14. In addition to the general there are Gen. Y. Mioshi, Maj. Gen. Umesawa, Col. M. Ohta, Maj. Yoshida, Lieut. Col. Nagayoma, Capt. Marquis L. Sango, Capt. Tsunke, Paymaster Kobeyshi, Surgeon Lamura and four enlisted men.

Making the trip with Gen. Kuroki and party are Baron Ozawa, president of the Japanese Red Cross society, and a suite of three. They are on the way to London to attend the annual meeting of the International Red Cross society.

HINDUS SACK INDIAN CITY.

Serious Anti-European Riots at Rawalpindi, in Punjab.

Allahabad, British India, May 4.—Serious anti-European riots have occurred at Rawalpindi, in the Punjab. A Hindu mob burned two bungalows, pillaged the mission church, looted the post office, burned a garage and slit the motor cars in it, destroyed the plant of the powerhouse and smashed the windows in the houses of many Europeans. Armed police eventually abstained the upper hand and dispersed the rioters. The town is now patralled by a squadron of the Tenth Hussars.

The outbreak of Rawalpindi is attributed to the influence of well-known agitators who have been making speeches throughout the Punjab and who, also, are held responsible for the recent outbreak at Lahore.

POWDER BLAST IN CHINA KILLS MANY

FEARED OVER 100 ARE DEAD BY MAGAZINE EXPLOSION AT CANTON.

Bodies of 21 Victims Terribly Mutilated, Recovered by Rescuers—Famous Pagoda Only Slightly Damaged by Shock.

Hongkong, May 4.—Very great destruction of life and property was caused at Canton Thursday night by the explosion af a gunpowder magazine. Twenty-one bodies already have been recavered from the ruins. It is feared that at least 100 more lie dead. Hundreds of persons were injured.

Fifteen buildings were razed to the ground and aver a hundred were seriously wrecked. A section 200 feet long from the messive city wall was thrown down.

The historicel nine-storied pagoda escaped with slight injuries.

The officials and staffs of the hospitals are doing their best to succor the sufferers.

In the Shamien suburb, where the foreigners live, a terrific shock was caused by the explosion, but the residents were unharmed.

Roofs Blown Off Mile Away.

Some idea of the force of the explosion may be gathered from the fact that the roofs of houses a mile distant from the exploded magazine were blown aff. A number af important Chinese and foreign mercantile establishments were completely damolished.

In the vicinity of the magazine were shackingly mutilated. Many corpses af man and waman were withaut heads.

The afficer in charge of the magazine was among thase killed, and when his body was recovered a pipe was found clutched in his hand, which suggests the possible cause af the explosian. The financial lasses are enormous.

Sixteen Gates into the City.

The city af Canton is about six miles in circumference and is inclosed by walls about 20 feet thick and from 25 to 40 feet high. There are 16 gates into the city besides two water gates. The famous nine-storied pagoda, dating from the beginning of the middle ages, is situated in the western part af what is known as the old city. The foreigners reside in the Shamien suburb founded in 1859 on an artificial island an the Honan side of the river. The population af Canton is estimated at about 900,000.)

FULLAM IS QUICK TO ACT

ARRESTS POLICE AND SOLDIERS AT PUERTO CORTEZ.

Brutal Assault an American Negro Arouses the Commander—Says Offenders Must Be Punished.

Puerto Cartes, April 29, via Mobile, Ala., May 4.—About five o'clock an the evening of Saturday, April 27, a negro man formerly from Bayou Station, La., named Gencrel Davis, a fruit inspector for the Thecker Bros.' steamship line, was standing quietly near the railroad station at La Laguna, where the shape of the railroad are situated, talking with three or four other negro mechpenians, also Americans.

A drunken Nicaraguan soldier, armed with a machete, approached the party and, without any pravacatian, demended to know what they were talking about. Davis answered that it was none of his business, whereupan the Nicaraguan soldier drew his machete and raised it over Davis, who clesped his arms around the men and fleelly took every the weapon, threw it upon the ground and went to a house near by.

A companion af the Nicaraguan soldier ran to a nearby and police station and a squad af police and Nicaraguan soldiers surrounded the house, dragged Davis out and beat him brutally over the head and body until he was unconscious.

Within ten minutes the bluejackets of the Marietta, under Ensign Rorasch, were an the spat. Commender Fullam's orders were sharp and decisive:

"Arrest the chief af police and the policemen engaged in the assault, put them in irons and send them aboard ship; arrest the Nicaraguan officers and men engaged in the assault and hald them far arders."

It was thought passible that an attempt would be made to release the afficers and police captured by the bluejackets, so men were landed from the Paducah to occupy La Laguna and additional men were landed from the Marietta. The Paducah maved to a position franting the Nicaraguan barracks, while the Marietta covered the cuntrels in the port.

Commender Fullam, finding that the civil authorities were incapable af maintaining regulations ar order, decided to ignare the authorities and deal with the ane organized and disciplined farce here under Gen. Estrada, commanding the Nicaraguan forces. The Nicaraguan officers and men arrested were delivered to Gen. Estrada, who was advised that they would be held responsible. Notice also was served on the Honduran and Nicaraguan authorities that anather outbreak would be demanded and punishment shauld be inflicted upon all af the perpetrators of the autrage.

Commander Fullam says if Davis dies the perpetrators will be tried for murder, presumably by court-martial, and his family ones hanged at the yard arm in front of the port. The Paducah was ready to sail for Cutia at noon and will now remain here for the present.

STATUE OF CIVIL WAR HERO UNVEILED

GEN. G. B. McCLELLAN'S MEMORY HONORED BY ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

Address by President—His Pays Tributs to the General and to Women—Advocates Peace of Righteousness and Justice.

Washington, May 3.—With appropriate civic and military ceremonies, and in the presence of a distinguished audience, the heroic equestrian statue of bronze of Maj. Gen. George B. McClellan, erected under the auspices of the Army of the Potomac, was unveiled here Thursday. President Roosevelt made the principel speech and, with Gen. Frederick D. Grant on his right and Gav. Stokes, of New Jersey, on his left, witnessed an impesing military parade af regulars and militia.

Widow and Son Present.

Mrs. McClellan, the general's widow, Mayor George B. McClellan, of New York, son of the general, and Dr. George McClellas, af New Jersey, a nephew, who pulled the string releasing the flags in which the statue was enveloped, occupied seats on the president's stand.

Brig. Gen. Henry C. Dwight, U. S. volunteers, the president of the Society af the Army of the Potomac, presided. As the great sectioned flags which enveloped the statue swung to the breeze, there was an exclamation af admiration from the vast assemblage, accampanied by the firing of a salute and the playing af "Star Spangled Banner."

Speach of the President.

The president delivered a typica speech, in which he touched upan a variety of subjects, including war, peace, national pride, the family, and the influences that make for nationhood and fratarnity. After extending a greeting on behalf of the nation ta Mrs. McClellan and her son and athers, the president said:

"To Gen. McClellan it was given ta command in some of the hardest fought battles and most important campaigns in the great war af his hemisphere, so that his name will be forever linked with the mighty memories that arise when we speak af Antietam and South Mountain, af Oaks and Malvern, so that we never can speak af the great Army af the Potomac without having in mind for us the figure of Gen. McClellan, the man who organized and first led it. There was also given to him the peculiar gift, one that is possessed by very few men, to combine the qualities that wan him the enthusiastic love and admiration of the soldiers who fought with and under him, and the qualities that in civil life endeared him peculiarly to all who came in contact with him.

"We have become accustomed to accepting as a matter af caurse certain things which would bo well nigh impossible in any country save ours, so that it seems but natural that the president af the United States, when he drives dawa to take part in a celebration like this, should have as his personal aids both the sons af the man who ware the blue and the sons af the man who ware the gray. As Americans, when we glary in what was done under Grant, Sherman, Thomas, Sheridan, McClellan, Farragut, we can an less glory in the valar, and the devotion to duty as it was given to them to see the duty af the man who faught under Lee and Stonewall Jackson, and the Johnsons and Stewarts on the other side.

Peace on Right Terms.

"We have listened recently to a great deal af talk about peace. It is the duty af all af us to strive for peace, provided that it comes on the right terms. I believe that the man who does the best work for the state in peace is the very man who at need will do well in war. If peace is worth having at all it must be based upon righteousness, af faith, far timidity, far the avoidance af duty, have nane af it. Seek the peace that comes to the just man armed, who will dara to defend his rights if the need should arise. Seek the peace granted to a man who will wrong no man and will not submit to wrong in return. Seek the peace that will come to us as the peace af righteousness, the peace af justice. Ask peace because your deeds and your powers warrant you in asking it, and da not put yaurself in the position to crave it as something to be granted ar withheld at the whim af ane athar."

Tributs to the Women.

The president said there was one person in this country he put ahead af his soldier—"the really good woman, the good wife and mother who has done her full duty." She often has a pretty hard time, said the president, and he added:

"Yet the woman who thus with labor and anxiety brings up children is blessed among women, blessed among men. I do nat pity her in the least. I respect and admire her and hold her worthy af admiration and honar. The selfish creature, man or woman, who reaches old age having achieved ease by shirking duty, is to be heartily despised and not envied. Our admiration is reserved for him or for her who has done the real work which makes the generation she in its turn to do its work in the country."

Addresses were also made by Gen. King, Gen. O. O. Howard and Gen. Granville M. Dodge.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Fight With Wild Beast.

Mankato.—James Mullen, overseer of the county poor farm, tells of a thrilling adventure that he had with a strange animal that he and two other men discovered in a cave on the bank of the Le Sueur river.

With his hired man, Tom Jones, and George Folsom, he was walking along the bluff at about dusk, when they discovered the cavern, about the mouth of which were piled skulls and other smelt bones of cattle and sheep and smeller animals. They sent Mullen's dog into the cave, and a fierce fight ensued that was terminated by the animal dashing out, followed by the dog. Mullen struck the beast on the head with a spade as it fled past him, but this did not stop it.

After another brief encounter with the dog, the animal made off. Mullen states that it was as large as a mountain lion or leopard, but he could not say what it was. Mullen expressed the opinion that the animal is the same one that has been seen about Lamberton and in this county during the spring, and that recently tried to pull down a steer on the Columbus Ballard farm near by.

To Test Value of Clay.

Mankato.—Prof. N. H. Winchell, the state geologist, and Julius Hortvet, the state chemist, arrived in the city to examine the deposits of blue clay along the banks of the Blue Earth river. They took samples from several points on the banks of the river and examined the surroundings.

The banks of blue clay are believed to be the ones spoken of in the notes of Le Sueur, the French explorer, who sent several shiploads of it back to France more than two centuries ago in the belief that it was rich in minerals. Recently there has been a good deal of talk about the mineral deposits in the Blue Earth and Le Sueur river valleys, and Geologist Winchell has expressed that Le Sueur may not have been mistaken.

Gold, copper and precious stones have been found at different points in the valley.

Woman Inspector.

St. Paul.—Mrs. Perry Starkweather of Minneapolis was appointed to the position of inspector for the state labor department, the new position created by the legislature. Mrs. Starkweather has been making a study of the labor laws and the condition of women in this and other states. She drew up the bill which was passed and signed by the governor.

The duty of the woman inspector is to visit places where women are employed and to make recommendations for their welfare. It is said that there are 80,000 women in the state working for wages and that their annual earnings are approximately $60,000,000.

Plant Rainbow Trout.

Faribault.—Ten cans of rainbow trout fry have been received by the Rice County Protective association and have been placed in Fall creek, a few miles east of here. The association also expects to secure about twenty cans of black bass fry and about 2,000,000 young pike to be placed in the lakes near Faribault. The association has had a number of the best lakes seined and many rough fish until the lakes food were taken out and destroyed.

Nurses' Board Chosen.

St. Paul.—Governor Johnson has named the five members of the state board of examination and registration of nurses. Under the law one member must be a physician and the others graduate nurses. The members selected are: Dr. Jennette Nelson, St. Paul; Julia Rommell, Minneapolis, president of Hennepin County Nurses' association; Bertha Johnson, St. Paul, surgical nurse city and county hospital; Helen Wadsworth, St. Paul, teacher of dietetics in St. Luke's hospital, and Eleanor Hamilton, Minneapolis. The board will shortly meet to organize.

Memorial Day Order.

St. Paul.—Levi Longfellow, department commander of the Minnesota G. A. R., has issued his order for the annual observance of Memorial day to the G. A. R. posts in the state. Memorial day comes on May 30, the preceding Sunday, May 29, will be Memorial Sunday, when the posts will attend divine services in a body. He urges May 24 as a day for memorial exercises in the schools.

Didn't Feed Horse.

Minneapolis.—Abraham Jacob, a peddler was sentenced to the workhouse for thirty days for abusing his horse by leaving him in the barn for three days without food or water.

Use of Net Costs $100.

Mankato.—William Meyer of Rapidan was arraigned on the charge of illegal fishing with a gill net in the Blue Earth river at Cable Mill and pleaded guilty. His fine was $100 and costs, which he paid. The charge was preferred by P. H. Jordan, state game and fish warden, who captured six nets at Cable Mill fishing with nets. They had three sacks of fish of all kinds, including black bass. These nets, seized in a boat. It was decided to arraign only one, and the others helped pay the fine.

NEWS NOTES.

Prescott.—A number of cases of smallpox are reported in this vicinity.

St. Paul.—Thieves are the brass hinges from several doors in the court house.

Owatonna.—Sunday baseball will be allowed in Owatonna this season for the first time in many years.

Mankato.—Adolph Soldis captured a large pelican on Swan lake. The bird measured nine feet from tip to tip.

Minneapolis.—Enough beer was sold in this city in April to give the government a revenue of nearly $20,000 notwithstanding the cool temperature.

Minneapolis.—Alexander Coffitt, 60 years old, a resident of Pulda, cut his throat with a razor, dieing almost instantly. Domestic troubles are said to have caused him to commit the deed.

Mankato.—Robert Bird fell thirty feet from the top of a tree, striking the ground and breaking three ribs. He was eating off the top of a tree when the limb that he was standing on broke.

Mankato.—Frank Ottenbach, accused of misappropriating $1,000 which was intrusted to him by a bank for the purpose of carrying out a business deal, was arrested in Montana and brought back to this city.

Belgrade.—O. O. Likestooten and his youngest daughter, of Brooten, were struck by the Winnipeg flyer and thrown down a bundred feet. Mr. Likestooten was instantly killed and the girl was seriously, if not fatally, injured.

Duluth.—Capt. W. H. Singer has returned from Isle Royale and reports that three trappers who wintered at Chippewa Harbor on that island caught nearly one hundred lynx, besides a fair number of other fur-bearing animals.

Crookston.—Arnold Starby, aged 11, was instantly killed in the town of Gurden by Albert Singored, aged 16. The boys were playing when Arnold's shot gun was accidentally discharged by Singered, blowing the top of Starby's head off.

Madella.—Ole H. Erickson, a farmer living five miles southeast of here, shot himself in the temple with a 32-caliber revolver. He was fifty years of age and leaves a widow. No real cause is known, although he had been despondent of late.

St. Paul.—The Duluth & Iron Range railroad has filed with the state land commissioner 75,000 acres of state land, almost completing its land grant. The land is almost all in St. Louis county, the rest in Lake and Cook, and none of it bears minerals so far as known.

La Crescent.—Ernie, the 3-year-old son of Frank Smith, fell down the cold air draught of the furnace at his father's residence. The only way of rescuing him was by tearing down the chimney, which was instantly done. He was not injured in any way.

St. Paul.—Governor Johnson has announced the membership of the state conservation commission, which will spend $150,000 of state money in the next two years in acquiring new land adjoining the capitol. It consists of J. W. Lusk, R. T. O'Connor and Frank O'Mera, all of St. Paul.

Minneapolis.—For writing the best essay on insurance, Earl W. Huntley of Spring Valley, a member of the senior class, has been awarded the $50 prize offered by Twin City insurance men to university students. His subject was "The Fundamentals of Life Insurance and Its Economic Importance."

Wells.—Someone visited the wood pile of Rev. Recce and helped himself to firewood. He happened to drop a letter from his pocket while picking up the wood and in this way his identity has become known. The preacher offers to return the letter and to suppress his identity if he will return the wood.

St. Paul.—O. M. Hall, of Red Wing, gets the six-year term on the state tax commission, Samuel Lord, of Kasson, gets the four-year term and Franklin McVey, of Minneapolis, gets the two-year term. The three newly appointed commissioners met in Gov. Johnson's office and organized and cut straws to see who he was to get the six and short term.

St. Paul.—Game Warden Stevens of Anoka arrested Dolphin Bibeau of Centerville for shooting a duck. Stevens, while driving, saw Bibeau hunting and he stopped behind some brush. Bibeau walked along until he was only a few feet from Stevens; then a mallard flew low and the hunter bagged it. Bibeau was much surprised to hear the game warden's command, "Come with me," before the smoke had died away. His duck cost him a $10 fine and costs, or $17.80.

Mankato.—William Rademacher of Sumpter narrowly escaped receiving fatal injuries in a blacksmith shop. His broncho rebelled at having a "horning rope" on its nose and became very violent, striking promiscuously with its fore feet. The horse planted its sharp shod hoof squarely on his left cheek. One eye was gouged out and the nose scraped from the face.

Morton.—Adolph Kruppke, living three miles south of here, cut his throat with a razor in a fit of despondency. He was a well-to-do farmer and had a grown up family. He committed suicide.

CHURCH ALL WORLD.

PASTOR WHO REACHES FOLLOWERS THROUGH NEWSPAPERS.

Some Facts Concerning the Life Work of Rev. Charles T. Russell Who Has Been Misrepresented.

Allegheny, Pa.—One of the busiest men in the United States is Charles T. Russell, of Allegheny.

Some people call him Rev. Charles T. Russell, but he himself disclaims all titles, believing that as Jesus and the apostles disclaimed them so should he.

Russell is the leader of a religious movement which has its followers all over the world. He is not the originator of a sect, but simply claims membership in the original church institution of the scriptures, therein described simply as "the church, whose names are written in heaven."

It has no houses of worship of its own, and Pastor Russell's plan for reaching his numerous and widely-scattered followers with his discourses is a unique one.

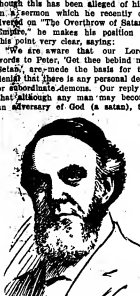
He travels a great deal, preaching in opera houses in the large cities of the country, and through arrangements with various newspapers gladly printing the discourses because of the increased circulation which accrues to them through the subscriptions of Russell's many followers.

Thus he preaches each Sunday to a congregation of hundreds of thousands.

Russell has been considerably disturbed of late over false and misleading accounts of his teachings and his plans which have appeared in many newspapers.

Among other things, it was recently announced that he was endeavoring to get control of Dowie's Zion City and turn it into a home for his followers.

"Nothing could be more untrue," he declares. "I have no desire for Zion City, and there have been no negotiations whatever in the matter."



It has also been published that Russell is "the no-hell preacher"—because he teaches there is no place of future fiery torment.

Pastor Russell declares that he does not believe in hell as a place of eternal torment, but holds that the "sheol" of the Old Testament and the "hades" of the New Testament is the state of death—that mankind, because of original sin, is under a death sentence, which affects all mentally, morally and physically, and culminates in the tomb.

He holds that redemption was from the tomb, that Christ died for humanity's sins, and that as a result of this redemption all mankind is ultimately to be released from this state of death and given instruction which will lead to eternal life, if they are obedient to such leading, in the Millennial age.

Now does Pastor Russell doubt in the least the existence of Satan, though this has been alleged of him. In a sermon which he recently delivered on "The Overthrow of Satan's Empire," he makes his position on this point very clear, saying:

"We are aware that the Lord's words to Peter, 'Get thee behind me, Satan,' are made the basis for the denial that there is any personal devil or subordinate demons. Our reply is that although any man may become an adversary of God (a satan), the scriptures everywhere speak of the prime mover in evil as 'the devil,' 'the satan.' He is the great murderer. He murdered our first parents by deceiving them, and thus induced them to be disobedient to their Creator."

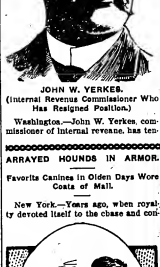
It was recently stated in several newspapers that in a divorce trial, which resulted in the legal separation of Pastor Russell and his wife, about a year ago, he had said, "his wife was like that of a Sybyline, in that it went out to any spirit which responded."



This statement distressed Russell considerably, inasmuch as the truth was that the remark in question was attributed to Russell by a witness during the trial, and was emphatically denied on the stand by him.

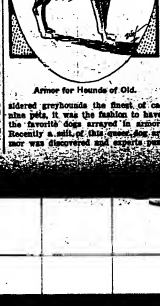
It has been said of Russell that "money pours into his office coffers like water," and that his sect is immensely wealthy. This is not the case.

"We have sufficient," he says, "and we never take up collections, but we have an enormous wealth. We care only for enough to enable us to spread the gospel to humanity wherever it is needed."

YERKES QUITS FEDERAL POST.

Internal Revenue Commissioner Takes Up Law Practice.

JOHN W. YERKES.
(Internal Revenue Commissioner Who Has Resigned Position.)



Washington.—John W. Yerkes, commissioner of internal revenue, has tendered his resignation to the president, who has accepted it with expressions of regret. Mr. Yerkes resigns to enter the practice of law in this city, having associated himself with one of its most prominent legal firms. Secretary Cortelyou was loath to lose Commissioner Yerkes' services in the treasury department, but the strong inducements made led to his resignation.

Mr. Yerkes became commissioner of internal revenue December 20, 1900, and has been in office over six years. His conduct of his office has always been highly satisfactory to the administration. Mr. Yerkes for many years has been prominent in Republican politics of Kentucky, and was at one time the nominee of his party for governor of that state. He has for years been recognized by the president as the head of his party, and his recommendations as to patronage have been followed. Efforts were recently made to have Mr. Yerkes accept the Republican nomination this year, but he declined, knowing of the intentions as to practicing law in this city.

GIRLS WHO SHOULD AVOID THE CITIES

Not All Are Fitted for the Conditions That Confront Them in Business Life.

There are several sorts of girls who should not attempt to come to the city to earn their living.

One is the sweetly dependent girl—the girl for whom the folks at home, particularly an adoring circle of men, have always fetched and carried.

The girl who is sentimental or supersensitive has a difficult fight to make when she comes into the city. Those who have positions to offer want the best possible service for the money they are paying. They do not ask why you are earning your living, nor will they express the idea that it holds of you to support your mother.

They may find that out in time and respect you the more for it, but the great question in their mind is "Can she do the work?" "Will she keep our interests uppermost in her mind during business hours?"

There are hundreds of harassed, nerve-worn employers in every large city who are willing to pay salaries to girls who know how to spell and punctuate, and are willing to take an interest in the business. But they haven't a single moment for the sentimental, supersensitive girl.

The girl who gives as little work as possible for the money she receives had better not attempt to live in a large city or she who feels that a salary of six or eight dollars entitles her to do half-hearted work.

The girl who has not constantly of good clothes and a little sum of money saved to tide her over the period of waiting for a position had better give up the idea of coming to a large city until she has acquired both.

But the girl who has a trade at her finger tips, who has come to realize that in her home town she can rise so higher, if she is an expert stenographer or bookkeeper can keep the affairs of her employer locked in her breast, who has neat clothes and some money; if she has faith in herself as a worker, she will make a much better living and have better opportunities in the large city than would be possible in the small town.

NEW MILLINERY IDEAS

Styles, Shapes and Decorations Favored by Leaders in Realm of Fashion.

Large hats are raised at one side or at the back, and masses of tulle, malise or ribbon and flowers fill in the angle.

Malline is seen in greater quantities than ever, and entire bats of this material trimmed with drooping plumes are among the dressy models.

The fine mesh laces are taking the place of the Irish lace so long popular for hats for evening wear, and are almost invariably trimmed with feathers in some form.

Hats of white lace, tulle or chiffon are frequently relieved by a single red or pink rose, a bunch of violets or a cluster of colored mesaline ribbon or malline.

Flower and foliage hats will be worn to some extent, but only certain shapes, invariably small, are appropriate.

Both coarse and fine straws will be seen, and leghorns are shown in many attractive shapes and colors.

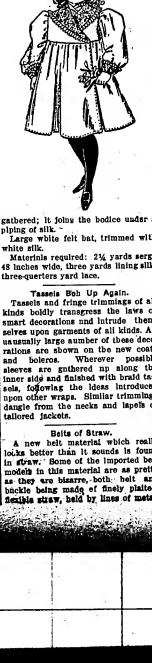
Wings adorn the hats that are designed for wear with tailor-made suits, and quills are much in vogue.

There are many novelties in fancy feathers, and all sorts of shapes and shadings are obtainable.

Hat pins with large, round heads are much in evidence, and are so placed as to add to the trimming effect.

The "Parisian tilt" is an important feature in the new hats, the correct angle being most important in giving smartness to the creation.

There are indications that the shepherdess shape will be popular, and the directoire modes will be worn with some types of gown, but the preference seems to be for medium-sized rather than the exaggerated types of bendgear.



Latest in Trimmings.

The new trimmings in vogue for evening dresses are of dead dull gold, mixed with copper lights, really verging into bronze, while the garishness of silver is toned down by a process of oxidation. The most exclusive French houses show a predominance of dull and bright gun-metal ornaments, and even pewter effects are seen. However, in every way, museums and collections have been rifled in order to get some empire pieces to be corrected by copied. Extremely pretty is the dull silver tissue mixed with dead gold thet forms a great many of the light trimmings on girls' hell-gowns, and even on millinery.

OF SERGE AND SILK

Useful and Smart Empire Coat Suitable for Girl of from 6 to 8 Years.

A useful and smart coat is here shown; it is in fine cream serge, lined with thin silk. The empire bodice is double-breasted, the right front fastening over the left. The collar is of the serge, faced with coarse lace over silk, and the edge trimmed with pleated ribbon; the circuler cuffs to the full sleeves are faced and trimmed to match the collar. The full skirt is gathered; it joins the bodice under a piping of silk.

Large white felt hat, trimmed with white silk.

Materials required: 2¼ yards serge 46 inches wide, three yards lining silk, three-quarters yard lace.

Tassels Sub Up Again.

Tassels and fringe trimmings of all kinds boldly transgress the laws of smart decorations and intrude themselves upon garments of all kinds. An unusually large number of these decorations are shown on the new coats and bolcros. Wherever possible sleeves are gathered up along the inner side and finished with braid tassels, following the ideas introduced upon other wraps. Similar trimmings dangle from the necks and lapels of tailored jackets.

Belts of Straw.

A new belt material which really looks better than it sounds is found in straw. Some of the imported belt models in this material are as pretty as they are bizarre, both belt and buckle being made of finely plaited, flexible straw, held by lines of metal.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The money appropriated by the state to help fix roads will come very handy in this part of the country and the town supervisors and road overseers had ought to see that they get full value recieved for every dollar of it.

With out accusing either, Thief River Falls or Red Lake Falls parties for being responsiable for the loss of that county seat removal petition, did it not strike you as being strange that the thing could not get lost until after the lawyers gat done with it?

Now that it is getting to be time of year to put in your crop, it is a good idea for each one to look out and get in his own crop in as good a shape as possiable, for there is no prospects that the socialist party will get into power this fall and an equal divide up be had.

It made us aimost weep when we read the account of the last meeting of the lawyers to have the final argument over the corps of the petition for county seat removal, on the 25th of last March. Oh what a look of injured innocents they must have put on when it was reported to them oficialy by the county auditor that the petition could not be found. But of course it was no loss to them, as the tax payers pay the bills, and of course Thief Rvier Falls would get up another one, and they could have an other two years lawsuit.

We are of the opinion, that Jim O'Brien and T S. Jacobson was not aware of the position they were in at the time they signed the resolutions to satisfy John Eastman, as they were afterwards. We got out of the director buisness for the sake of harmony in the company. T. S. Jacobson has resigned. If Jim O'Brien has the true interest of the Company at heart and wants to see peace and harmony in the family he had better follow his example, as we did not do all the hard work that we have done to make that company a success in building a grind stone to grind the ax of John Eastman.

Put A Bell On Them.

In the Chicago slaughter house, when they are going to butcher sheep they always select a good large one from the flock and train him to lead the other sheep up to the slaughtering shute. They put a bell on him and all the other sheep follow him and when he has led a big flock of them up into the shute where they can be easily caught and their throats cut, the leader is let out at one side so he can go and get an other bunch up to be be slaughtered.

We see that Thief River Falls has adopted this method to get the farmers to sign a petition for a law suit. They pick up a farmer to go throu the townships with them to lead the other farmers up to the slaughter pen. Ole Vattendahl is to ware the bell in the territory between the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers, and J. H. Westerfaill will lead the lambs into the lawyers slaughtering shute on the north side of Red Lake River. It would be more like business if some one came out from Thief River Falls and done their own talking.

Flowage Cases Settled.

The five suite instituted by farmers residing along the Clearwater river in the Townships of Winsor and Greenwood Clearwater county and which were to have come up for trial, at a an adjourned tern of court, for Clearwater Co. At Bagley, which convened last Tuesday, were amicably settled, these suits for damages were broght against the Clearwater Loging Co, a corporation for damming up the water in said Clearwater river to facilate and minemize the cost in floating their logs down the said river, that by dramming up the water of said river in large reservoirs, and then when they were ready to float the logs, to open up, these large dams and reservoirs when the river was full of logs caused the water in said river to rise above the high water mark and overflow its banks, and destroyed and damage the crops of said farmers, these cases were finally amicably settled by the Logging Company paying substantial damages after fighting those cases in court for the past two years. Attorney J. A. Hendricks, of Fosston, attorney for the farmers, is entitled to the credit of obtaining the rights of these farmers, it having been generally conceded that the logging company could not be held for these damages. F. D. Larabee, of Minneapolis, was retained by Mr. Hendricks as associate council in these cases

The outcome of these cases has been watched with considerable interest by a number of farmers residing along the Clearwater river and its tributaries, and who have been similarly damaged.—Thirteen Towns.

Childless Men and Women.

There are parts of the world where girl babies are drowned like superfluous kittens and others in which it is not uncommon for the daughters in the large families of the poor to be sold by their parents into lives of prostitution. On the other hand, the pages of history are filled with examples of the devoted lives of childless men and women who have worked unselfishly for the good of their kind. Bachelors and virgins have been the saints of the world, and the childless are the philanthropists, the founders of colleges, hospitals, art collections and libraries, the philosophers, the great writers, leaders and thinkers of the race. Plato, Joan of Arc, Bernardin, George Washington, David Hume, Locke, Spinoza, Thomas Carlyle, Florence Nightingale, Ruskin and Herbert Spencer are only a few of the great names in this class. An interesting volume could be written of the indebtedness of the world to childless men and women.—New York Medical Journal.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Two Ways to Ask.

A traveler in the Highlands observed while at a tavern in a small village a very beautiful collie. At his request the owner was pointed out to him, and he asked the man what he would take for the dog.

"Well, be taking him to America?" the Scot asked cautiously.

"Certainly, if you sell him to me."

"If no coot part wie him," the dog-owner then said emphatically. "I'm unckle fond-like o' him." And liberal offers were no inducement.

To his astonishment, the traveler later saw the dog sold to a drover for half what he had offered and after the drover had disappeared requested an explanation. "You said that you could not sell him," he remarked.

A twinkle came into the highlander's eyes.

"Noo, I didna say I'd no sell him, I said I couldna part wie him," he said. "Robbie, he hame in two or three days frae noo, but I reckless ask him to swim across the ocean. No; that 'woul' be too muckle to ask."—Harper's Weekly.

Beeny's Best Room

By Kathryn Jarboe

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

She was christened Verbeny. By the time she was old enough to recognize her own name, it had degenerated to Beeny.

Mr. Lombard, with his acres to till and his cattle to feed, did not believe in love or affection. Mrs. Lombard paid little heed to the child.

At the age of 16 she was still going to school because she was less in the way there than she was at home.

It was late in the autumn when Verbeny was 16 that the new teacher came to the school. The man's name was John Cox, and he was as uncompromising as the name. He was tall, long limbed and broad-shouldered, with every muscle tense and rigid. He made but a short address to the school, and then he called the roll from the old list made by the old teacher.

"We will take a moment to change this," he said. "We will make a new roll, and as I call these names you will each step up to my desk.

"Beeny Lombard!" The firm voice hesitated, a puzzled look glanced across the stern eyes.

"Beeny Lombard!" Verbeny rose slowly and moved to the edge of the platform.

"Are you Beeny Lombard? And what does Beeny stand for?"

"Why—why, Verbeny."

"Verbeny?"

"Yes, Verbeny," she faltered.

"Oh, Verbena!" He spoke quickly, almost curtly, and yet the voice that rechristened Verbeny opened for her the way into a new world, a world that was all faith, oil love, nil adoration.

It was late that afternoon when Verbena reached home. If Mrs. Lombard had looked at her daughter she would have seen that the dreamy, listless eyes were wide awake; that the static lash, open lips were closed, but closed in a smile that dimpled at the corners.

It was not easy to say. Verbena wanted the best room; she wanted the redding up of the best room; she had brought the rose for the vase in the best room; oil the girls she knew had the best room for—for their beaux.

"Hev it cr yo' want it," her mother laughingly answered. "Mind what yo say yer lessy don't hurt it though."

"I'll only have one beau." The words were, whispered as Verbena crossed the kitchen.

On the calendar, the days that followed would have been called a month. In Verbena's mind they stood for days of life, for all time. In the school, ordar was being brought out of chaos. But she only worked at night, only in the late afternoons and early mornings. All through the school hours, her eyes never left the master's face and, all the while he seemed quite unconscious of the wistful eyes that followed him.

The morning that ended it all began just like other mornings of the month. Verbena went at her desk in the school some ten minutes before the first bell rang. John Cox, absorbed in the papers before him, had hardly noticed her entrance.

Suddenly there was a sound of running feet and a voice, big and clear with excitement, cried: "It's a reward for o murderer. An' they're goin' to put one on the schoolhouse, too. They think ther fellor's out here. An' he killed a man back east. He's named Jared Conklin and the sheriff'll be here to-day to look for him."

The words were being repeated now, back and forth. They were almost indistinguishable, but Verbena had heard them all once, and she had seen John Cox's white fingers close hard on the desk in front of him. Before he could make the slightest movement, her hand was on his. "I'll hide you where they'll never find you."

If he hesitated, Verbena did not know it. It was the first time he led the way in the shadows of the bedgcs that she knew so well, down close to the silent farmhouse. Subconsciously, she had remembered that her father and mother had gone that morning into town, but breathlessly she ordered the two to wait until she had been into the house, until she had unlocked the door of the best room; her room.

"I cannot stay here!"

"You can stay here and be safe only if I can get you away. Promise me that you will stay." "I promise," he answered.

It was Verbena who rang the morning bell at the school, some ten minutes late, it was true, but the boys and girls were all too excited to note the time. She listened to the wondering comments on the schoolmaster's absence. With the others she hurried out to read the notice when it was placarded on the schoolhouse door. With the others she read the description of the murderer. She compared this description with their teacher. How every heart echoed the conclusion as it was whooped from the other lips. John Cox and Jared Conklin were but one and the same man!

The search in that part of the country for Jared Conklin was only a matter of days. The news came that he had been seen farther west, in Arizona, in California, and the sheriff vanished that way. The man had received warning and escaped again. But the story seemed interminable to the man and the two lived for Friday.

One night she came to him and told him that she was ready. Noiselessly they left the house, Verbena leading him by the hand as though he were a child.

"Our horses are at the lower gate," she whispered.

"I am only going with you until you are safe. And I must be back before the day dawns."

"Must you go, Verbena?" "Yes—I must go with you. I told you that I must until you are safely out of this part of the country. There is no road, but I have been over this path every day for the last two weeks. I know it and the horses know it. There is no time to be lost. Come."

They were hardly in their saddles, but Verbena was already off. It seemed to him that they rode for hours. Then they began to climb ever so slightly, the pace to slacken ever so little.

At last she stopped and slid from the horse. "From here, poor way is down," she said. "Give Jocko his head for ten minutes. By that time you'll strike the trail. A freight stops at Red Tank Siding for water at 5:45. I—" Her voice broke. A quivering sob slipped from her lips.

The man drew nearer to her, stretched his hands toward her, then clenched them fast together. Verbena! I did kill him. Verbena, but—"

"Oh, I know it," she cried, impulsively, "but I wanted that you be honest with me; just with me!"

In another instant she was in his arms, clinging to him, sobbing convul-

"I've Paid More Than I Owed, Verbena."

sively, and he was holding her close, as if his faith in me, Verbena," he whispered. "Trust me! That's all that I can ask now."

Verbena did not answer in words, but she touched his lips with hers for just an instant and drew away from him. "You've barely time to catch that freight."

And so she hurried him off, and yet the words that he carried with him down the-headlong slide of rocks were: "I do trust you; I do believe you."

It was o curious betrothal, perhaps, but Verbena never realized for an instant that she was betrothed to John Cox. A few months later, she received a little sprig of verbena enclosed in a blank sheet of paper. She did not know that it had grown in a prison yard, and she accepted it as a message that the waiting might be long.

Twice the heat room was opened for funerals, for Mrs. Lombard died soon after her husband. Then more years passed, and every day Verbena tended her sanctuary.

At last love came to her there. Just at nightfall, when Verbena was closing the house, she saw an unfamiliar figure coming toward her. And yet her heart had recognized it. Instead she turned and unlocked the best room and threw the door wida open.

For was it not in the best room that all girls received their—their beaux?

"I've paid more than I owed, Verbena." He spoke slowly in the old, low voice. "It's a long story, Verbena."

"I don't want to hear it, John."

"Have you thought of me always as 'John Cox?'" he asked. "I was Jared Conklin, a murderer. It was a quarrel. I killed him in reality to save myself. If I had not run away, I might have got off, but when I went back—because I loved you—I had to pay the full penalty of the law. And now I've paid it and overpaid it."

Verbena was looking at him closely, thinking how little he had changed since that first morning in the old schoolroom. Possibly her mind led his back there, for he said: "Do you remember that first morning at school? I wondered even then if I should ever be free to ask you to marry me. Now I am free, and you are—you are just as adorable, just as sweet."

"That's what mother used to say," she whispered, "about that sweet green stuff in the garden. It might be shriveled and mildewed, the years have been long, John—but it would be just as sweet."

THE ESTIMABLE FAMILY.

"Reynolds," said Millionaire Banks to his valet, "go round to the house of that little girl whom I ran down with the auto this morning and extend to the family my sincere regrets and sympathy. Also give them this $50 bill. I understand that they are very poor and in want."

Accordingly the valet obeyed. When he returned his master met him at the door.

"Well, Reynolds?"

"The father wished me to say, sir, that he hoped you wouldn't take the affair too much to heart. As for the family, they all feel very grateful to you sir, and couldn't bring themselves to accept your very kind offnl."

"A most estimable family! Yet I wonder why they didn't accept the money?"

"The father said such matters should be arranged through his lawyer, sir."—Judge.

A Fist Story.

"Trout protection! Nonsense!" said a gunner of local eminence. "Trout are simply able to protect themselves. Look at their depredations among ducks, for example, and you will agree with me that it's the birds that need protection. We gunners think for a trout to jump from the water, seize a duck by the neck, drag the unfortunate bird into the depths sufficiently to leave its feet sticking in the air, where it can get no purchase upon the water, and then drown it. Then the trout picks the feathers from the bird, eats it at its leisure and swims away for the protection of its courts. Are there any fishermen? None? Too bad. This would be a motch for one of their fish stories."

PUT RELIGIOUS DUTY SECOND.

Stern Laws of Business Come First, Says Austrian Court.

An interesting case at law, which centered on the observance of the Sabbath as a day of rest, was decided in Vienna recently. A merchant, says the American Israelite, discharged a clerk on account of a piece of duty. Among the charges against him was that he come to the store late in the morning because he attended services at the synagogue in order to say Kaddish—the prayer for the dead—for his father. The clerk argued that it was his privilege and his duty to say the prayer for his departed parent, while the merchant, who was also a religious man, maintained that "if Moses had known that a man had to pay 8,000 guilden a year rent he would have made differ ent laws." The judge would not allow such an argument, but decided in favor of the merchant, because the daily attendance at the synagogue could not be considered the right of the clerk without the consent of the employer."

"After drinking coffee for breakfast I always felt languid and dull, having no ambition to get to my morning duties. Then in about an hour or so a weak, nervous derangement of the heart and stomach would come over me with such force I would frequently have to lie down.

"At other times I had severe headaches; stomach finally became affected and digestion so impaired that I had serious chronic dyspepsia and constipation. A lady, for many years State President of the W. C. T. U., talked to me and had been greatly benefited by quitting coffee and using Postum Food Coffee; she was also relieved of her hurts with asthma. She said it was no cross to quit coffee when she found she could have as delicious an article as Postum.

"Another lady, who had been troubled with chronic dyspepsia for years, found immediate relief on ceasing coffee and beginning Postum twice a day. She was wholly cured. Still another friend told me that Postum Food Coffee was a Godsend to her, her heart trouble and her indigestion having relieved after leaving off coffee and taking Postum.

"So many such cases came to my notice that I concluded coffee was the cause of my trouble and I quit and took up Postum. I am more than pleased to say that my days of trouble have disappeared. I am well and happy." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

SEEDING COMMENCED IN WESTERN CANADA.

The Prospects for a Large Acreage to Be Sown in Wheat.

St. Paul, April 24, 1907.—Word has been rebeived at the office of the Canadian Government in St. Paul that seeding has commenced at various points throughout Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The heavy snowfall during the past winter has left the ground in splendid shape for successful seeding operations. The fine weather of the past few days has taken much of the frost out of the ground and during next week there will scarcely be a district in which the seeder is not being operated. The most optimistic conditions exist and in all districts the farmers are busy getting things in shape. There will be a very large acreage sown in spring wheat, oats and barley. At many points throughout the three provinces the newcomers are busy unloading their stock and effects, working night and day in order to get on their farms and become active agencies in the work during the year 1907 the banner year in grain production in Western Canada. As compared with districts many hundred miles further south than this, it will be seen that Western Canada ranks amongst the first in the line of seeding operations for the present year. It is safe to say that farmers who get in their crop before the 20th or 24th of May, will receive magnificent returns. A number of those coming in this spring, who had not their land prepared last fall, will break up enough land to get in a crop of oats and barley and probably some flax. This, together with the vegetables they will plant, will give them ample food for themselves and stock during the coming summer and winter. These early seeding operations are not confined to one district, but are spread over a country 900 miles by 400 miles in width.

The agents of the Canadian Government, located at different points throughout the United States, are busy giving information regarding the many new districts that are being made available for settlers. Low railway rates, information and literature are given on application to the agent, whose name appears in advertisement elsewhere in this paper.

ADVANTAGE A WIDOW HAS.

At Least They Don't Have to Sit and Watch Husband's Flirt.

"I saw such o pretty womon at a dinadvantage to other night," the little real widow was saying. "She was married. She was sitting at a table with some other pretty women and handsome men and her husband. Her husband began to flirt outrageously with one of the women. I wish you could have seen the look that came over her face. Everybody in the room saw how distressed she was.

"Now, what I want to know is this. Why didn't she go to work and flirt with om of the handsome men to get even? Anyone of them was quite ready and willing, but, as wives never seem to be able to do that. They just sit ready to cry, with everybody noticing.

"That's the advantage we real widows have over wives. We don't have to sit and watch our husbands flirting with other women. We know where they are, and we also know that we have over they may chance to be doing, they are probably not flirting."

FAMILY'S SKIN TROUBLES.

Eczema, Heat Rash, and Scalp Affections Afflict Different Members, But Cuticura Cures Them.

"My wife had eczema for five or six years. It was on her face and would break out and go. We tried two or three Cuticura Remedies a trial. We did so and she has never had a sign of eczema for four years. I myself used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment some time ago for falling hair. I now have a very heavy head of hair. We used Cuticura Remedies for our baby, who was nearly bald when young, but has very nice hair now. She is very fleshy, and we had so much trouble with heat that we would bathe her with Cuticura Soap and then apply Cuticura Ointment, it would dry the best up so much quicker than anything else. TILE DRAINS.

How They Should Be Laid and a Device That Will Aid.

Where there is a sufficient grade, there is little to contend with in laying tile. From the point where the water stands, the shortest possible cut should be taken through the dry land to the outlet. If, however, there is a great deal of compact blue clay between the marsh and the desired outlet, it is sometimes more economical to run the ditch around these deposits than to attempt to cut through them. If the ditch is cut through such clay, it is advisable to fill in a layer of coarse gravel just before filling in the clay. This will prevent the finer particles of the clay from entering and slopping up the tile.

When the land is nearly level and it is difficult to tell just where the ditch should be run to "get the fall," a simple device can be made similar to the one shown. Take a 2x6, 16 feet long, and to the middle of this bolt an upright piece four feet long. To the top of this upright piece attach a string with a plumb bob at the bottom. Near the lower end of the bob, tack a foot rule one inch above the lower end of the upright piece. Set this device in the ditch. If the bob rests at O, exactly under the point where it is attached to the upright plank, there is no fall whatever. If it moves to the left from O, there is a fall of about ten feet to the mile for each eighth of an inch the plumb bob removes to the left from O. As soon as the fall is determined under the device, remove it 16 feet to the left and determine the fall there.

It is considered that a fall of five feet to the mile is ample; however, many ditches are laid with a fall of only three feet to the mile. The greater the fall, the less liable the ditch is to become clogged, and where it is possible, the fall should be at least ten feet to the mile.

WEIGHING BY FIGURES.

Rules for the Measurement of Hay in Stacks.

A ton of dry hay contains all the way from 300 to 900 cubic feet, depending on the length of time it has been stacked and its quality.

The rules for measuring hay vary in different localities, a cube of seven feet being considered in some places a ton and a cube of eight feet being considered a ton at other places. We would like to sell hay by the seven foot plan and buy it by the eight foot plan. A cube of hay eight foot each way will contain 512 cubic feet in all, which with the average run of hay will come very close to a ton. It takes a very excellent quality of hay for a cube of seven feet to make a ton.

The rule for estimating the number of tons in an ordinary stack is to multiply the length in feet by the width in feet and this by the height to a point where the stack would be level. This height is sometimes considered one-half the height of the stack. The result divided by 500 will give a very good measurement of hay, being the number of tons in the stack.

To estimate the contents of a round stack, says the Farmer, we multiply the square of the distance around the stack in yards by four times the height in yards and point off two pieces from the right and this will be the number of cubic yards in the stack, which divided by 20 will equal the number of tons. For instance, a stack measures 20 yards around the bulge and is eight yards high, to find the number of tons first square the distance around the bulge 20 yards which would be 400, multiplying this by four times the height eight yards, we would have 12,800, pointing off two places from the right making 128, which, divided by 20 gives 6 and 4-10 tons of hay in the stack.

Soils for White Oaks.

White oaks have few side roots, but each has one long tap root which extends far down into the ground. These trees get most of their food from the clay subsoils below. Elms and maples have a number of side roots which extend far out in the surface layer. They get the bulk of their food from the surface 12 inches of soil. Oaks should never be attempted in very rich soils, or elms and maples in poor clay soils.

Clay Soils.

All clay soil and soils which become packed easily, need organic matter. To these soils a great deal of manure should be applied or they should be seeded to some kind of grass. The grass roots decay and increase the amount of organic matter.

WHY WE PLOW AND CULTIVATE.

The Real Reasons Why These Operations Are Necessary.

Farming is a very ancient business, and the plow in some form, whether it be the forked stick or the triple gang plow, is the oldest of all agricultural implements; but the question of why we plow has never received the consideration that it should have.

Until about 200 years ago the farmer's idea of plowing was to get enough loose soil to cover his crop, and thus allow it to germinate. Farmers in that day, and, in fact, up to the time of Jethro Tull, about 150 years ago, did not seem to have any definite idea as to how plants grow. That worthy, whose name should be forever held in grateful remembrance among good farmers, had the idea that plants took up minute particles of the soil itself. He published volume after volume on this subject, and while his practice was invariably right and in fact quite modern, his theories were all wrong, just as in these modern times the theories of many scientific farmers are all right and their practice all wrong; for it is a matter of history that theory and practice do not always work together, desirable as it is that they should.

When farmers got hold of the idea that plants take their food always liquid and in solution, and do not live on the soil itself except in this way, it became quite clear that water is one of the essential elements of plant growth; and, therefore, that plowing should be done for the purpose of putting the soil in such condition that it should have the greatest water-holding capacity, not the capacity of holding the greatest amount of water between the particles, but of holding a large amount of water in films around the surface of the soil grains. They soon discovered that the finer the tilth and the greater the number of soil grains, the more surface there was, and, therefore, the greater the water-holding capacity.

Studying the matter thoroughly, they found, says Wallace's Farmer, that there is seldom during the summer season a sufficient rainfall to supply the wants of the crop, and hence that it was necessary not merely to plow deep and reduce the soil to a fine tilth, but to have the turned furrow in close capillary connection with the subsoil below, in order that the plants might draw up water from below when there was a deficiency of it coming from the clouds. This further modified the theories of cultivation.

Then another step was made. Farmers began to realize that while tillage was not manure, it was the next thing to it. While it did not add any fertility to the soil, it rendered more available the fertility already in the soil, which cannot be wholly exhausted by anything that man can do or fail to do. In other words, that the soil is a great chemical laboratory in which the food of plants is prepared, and prepared largely in proportion to the amount of intelligent tillage that is put upon it.

It is only in recent years that this idea has taken hold in the mind of the farmer, and even now only in the minds of the most intelligent farmers. Such farmers are beginning to realize that the water-holding capacity and, so to speak, the efficiency of the workings of the chemical laboratory are greatly increased by the addition of vegetable matter; in other words; that the mineral elements of the soil cannot be brought into such shape as to furnish food for plants except in connection with decaying vegetable matter.

The subject of why we plow and why we cultivate is a very large one, ever new and interesting, opening up wider vistas of thought than men who simply plow because their fathers plowed are able to scan at once.

The Gate Latch.

by slamming back and forth in the wind, and are apt to be run into in the dark. This is a good time to be figuring out some kind of a latch that will fasten the gate easily. One that will hook itself when the gate is pushed to is the best as it is more likely to be heeded by the hired man than one which he must stop and fumble with. The accompanying cut shows an ingenious and reliable latch for this purpose. The latch is made of iron and is so arranged that it will hook and hold the gate as soon as it is closed.

Water in the Soil.

It is not so much how much water falls in the form of rain, as it is how much is held in the soil by proper cultivation. If there were no moisture lost by evaporation, three or four inches of rainfall at the right time would raise a crop of wheat and a number of the other small grains.

FIRST TO CROSS PACIFIC.

Side-Wheel Steamer Aroused Much Interest in Japan.

"I saw the first steamship flying the American flag that ever crossed the Pacific ocean enter the harbor of Hongkong," said Frederick R. Sterling, a merchant of Hongkong.

"That vessel was the Colorado, and it landed in Hongkong in 1869. It was the first day of January, and there was a big crowd of people of all nationalities to see her. Being a side-wheeler of the old-fashioned type, she was a curiosity. At the request of Isaac J. Allen, the American consul general, the ship gave an excursion around the island on which the city is situated. I was among the 1,200 on board. It was a gala day. Whistles blew, people shouted, and numerous small sailing boats and tugs escorted us.

"As I remember now, the vessel belonged to the Pacific Mail Line and sailed from San Francisco. She made the trip of 8,000 miles in 30 days, and when she arrived was in perfect trim and good order. Everybody realized that it means the beginning of the great development of the Pacific."

MORE BOXES OF GOLD

And Many Greenbacks.

325 boxes of Gold and Greenbacks will be sent to persons who write the most interesting and truthful letters of experience on the following topics:

1. How have you been affected by coffee drinking and by changing from coffee to Postum?
2. Give name and account of one or more coffee drinkers who have been hurt by it and have been induced to quit and use Postum.
3. Do you know any one who has been driven away from Postum because it came to the table weak and characterless at the first trial?
4. Did you set such a person right regarding the easy way to make it clear, black, and with a snappy, rich taste?
5. Have you ever found a better way to make it than to use four heaping teaspoonfuls to the pint of water, let stand on stove until real boiling begins, and beginning at that time when actual boiling starts, boil full 15 minutes more to extract the flavor and food value. (A piece of butter the size of a pea will prevent boiling over.) This contest is confined to those who have used Postum prior to the date of this advertisement.

Be honest and truthful, don't write poetry or fanciful letters, just plain, truthful statements.

Contest will close June 1st, 1907, and no letters received after that date will be admitted. Examinations of letters will be made by three judges, not members of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd. Their decisions will be fair and final, and a neat little box containing a $10 gold piece sent to each of the five writers of the most interesting letters, a box containing a $5 gold piece to each of the 20 next best, a $2 greenback to each of the 100 next best, and a $1 greenback to each of the 200 next best, making cash prizes distributed to 325 persons.

Every friend of Postum is urged to write, and each letter will be held in high esteem by the company, as an evidence of such friendship, while the little boxes of gold and envelopes of money will reach many modest writers whose plain and sensible letters contain the facts desired, although the sender may have but small faith in winning at the time of writing.

Talk this subject over with your friends and see how many among you can win prizes. It is a good, honest competition and in the best kind of a cause, and costs the competitors absolutely nothing.

Address your letter to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., writing your own name and address clearly.

INDIANA PEOPLE IN WESTERN CANADA.

What Shall We Do?—I've Got to Build Granaries.

A letter written to a Canadian Government agent from Tipton, Indiana, is but one of many similar that are in the hands of the Canadian government agents whose privilege it is to offer one hundred and sixty acres of land free, and low railway fares. But here is a copy of the letter:

"Tipton, Ind., Nov. 28, 1906.

"At your earnest solicitation a party of us from Tipton left May 15 for Western Canada. Our interviews with you and a careful study of your literature led us to expect great things of your country when we should arrive there, and we were not disappointed. We went prepared to make a careful examination of the country and its resources, and we did so. At early dawn the second morning out of Tipton we awoke in a new world. As far as the eye could reach was an apparently limitless expanse of new sown wheat and prairie grasses. The vivid green of the wheat just beginning to stool out, and the inky blackness of the soil contrasted in a way beautiful to see. An hour or two later we steamed into Winnipeg. Here we found a number of surprises. A hundred thousand souls well housed, with every convenience that goes to make a modern up-to-date city—banks, hotels, newspapers, stores, electric light, street railways, sewerage, waterworks, asphalt pavements, everything. With eyes and ears open we traveled for two thousand miles through Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, going out over the Canadian Pacific railway, via Calgary to Edmonton, and returning to Winnipeg over the Canadian Northern railway. In the meantime we made several side trips and stopped off at a number of points where we made drives into the surrounding country. On every hand were evidences of prosperity. The growing wheat, oats, rye, flax, barley, not little patches, but great fields, many of them a square mile in extent, the three, five and sometimes seven-horse teams laying over an inky black ribbon of yellow stubble, generally in furrows straight as gun barrels and at right angles from the roads stretching into the distance, contrasted strangely with our little fields at home. The towns both large and small were doubly conspicuous, made so, first by their newness and second by the towering elevators necessary to hold the immense crops of wheat grown in the immediate neighborhood.

The newness, the thrift, the hustle, the sound of saw and hammer, the tents housing owners of buildings in various stages of completion, the piles of household effects and agricultural implements at the railway stations waiting to be hauled out to the 'Claims,' the occasional steam plow turning its twenty or thirty acres a day, the sod house, the unpainted house of wood, the up-to-date modern residence with large red barn by, all these were seen everywhere we went, an earnest of prosperity and wealth to be. We talked with men and visited their places that four years ago was unbroken prairie. Their houses, barns, implements and live stock were the equal of anything in Tipton County, and why not, when they were raising five, ten and twenty, yes, in one instance, forty thousand bushels of wheat a year. The fact that such large yields of wheat are raised so easily and so surely impressed us very favorably. And when we saw men who four or five years ago commenced there with two or three thousand dollars, and were now as well fixed and making money much easier and many times faster than lots of our acquaintances on Indiana farms fifty years cleared and valued at four times as much, we decided to invest. So we bought in partnership a little over two thousand acres, some of it improved and in wheat.

Before leaving Indiana we agreed that if the opportunities were as great as they were represented to be, that we would buy, and own in partnership a body of land, and leave one of our number to look after and operate it. This we accordingly did.

Just before time to thresh I received a letter from him. "What shall we do?" said he; "I've got to build granaries. There's so much wheat that the railways are just swamped. We can't get cars and the elevators are all full. I never saw anything like it." In reply we wrote, "Good for you. Go ahead and build; your story sounds better than the letters we used to get from our friends in Kansas when they bewailed the fact that the hard wheat had been destroyed by the chinch bugs and the corn by hot winds, and that they must sell the stock for means to live on. Yes, build by all means." And he did, and our wheat put in by a renter made twenty-seven bushels per acre.

MISS ADELAIDE NICHOLS

PERIODS OF PAIN

While no woman is entirely free from periodic suffering, it does not seem to be the plan of nature that women should suffer so severely. Irregularities and pain are positive evidence that something is wrong which should be set right or it will lead to serious derangement of the feminine organism.

Thousands of women, have found relief from all periodic suffering by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from native roots and herbs, as it is the most thorough female regulator known to medical science. It cures the condition which causes so much discomfort and robs that period of its terrors. Women who are troubled with painful or irregular functions should take immediate action to ward off the serious consequences and be restored to health and strength by taking

Miss Adelaide Nichols of 324 West 22nd Street, New York City, writes:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"If women who suffer would only rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound their troubles would be quickly alleviated. I feel greatly indebted for the relief and health which has been brought to me by your inestimable remedy."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints such as Falling and Displacements, and Organic Diseases. Headache, General Debility, Indigestion, and invigorates the whole feminine system. For the derangements of the Kidneys of either sex Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is excellent.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised.

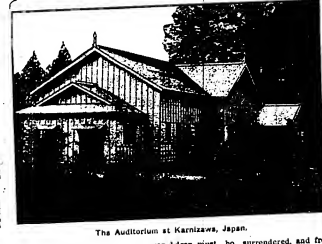
ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary Enterprise, a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

AT PLAY IN JAPAN



(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Karuizawa, Japan.—The first day I landed in Japan I set out, bet-foot, to find a missionary. I wanted to hear what he had to say for himself in answer to some of the criticisms that I had heard aboard ship. But hours of jinrikisha riding in Yokohama and Tokio failed to uncover one.

"Karuizawa," was the word I got from native servants in the various missionary homes; and Karuizawa, said the red guidebook, which is the tourist's badge of greenness, is a resort in the mountains of interior Japan much frequented by missionaries and other foreigners. When I said "Karuizawa" to one of the polite officials at the railroad station, he straightway took my affairs in hand; attended to my baggage, requisitioned the proper porters, and then himself went with me and ordered my ticket and saw that I got the right change; all without expectation of a fee, which he, like the Japanese policeman, would consider an insult. The ticket, by the way, was second-class; and later learned that it is thus that all missionaries travel in Japan.

The Simple Life in Japan.

In the light of what I see here in Karuizawa, the many tales I have heard of the missionary's opulence are rapidly being dissipated. The missionaries here are unquestionably representatives of those throughout the orient: they are of all ages, are of all denominational names, are engaged in every branch of mission work, and come from every part of Japan, as well as from three or four other countries. All alike dress most inexpensively, and one does not have to look closely to see the evidences of enforced economy familiar in the case of the country parson in the home land. The summer homes hereabouts can boast little except fine views and plenty of fresh air; they are not on a par with the cottages in the resorts I have named. The buildings are plain wood-en structures, generally unpainted or of an ugly red color, and each dwelling seems to be crowded in the approved summer resort fashion; for expenses diminish by division. There is always room for the frequently which missionaries learn in the end if they never know it at home; and manifestly these are homes of real refinement, since four-fifths of the missionaries are college bred. The number of Phi Beta Kappa keys worn, stand-ing as they do, for highest rank in the American colleges, impresses one interested in such matters. Since coming here I have had occasion to blush for my countrymen, which was not the case in Yokohama.

The Easy Life of the Orient.

There are more servants here than in any similar resort over seas. Each household has from two to five native servants, depending generally on the number of children in the family. This is not quite so luxurious as it sounds, for servants are plentiful and cheap here. Housekeeping in Japan does not entail the domestic drudgery common in the west, and altogether life is smoother and more comfortable. Already it has been made plain that the commonly entertained notion concerning the hardships of missionary life, in Japan, at least, is erroneous. This is a civilized land. Most of the conveniences and comforts of life in America are obtainable here, plus many not known to the occident. So far as the material surroundings of residence in Japan are concerned, I see no reason for the tearful pity and sympathy so frequently extended to the missionary. Life in the Sunrise kingdom may be as enjoyable as life anywhere else.

One less pleasant aspect of the missionary's lot was brought to mind at the first Sunday service I attended, in the new Auditorium, which is situated within 50 yards of an old Shinto shrine. The worshipping congregation, 450, and the Shintoists, 10,000. Europeans (as all white folk are called out here), and Japanese, gathered from ling the first hymn many persons even to a little child in front of me, were affected to tears. I could not understand why anybody should weep over the hearty singing of a familiar hymn until it was explained that the sight and sound of so many Christians singing together was too much for missionaries, who, for at least a year, had been shut off in the interior towns and villages, seeing only Japanese faces and hearing only Japanese speech. Then I began to realize the loneliness which is often one of the heaviest taxes laid upon a missionary.

The Missionary's Worst Hardship.

Even worse, as I may as well mention at the outset, since it is the most special specter of every missionary family board, is the enforced separation of parents from children. This strikes down to the depth of human nature. The breaking of these ties that are as old as the race, and sometimes that death, is the ever-recurring tragedy of missionary life. Children must be educated in the homeland; it seems impossible to raise a good American in an Asiatic atmosphere. Even in earliest years the children imbibe with the native tongue more knowledge of evil than comes to the normal boy and girl at home in 20 years. As they approach or enter their teens missionaries' children must be surrendered, and frequently they are not seen again by their parents until they have attained manhood or womanhood. Tragic tales are told of children who do not recognize their own parents and of parents who do not recognize their own children, after these long separations. This appears to me to be the worst of all the hardships that come to these uncomplaining missionaries.

Wide on the domestic aspect of the missionary's life, it is worth recording that the second generation may frequently be found on the field. I have met several instances of it here. A "children's party" of second generation missionaries brought together a score of young men and women a few days since. Quite unusual was a service in the Auditorium last Sunday, when Margaret Hall, the fourth daughter of two young missionaries was baptized by one grandfather, the other grandfather and an uncle assisting; both these grandmothers and an aunt being present, the entire group being missionaries. Mark you, this was not in a long settled New England community, but in an ancient village in the heart of Japan. The grandfather who officiated was a Cumberland Presbyterian, and he used the new Presbyterian Book of Common Worship.

Makers of an Empire.

One is surprised to find in this single European community of perhaps 600 persons a dozen or more whose names have been for nearly a generation household words in thousands of American homes. These are men whose careers are inseparably interwrought with the making of the new Japan. Counted among the founders of the Christian church here, but they are also conspicuous figures in the civil history of the empire, the friends and counsellors of statesmen, the pioneers of higher education, the makers of Japan's new literature, and the introducers of the dearly-prized "western learning."

Colonial Days in Japan.

If they cannot preach the missionaries can think. They have to do so if they are to work here. Japan is not big enough to hold that type of small man who is inhospitable to new ideas. Confidentially, I understand that this is the reason why not a few men who felt themselves called to be missionaries have been recalled by the boards after a few years on the field. The religious problems of Japan are tremendous; just now they are acute. There is nothing like them in America, nor are they at all understood there. Christianity in Japan is passing through an epoch that is like a crisis.

It must not suffice to say, that the face of Jesus Christ, as it is seen in the parallel in missionary history, and is bound itself to become a precedent for other nations, has made serious misread statesmen of many of these missionaries. They have not time to quibble over details that vex many American ministers, and, in consequence, Christian union in Japan is far ahead of the same movement at home, where else in the world; and the missionaries are more catholic, cosmopolitan and large-visioned than any similar body of clergymen of whom I have knowledge.

Roosevelt and Bryan as Missionaries.

As illustrative of their broad views of the situation take their sentiments concerning Mr. William J. Bryan, whose recent visit is a vivid memory with the nation. The Japanese fell in love with Mr. Bryan because of his smile and suavity; good manners go farther than a private car in this land. The missionaries, without respect to creed or party, are enthusiastic over the religious influence of Mr. Bryan's tour of Japan; every where he committed himself unequivocally to the Christian position, and his addresses and printed comments on missions were published in native newspapers throughout the empire, as his biography and speeches had been printed upon his appearance.

Now the missionaries are talking of a possible visit from President Roosevelt at the close of his term; he will be formally invited, and an unofficial missionary now en route to America is charged with the mission of representing to the President the attitude of the Japanese toward him. For there is no man, outside of the emperor and a few war heroes, who is so popular in this country to-day, with all classes of people, as Theodore Roosevelt. Taking advantage of this, the missionaries have circulated widely, in Japanese, the address on the Bible delivered at Oyster Bay, and other religious utterances of the President. His letter to the interchurch Conference on Federation in New York was immediately printed by most of the Japanese dailies. In these ways it may fairly be said that President Roosevelt and Mr. Bryan are more potent influences in the religious evolution of Japan than many professional missionaries combined.

The Japanese Press and Religion.

The use the latter make of these men I cite as evidence of their alertness and broad-mindedness. Another progressive plan which waits only a special donation from America to put it into immediate execution is the use of the advertising columns of the daily Japanese newspapers for purposes of religious propaganda. Publishers of leading journals have agreed to place from one to two columns a day at the disposal of the missionaries for the insertion of Christian teaching in popular form. The expense of publication for a year in a newspaper of 20,000 daily circulation, including the preparation of the material, would be less than the salary of an ordinary preacher in America. Only by this method, a leading missionary assured me to-day, can the churches hope to reach great masses of people who will not attend Christian churches.

Missionaries Not Grafters.

Novel ideas in church work I found to be common in Japan. I heard a leadership here about the "P. and R. Building association," which inquiry showed is not a thrifty schemo for laying up money for a rainy day, as it is on the other side of the Pacific, but a missionary enterprise of missionaries. Subscribers, chiefly members of the missions, pay five dollars a year for each share; then, when enough money to construct a building is on hand, a native congregation needs help in putting up a church building, it applies to the building association, which advances a sum equal to not more than one-third of the total cost of the structure. The loan is made every shareholder is assessed one dollar, the aggregate assessment for a year being limited to five dollars. In return the shareholder gets the privilege of paying another ten dollars the next year.

Considering the charge that the missionaries are "grafters," I am interested to find many evidences like this of the gifts by missionaries to their own work. I have met at least one wealthy man who has contributed self and contributes to his mission besides. Another prominent missionary is maintained, and the entire salaries of his wife are paid by his brother, a well-known American manufacturer.

Facing the Facts.

Most of the missionaries here are Americans and Canadians, and it is a gratifying to find that they seem able to retain their level-headedness. They are not fanatics. Their attitude is one of a sober confronting of "things as they are." Japan may suffer no delusions concerning their work or concerning the Japanese. To cite an illustration: The day of my arrival, a young Ohioan (the persistence of American provincialisms is not dissolved over long years among men who speak Japanese like natives, is interesting to an observer), a total stranger, helped me out of a linguistic mart at the post office. Then he crossed the street with me and smilingly, since you must always bargain with a smile in this polite land, helped me make a purchase 25 per cent cheaper than the native's asking price. The duplicity and gullefulness of the Japanese tradesman are an open book to these missionaries who, while intensely loyal to the Japanese, are not blind to certain grave national shortcomings. The varied dilettante which beset their own work are frankly recognized, and all such temporary manifestations are met with

MAIL ORDER EVIL

ITS RISE IS NOT THE RESULT OF LEGITIMATE DEMAND.

DUE ENTIRELY TO GREED

And It Feeds Upon the Prosperity of the Country Towns—A Menace to the Nation.

(Copyrighted, 1906, by Alfred C. Clark.)

As the years go by we are more than ever brought face to face with the vital question of trading at home. During the past decade the habit of buying goods abroad has grown to such proportions that the country merchant may well feel alarmed at the probable outcome unless something is done to forestall the great calamity which will surely result from it.

Trade conditions 25 years ago were satisfactory. At that time catalogue houses were entirely unknown and country merchants were "monarchs of all they surveyed," so to speak, in the towns represented, and the people were prosperous and happy. Perhaps not so much because they generally had money enough to meet their wants, but because of the contentment that prevailed throughout the country at that time. The farmers raised good crops, generally, and received good prices for what they had to sell. They sold their surplus stuff to the local merchant and bought what they wanted; and this was the height of

Are you, Mr. Resident of This Community, feeding to the mail order hog the dollars of this community? Are you pouring the money that should stay in the home town into the trough from which the gluttonous hogs of the city feed? If so you are doing not only the town, but yourself, an irreparable injury, and one that you should stop at once.

their ambition, hence the contentment that prevailed.

But in after years, when cities grew and trade expanded, when commerce with these cities not being content with conditions of trade, devised plans by which their trade could reach out for more business. Advertising in the newspapers being a cheap way of putting the merits of their goods before the people, this plan appealed to them and it was adopted. At first they operated on a small scale; then, as they could see the opportunity for making it pay, he added to his advertising fund. And so it has continued until to-day millions of dollars are annually sent to mail order houses by the people of the United States.

The most and most effective way to throttle the catalogue house has been a question uppermost in the minds of country merchants for several years past; some advocating one plan and some another. There are several plans that might be presented to induce the farmer to buy at home. In the first place, his pride might be appealed to. He realizes the fact that if his farm is to be valuable it must be farmed in the most scientific manner and all buildings, fences, etc., must be kept up in the best possible shape, and above all the farm must not be sold not too far from some good town, for we all know that farm land brings a much better price when near some good town or village. It is no hard to get the farmer to realize this, for he ever and ever again tries to sell any, he knows this to be a fact. Well, then, after he has realized this fact, the thing for him to do is to patronize his home merchants and business men, so they may be able to build and maintain a good town.

Public schools are much better in the years than in the country for the reason that where the population is most dense, there is more taxable property in the amount of territory covered, hence there is more money collected for school purposes, and as a result more and better teachers are employed. All this is of the highest importance to the farmer, as soon, however, as they realize the fact that tion. And right here is where the good town proposition comes to him with great force. He knows he can send his children to the village school at a great deal less expense than to send them away to college, and that is the smallest item of merchandise, though it may seem to him that he is saving a few cents by doing so.

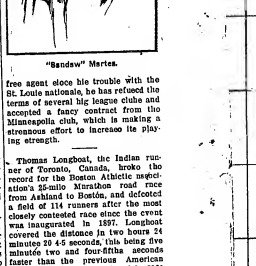
It seems that it could be easily pointed out to him that if there was no town near him and he had to drive 20 or 30 miles to take his produce to market and haul his groceries the same distance home, he could easily see that his land would greatly depreciate in value and the disadvantages he would encounter on every hand would be very disastrous to his time and he would gladly spend his money at home in this way. Besides advertising judiciously they advertise on a large scale and consequently get the business. The old saying that "You must fight the devil with fire" will apply in this case. The home merchant must advertise. He must do more than say: "Come to Smith's to trade; cheapest place on earth." He must describe his merchandise as he would in private conversation over the counter to a customer, and then quote the price. This will nearly always act as a clincher and will at least put him on a standing with the catalogue houses. In fact it will give him an advantage over the catalogue house, for in almost every case he can sell the same grade of merchandise cheaper than the catalogue house can sell it. This is not mere theory but a statement of fact, for the reason that the country merchant's business is operated at a very much less expanse than that of the mail order merchant. There are a thousand and one items of expense which the city merchant has to meet that are entirely unknown to the country merchant.



The time is rapidly approaching when people who patronize mail order houses will be looked upon as "boosters" by the solid and influential citizens of all commonwealths and will be considered as public pests.

Cities and towns are built by combined efforts of the residents thereof, and money after money has been spent to make improvements in the west, but always with good round interest in view. There are a thousand and one instances of a case where an eastern man or firm contributed to western enterprises for the fun of the thing. Now did you ever hear of a case where any mail order or catalogue house ever contributed to any church building fund. Nor yet did they ever build or help to build any of our schoolhouses. Never heard of a case of this kind and you never will. All these eastern sharks care for is your dollar, and will know it and when they have gotten that they have no more use for you. Then why should you patronize them? You can go to your home merchant any day in the year and if you are short of change, he will extend you credit. If you are sick and unable to work the home merchant will see that your family is provisioned until you get on your feet again. He will do all of this and at the same time furnish the same grade of goods (think you can get them?) at less price, and will do more for the town in which you live in one year than the mail order house will do in ten years. Now, then, which is the better for you to patronize?

Sporting Gossip.

American sport with the season of 1907 at hand enters upon what promises to be a banner year. Judging by last season's records, high-quality performances in almost every branch are assured; but best of all, from the democratic point of view, the athletes on diamond, track, field and river will outnumber those of, say, two years ago by probably two to one. This is accounted for by the remarkable revival of interest in track athletics, by the advent of the public school boy in almost every branch of sport, and by the heavy schedules for the year, calculated to give everyone a chance, either individually or as a member of a team. All these things are signs of national health in sport. Stars of the athletic field will, as heretofore, engage the most widespread attention, but they will by no means cast into the shadow the newcomer or the good average performer who is a sportsman for the sport's sake. There will be glory enough to go round. There has been a steadily growing tendency in athletics in this country to broaden the scope of competition so as to encourage athletic development in quarters where, for lack of a chance of victory, sustained effort by the combination of muscle and brain has too long remained dormant. We in America are rapidly realizing the true idea of classification in sport where hitherto we have reserved our applause for national or interscholastic champions only. How great and significant a change has come over the spirit of American athletic sympathies for the present crowded season to demonstrate. There will be less of international competition this year than in many other years, but development at home will have its long-awaited innings, so that in 1908 our athletes may go out against the world at the British Olympics keyed up as never before by the test of home competition that will make the final selection of our national champions a comparatively easy matter. Keenly every branch of sport will take a long stride this season along the lines of unusual popularization, but none, perhaps, a greater than the keen and sturdy art of rowing.

"Sandow" Mertes recently came to terms with the Minneapolis American association club. Mertes will draw one of the largest salaries ever paid a player by a minor league club. As a matter of fact, Mertes is not a minor leaguer by any means, but, being a free agent since his trouble with the St. Louis nationals, he has refused the terms of several big league clubs and accepted a berth with Manager Hall of the Minneapolis club, which is making a strenuous effort to increase its playing strength.

Thomas Longboat, the Indian runner of Toronto, Canada, broke the record for the Boston Athletic association's 25-mile Marathon road race from Ashland to Boston, and defeated a field of 114 runners after the most closely contested race since the event was inaugurated in 1897. Longboat covered the distance in two hours 24 minutes 20 4-5 seconds, this being five minutes and two and three-fifths seconds faster than the previous American record, which was established in 1901 by J. J. McDermott, of Hamilton, Ontario. Robert Fowler, of the Cambridgeport Gymnasium association, finished second, also within the record. His time was two hours 27 minutes 54 4-5 seconds. John J. Hayes, St. Bartholomew's club, New York, was third in two hours 30 minutes 38 3-5 seconds. Following in order came John O'Mara, Pastime college; J. J. Lee, Roxbury; Charles E. Petch, Toronto; Sidney H. Hatch, Chicago; J. H. Nearey, Natick, Mass., and John Lindquis, Brooklyn, N. Y., all finishing the time under two hours and 40 minutes.

Archie Hahn has run his last race. The great dash man, probably of the best and most consistent sprinter this country has ever produced, announces his retirement from the cinder path. The announcement will not cause much surprise among followers of track athletics, who have been expecting his retirement for some time.

News Gathered Here and There at the National Capital

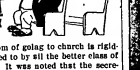
MRS. ROOSEVELT'S FAD IS COLLECTING OLD CHINA

WASHINGTON.—When everybody is somebody, nobody is anybody at all," as the clever goodsller remarks in the Sullivan opera. "So it is at the capital. In the large and growing class of "somebodies," the woman who wants to make her mark has to be different. Even Mrs. Roosevelt seems to recognize that fact and rather than be classed with the ex-queens she is making her personality felt along many lines. To begin with Mrs. Roosevelt, having set the national taste toward black for street wear and white for indoor occasions, switched off to the other extreme and now wears rather amazing combinations. No one except the president's wife could have hoped to put on snuffy-looking brown for a great wedding and not be classed with the dowds. Yet Mrs. Roosevelt did this very thing, and this winter saw innumerable dark brown and indigo blue afternoon and evening toilets, a radical departure from what Paris calls "good form."

Mrs. Roosevelt has chosen to ally herself with that part of society which goes in for uplifting.

Her name is on the list of patrons of art and music. She is pledged, when her husband leaves office, to aid in the establishment of a National Academy of Art and of a National Conservatory, both to be supported by government funds. She keeps up her membership with the Spanish-American War Relief society, and performs her part of the Isbors. Likewise the Army and Navy Relief society and the Cooperative society know her as a faithful contributing member, just as she was when her husband was in the cavalry station. A few minor fads Mrs. Roosevelt also confesses. She wishes to go down in White House annals as the most intelligent and conscientious collector of historic china who has ever graced the stately mansion. She is making this claim good by delving and digging everywhere for pieces of the china used by presidential families since George sipped his tea out of gold-rimmed cups of Martha's best set. Every administration is now represented in the cabinet which adorns the portrait gallery in the lower floor of the White House.

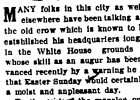
GOVERNMENT TO KEEP WATCH ON CRIMINALS



THE United States government is to establish immediately in this city a criminal identification bureau, or what may be called an "Habitual Criminal Register," for keeping the records of all men convicted of crimes against the federal laws, and also all indicted by grand juries of the United States courts. The bureau is to be under the supervision of the department of justice, and all prisons in the United States where government prisoners are, or have been confined, have been directed to send their records, consisting of photographs, Bertillon measurement cards and finger-print identification sheets immediately to the department of justice.

A central bureau for the identification of federal law-breakers has been urged for some time by criminologists. Heretofore each prison in the United States has kept its own records, and a federal law-breaker could serve a term in one prison and be freed without the fact ever becoming known that he had served a previous term for a similar offense in another penitentiary.

The central bureau will ascertain the record of each man from the date he has, and if one not yet given trial proves to be an habitual criminal this fact will be made known to the prosecuting attorney and the judge previous to the hearing, and if the man is convicted it will mean that he will be given the limit.



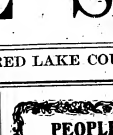
At the present time there are about 5,000 known criminals who violate the government laws, and a close tab is to be kept upon these in the future. It will go hard on a known criminal convicted in a United States court hereafter.

SECRETARY TAFT NOT A REGULAR CHURCH GOER

MINISTERS of the Gospel in Washington and in some other places where Secretary Taft is well known, aim at him a curious criticism. They say that he does not often attend church, and that he does not seem to care for conventional religious forms and ceremonies. They do not say that the secretary is irreligious in the broad sense, but merely that he does not comply with the usual rule of men in high public station in the matter of attending divine worship regularly. For example, when he was on his way to Cuba the last time he had to spend Sunday at Charleston, S. C., where the old custom of going to church is rigidly adhered to by all the better class of citizens. It was noted that the secretary did not go to church there, and one or more ministers of that city have since then made inquiries of men of the cloth in Washington as to the secretary's church connection and habits in this city. Some of Judge Taft's friends here say he is a Unitarian, and others that he is an Episcopalian, but nobody seems clear as to how often he goes to church when in Washington. Withal, however, the secretary's life is singularly pure, even though he may not regularly attend divine worship.

WISE WHITE HOUSE CROW IS OLD WEATHER PROPHET

MANY folks in this city as well as elsewhere have been talking about the old crow which is known to have established his headquarters long ago in the White House grounds and whose skill as a sugur has been advanced recently by a warning he gave that Easter Sunday would certainly be a moist and unpleasant day.



To the east of the mansion on the north front, in a little grove of elms, the old bird has his habitation. Generally he occupies a tree very near to the north portion. There is a large hollow in the trunk of this tree and in the topmost branches his sable plumage is nearly always to be seen. Some of the policemen on duty about the grounds keep an eye on the old fellow at times, but the majority of them ignore him. "I have as much to do," said one of the bluecoats when the subject of the crow's methods was mentioned to him, "to keep my attention riveted upon the crowds of people that swarm here every day without giving any thought to the crow."

But there are others about the White House who have paid considerable attention to him. One old retainer, who went into service when Gen. Grant became president, says this same crow was stationed near the house when he first took up a humble position there. "And we all knew," said this old fellow, "that as a weather prophet he can give cards and spades to the bureau officers and beat them.

"How long this old fellow will remain with us no one can tell," said one of the clerks. "He knows he has a good place where no hunter can take a pot shot at him and no wanton little boy can hurl a rock at him, so he is wise enough to stand pat."

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

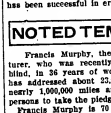
HONORE JOSEPH JAXON

Because the president of the United States has recently addressed a letter to Miss Jaxon concerning the Mowle-Hayfood case, Honore Joseph Jaxon of Chicago is immediately in the public eye. This, however, is the least of his claims to celebrity, for, owing to his activities since young manhood, he has acquired sufficient experience to make him an entire melodrama, with the addition of a few stage settings. On which side of the line separating genius from something else he stands is merely a point of view, but whatever the opinion, his personality is interesting, his experience varied, for he has run the gamut of things, strenuous, from actual war to more or less peaceful labor agitation. He has touched the edges of law, architecture and medicine; has lectured, organized trades unions, solicited insurance, sold stocks and bonds and hunted buffalo for a living. He has studied the exact sciences and projected his mind into the realms of the occult, and his attire has comprehended everything, from moccasins and fur cap to patent-leather shoes and silk hat.

Honore Jaxon came to Chicago from northwest territory in 1885. After his arrival he hired the old Central Music hall at State and Randolph street and at 25 cents a head told a handful of people about the causes which brought about the Riel Indian and half-breed rebellion in the Canadian northwest in 1885. He was familiar with the incidents of that uprising. For a few years he mixed the reading of law with the business of sidewalk contracting. Later he identified himself with radical labor politics.

Emma Goldman, the high priestess of anarchy, and Jaxon are old acquaintances, but they failed to agree in their policies.

MAY FINE OIL TRUST



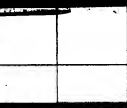
Kenesaw Mountain Landis, judge of the United States district court in Chicago, who fined the Standard Oil company practically in his hands. Twelve jurors in his court recently found the company guilty of accepting illegal rates from the Chicago & Alton railroad, as charged in 1,462 counts of the indictment on which the corporation has just been tried. Should the verdict stand Judge Landis can impose aggregate fines of $29,240,000, or $20,000 for each count. If only the minimum penalty of $1,000 on each count be assessed, the total would reach $1,462,000, the largest fine ever entered against a person or corporation in the history of federal courts.

Judge Landis on a previous occasion rendered an important decision against the oil octopus.

When indictments were first returned Attorney Sanburn hastily bath" plea saved the meat packers. Landis overturned his plea in this instance, allowing the case to come to trial.

Judge Landis has occupied his present position since March, 1905. Previously he had practiced law in Chicago and for two years had been private secretary to the late Walter Q. Gresham, during whose term as secretary of state at Washington President Cleveland offered Judge Landis a diplomatic appointment at the time, but he preferred to return to Chicago and resume the practice of law. Judge Landis was born at Millville, O., in 1866, was educated in the public schools at Logansport, Ind., and for a time was a reporter on a Logansport paper. He was graduated from the Union College of Law in Chicago in 1891 and subsequently became one of the instructors in the Northwestern university Law school. He owes his unusual baptismal names to the fact that his father, who was a surgeon in an Ohio regiment, was wounded in the battle of Kenesaw mountain.

SCORES HIGH SOCIETY



Father Bernard Vaughan, who says the nature of women in England is undergoing a change that is not for the better, that women are becoming irreligious, is one of the most talked of clergymen in London. His sermons scoring the sins of the smart set have created a sensation during the past winter. The Farm Street church of the Jesuits has been filled with a fashionable audience whenever Father Vaughan was expected to preach. Members of high society seemed to be drawn as by a magnet. Men and women came to hear the frivolousness and emptiness of their lives, their gambling, drinking, selfishness and extravagance scathingly arraigned. They may have enjoyed it as an entirely new sensation.

Father Vaughan has asserted that the habit of drinking is increasing among women. The announcement of women suffragists that they may don male attire in order to gain admittance to the gallery of the house of commons is expected to draw forth another stinging rebuke from the priest. In one of his recent sermons he cited dog worship as one of the evils of the day and asked: "Will not the practice of lavishing upon brutes love that should be bestowed upon a husband and child bring some horrible curse with it?"

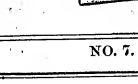
Father Vaughan is a brother of the late Cardinal Vaughan. He has been an energetic worker among the poor in the east end of London. He has been successful in erecting clubs for workingmen.

NOTED TEMPERANCE ADVOCATE

Francis Murphy, the noted temperance lecturer, who was recently reported to be going blind, in 36 years of work in his chosen field, has addressed about 12,000 meetings, traveled nearly 1,000,000 miles and persuaded 12,000,000 persons to take the pledge.

Francis Murphy is 70 years old. For some years he has made Los Angeles the base of his operations, and that promising California city looks upon him as one of its ornaments.

Though he has not the mimetic facility that made John B. Gough irresistibly droll, Mr. Murphy has all the humor that a Irish and a very pretty wit that is peculiar to himself. His oratory has rare qualities of pathos. On the orders of his oculist and physician he has been retired from the lecture platform; and there is little likelihood at his resumption of the work to which the greater part of his life has been devoted.



Murphy's greatest work was done in Pennsylvania. In a nine weeks' crusade in Pittsburg 45,000 men signed the pledge. In Philadelphia 100,000 did the same. He preaches the gospel of love and persuasion rather than of force and punishment.

Francis Murphy, even to-day, is a remarkably handsome man, silver-haired and ruddy-cheeked. He is a Chesterfield in his distinguished bearing and a Beau Brummel in dress. His immaculate attire has made him the fashion plate of the Pacific coast.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

TROUSSEAU OF MISS FISH WILL COST A FORTUNE

NEW YORK.—Society circles were much interested in the news of the arrival from Paris of the $250,000 trousseau of Miss Marian Fish, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, who is to be married in June to Albert Seabrisio Gray.

This trousseau contains a wedding gown which alone cost $50,000. On it are some of the rare old laces worn in the coronation robes of Empress Catherine of Russia. Experts in Paris who watched the proceedings of making the remarkable garments say that they cannot be duplicated for $250,000.

Of the 16 gowns included in the trousseau ten cost in excess of $10,000 each. It is predicted that the bride will display the most dazzling assortment of bell, dinner, opera, street and carriage gowns of any women in society.

It requires six great cedar chests to hold the flageric of the trousseau. Incidentally it is said that no bride in this country or in any other country ever had such an assortment of dainty muslins and linens as Miss Fish.

It was said that the coming bride and her mother had had a friendly dispute concerning the marriage ceremony. Mrs. Fish wanted the young and handsome Rev. Dr. Thomas M. Stires to perform the ceremony in St. Thomas' church.

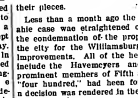
Miss Fish was willing and anxious that this should be as her mother desired, but when she learned that the day on which she had planned to be a bride St. Thomas' had already been engaged for another June wedding she decided to be married in St. Bartholomew's.

BIBLE HOUSE IS KNOWN ALL OVER THE WORLD

TO THE eye of the casual observer the dull red brick building on Astor place, known as the Bible House, has been dwarfed almost into insignificance by the skyscrapers growing up around it; but it is still the headquarters of a work whose records make a fascinating history of heroism, adventure and devotion to a cause, and it is probably the most widely known building in the world to-day. In the 88 years of its life it has sent Bibles to the remotest corners of the earth—a grand total of 70,000,000 of them—printed in more than 150 languages.

Long before China opened even the five ports to western trade, far-seeing men outside the walls were struggling with its ideographs and getting a primitive version of the Bible ready for the people; and while Japan still refused to let a foreigner land upon her shores, translators were picking up Japanese words from shipwrecked sailors, and, without dictionary or grammar, preparing one or another of the gospels for the Japanese. Within two weeks after Admiral Perry's victory at Nimiki the task of translating the Bible into some of the 34 languages and dialects of the Philippines was begun, and now a complete testament may be had in three of them or the gospels in any one of half a dozen others.

JERRY THE LUG RECEIVES VISIT FROM MR. BOUNTIFUL



FORTUNE emptied her horn right into the lap of Jerry the Lug early the other morning. Many times in the years that the blind man has held his post outside the Haymarket, through rain or shine, she has favored him, but never had she showered her bounties upon him in this manner.

The Goddess, who has been any thing but fickle to Jerry the Lug while he has made the Tenderloin his stamping ground, however false she may have been to him in his earlier days, came to him in the guise of a gay young Lothario who had more money than he could light his cigars with. The pink-faced, loudly-dressed one with the baby mustache turned up at the ends came out of the Heymerket just at the time when the white light hanging in front of the resort was shining with a paler radiance in the first streaks of dawn.

Lothario stopped at the spot where Jerry sat on his cempstool holding out leal pencils. He dug one bead in his trousers pocket and brought out a roll thet wes hoth green and yellow. He detected several layers and threw them into the cigar box which dangled from a string from the blind man's neck. Jerry's intelligent fingers knew the feel of real green and yellow-backs, but they roaused several times over the twenties, tens and ones while he accustomed himself to the touch. He could pick out the bills of high denomination from the one-dollar bills, for their surface was smoother; but not until he had called a policeman and assured him he learn that he had fallen heir to $59.

The Tenderloin is wondering how long it will take Jerry to see the bottom of his little pile and whether several nights would pass before it again heard the tap, tap of Kentucky Colonel. Kentucky Colonel is Jerry's best friend. It is his stout walking stick, his guide on his journeys and his stanch supporter in days of trouble. Jerry is about 50 years old and known familiar to everyone who knows the Tenderloin by night. He and Matches Mary, who recently died in Bellevue were the best-known characters in the district. Jerry has always been part of the Tenderloin.

ESTATE SETTLED AFTER YEARS OF LITIGATION

WHEN Daniel Rikor was gathered to his fathers in 1850 he left behind him a large estate and a quantity of trouble which has kept his memory green even unto this day.

The estate was administered in trust until 1873, when a dissatisfied legatee started the trouble by bringing a partition suit. Then began a series of legal technicalities, court delays, quests for missing heirs, in which thousands of dollars were spent; the disappearance and death of others and the birth of children and grandchildren to the original legatees —a tale which has no parallel except in the celebrated case of Jarndyce vs. Jarndyce, which Charles Dickens wove into his novel of "Bleak House." Lawyers came into the case and died; persons interested in fighting the action passed away and others took their places.

Less than a month ago the remarkable case was enlightened out with the condemnation of the property by the city for the Williamsburg bridge improvement, and the heirs, who include the Havemeyers and other prominent members of Fifth avenue's "four hundred," had been found and a decision was rendered in their favor.

When the city has finally paid the awards, when the court of appeals has passed upon certain technical questions awaiting its decision, and when all the lawyers have been paid, the 50 living descendants of the worthy old gentleman—provided no more are discovered or born meanwhile—will receive the patrimony that has been coming to them during 32 years of litigation.

ALL SPAIN REJOICES OVER BIRTH OF HEIR

STORK BRINGS A STRONG, BLUE-EYED SON TO QUEEN VICTORIA.

Ceremony in the Palace—Royal Baby Formally Presented by the Happy King — Congratulatio' From All Over the World.

Madrid, May 11.—The news that the direct male succession to the throne of Spain had been assured by the birth Friday of a son to Queen Victoria sent a thrill of rejoicing through out the country, and Friday night the happy event was celebrated from one end of the land to the other.

Queen Victoria and the child are both doing well.

The hurried departure of royal messengers from the palace at ten o'clock in the morning to summon the courtiers and the members of the diplomatic corps gave the first indication that the birth was imminent. The usual gathering outside the palace courtyard was soon swelled by immense throngs of the excited populace, who watched the continual stream of brilliantly uniformed personages driving up to the royal residence and tried to identify the individuals.

Announced by Cannon.

The crowd waited in suspense until nearly one o'clock, when the thundering out of the first cannon shot signified that the royal accouchement was over. The reports were counted anxiously until the fifteenth, and then a complete silence ensued. The seconds appeared as hours until the sixteenth shot boomed forth, and the continuation until 21 had been fired informed the public that the royal child was a man. The sixteenth report brought forth a ringing cheer, and at the same time the royal standard was hoisted over the palace and it was known that no mistake had been made. The people danced with joy and embraced each other, shouting, "Long live the king! Long live the queen!"

They then rushed from the spot, carrying the news to the furthermost points of the city.

Soon after the royal salute the flags of Spain and Great Britain were raised over all the public buildings of Madrid. Many business houses closed for the remainder of the day on a sign of rejoicing.

Ceremony in the Palace.

In the meanwhile the solemn ceremony of presentation was being carried out inside the palace. The ministers of state, carrying a baby so small ver tiny upon which was lying the newly born royal baby, accompanied by King Alfonso and Premier Maura appeared in the ante-chamber where the courtiers had assembled.

The young monarch appeared full of joy as the premier, raising the drapery which covered the infant on the tray, said: "Gentlemen, it is a prince."

The solemn dignitaries thereupon forgot all etiquette and cheered the king and the queen heartily. The minister of justice, Morquis Figueroa, made out the birth certificate, which was signed by all the prominent personages present. The gathering then broke up.

King Alfonso telegraphed the good news to the pope, King Edward and the heads of other states, and all the congratulations began to come in.

Strong, Blue-Eyed Boy.

The accouchement was in every respect normal, and the queen is making very satisfactory progress toward recovery. Her majesty proposes herself to nourish the infant prince, who shows signs of the utmost vitality. He has a strong voice, blue eyes and a fair complexion like his mother's.

The queen was the first to kiss the baby, and she was followed by the two grandmothers, Princess Beatrice, of Bottenburg, and Maria Christina, the dowager queen of Spain.

Decrees were issued Friday night ordering a national holiday throughout Spain for Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

The cabinet met in the afternoon and drew up, and later presented to King Alphonso for his signature, decrees transferring the title of heir presumptive from Prince Charles of Bourbon to the new born prince.

It has been decided that the baptism shall be on Tuesday at noon. It is soon rt circles it is desired to name the baby Carlos, but the matter of his appellation has not yet been definitely decided.

King Alphonso Friday, in honor of the event, decreed the pardon of thousands of prisoners, including eight persons who were condemned to suffer the death penalty.

Messages From the President.

Washington, May 11. — President Roosevelt Friday sent to King Alfonso XIII. the following message:

"I congratulate your majesty and the Spanish nation on the birth of an heir to the throne of Spain."

Sent Negro: Lynching Feared.

Lexington, Ky., May 11.—Others with bloodhounds from this city were since midnight been chasing Robert Hocker, a negro who shot and killed Newton Veal, a wealthy farmer of this county. The men had quarreled over nine dollars, which Hocker claimed Veal owed him. Posses are guarding every road, and it is feared a lynching will follow if Hocker is caught.

PAUPERS HAVE A PALACE

AMAZING LUXURY OF A WORKHOUSE IN LONDON.

Equal to Any Nobleman's Mansion—Cost of Site and Building Over $1,300,000.

London, May 10.—Although nearly all classes of Englishmen would appear to be raveling in the grievances that are daily being voiced throughout the land, it cannot be said that there is any lack of solicitude for the welfare of the British pauper, whose lot, unlike that of the Gilbert and Sullivan policemen, would seem to be far from unhappy.

This fact has been strikingly evidenced in recent months as a result of the investigations conducted by the local government board in the matter of the poor law expenditures, but Thursday it reached a point of sheer amazement during an inquiry, at the instance of the Rate Payers' association, into the cost of the new workhouse and infirmary in the London borough of Hammersmith. It developed that this workhouse, in many details was equal if not superior to any nobleman's mansion and that it could vie with the most expensive hotel.

The entrance to the building is between bonded stone pillars fitted with pitch pine and plate glass; one of the floors is of tiled mosaic work, surrounded by a dado of encaustic ware of the most expensive type; every part of the building is brilliantly lighted with electricity, and a system of duplicate wiring had been installed. Counsel for the Rate Payers' association said that the cost had been suggested recently from Buckingham palace, but it was rejected on the ground of expense.

The dining room is almost baronial in style and equal to anything in any of the great mansions in the country. The light to this room is softly diffused by means of stained glass windows, and the ceiling, a groining cost over $1,300,000, which is equivalent, so far as has been ascertained, to the rate of $1,625 per bed. This, counsel said, was far greater than the cost of many houses occupied by hardworking families.

THREE FATAL WRECKS.

Disasters in Chicago, Ohio and Kentucky Cost One Life Each.

Chicago, May 10.—A fatal train wreck occurred on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad in Chicago at the Hamlin avenue crossing Thursday. One Chicago woman was killed and more than 30 persons were injured. The wrecked train was in the suburban service, due in Chicago at 9:16 a. m. from Aurora, Ill. The catastrophe, in which the engine, speeding at 45 miles an hour, was thrown from the track with its four coaches, one car almost turning over, took place at nine a. m., from a cause not positively ascertained.

Cincinnati, May 10.—One man was killed, one fatally and over 40 painfully injured in a car and collision at Jones Station, seven miles south of Hamilton, O., Thursday.

Lexington, Ky., May 10.—One man was killed and several injured in a collision between freight cars of the Chesapeake & Ohio flyer between Louisville and New York here ot noon Thursday.

LOST PROFITS OF 45 YEARS.

Insurance Companies Given Tremendous Blow by 'Frisco Disaster.

New York, April 10.—The San Francisco conflagration of April, 1906, except a way not only every dollar of profit previously made by the insurance companies of the country since since 1850, but cost them $79,708,174 besides, according to a statement made by Comptroller George W. Burchell of the National Board of Underwriters in the annual meeting of that organization in Cleveland, O., in 1906.

President Burchell said carefully compiled figures showed the total property loss by the catastrophe to have been in round numbers $350,000,000. The loss to 242 insurance companies was $175,658,530, and, in addition to this, there was a large amount of reinsurance in foreign companies, which would make the total loss to insurance companies throughout the world between $220,000,000 and $225,000,000.

BAD WRECK ON INTERURBAN.

Nine Persons Injured in Collision Near Edwardsville, Ill.

Edwardsville, Ill., May 11.—While a southbound through electric car from Springfield, containing 20 passengers, was halted on a curve of the McKinley interurban line around the curve Friday afternoon, within a few miles of here, an electric locomotive drawing a work train came around the curve and demolished the coach, injuring nine persons, several seriously.

Edward Williams, a negro, crawled unhurt from the wreckage and summoned assistance from neighboring farm. Farmers' wives and daughters responded with bandages and dressed injuries hurriedly until physicians were rushed to the scene on a relief train from here.

Big Fire in Bradsville, P. Latrobe, Pa., May 11.—Fire of unknown origin which broke out in the Saxman Supply company's stable at Bradesville Friday destroyed, together with the stables, the company's warehouse and meat market and the residences of George Saxman, George Pickinger and Patrick Shally. The total loss will reach $100,00.

FLOWERS AND CAKES INSTEAD OF BRICKS

FRISCO WOMEN GIVE POSIES TO STRIKE BREAKING CAR CREWS.

Pay Tribute to Bravery—Strikers Do Little But Jeer and Threaten as Two Cars Make Trip Through Western Addition.

San Francisco, May 10.—Roses and carnations, instead of brickbats and cobblestones, were features of Thursday's run of two cars of the United Railroads, manned by 20 strike-breakers, from the car barns at Oak and Broderick streets for a distance of three or four miles through the business and residence streets of the western addition.

Stirred to admiration by the courage of the unarmed strike-breakers in operating the cars in the mob-crowded thoroughfares, women all along the route stood on doorsteps or leaned from windows and waved handkerchiefs, clapped their hands, cheered, and threw kisses to the nonunionists as the police-protected cars ran slowly by.

Flowers for Every Man.

On the return trip, on Sacramento street, near Presidio avenues, a young girl ran out from a florist's shop and tossed a handful of bright red carnations to the platform of one of the cars. Lifting their caps and emiling, several of the men leaned for out and caught the flowers. The cars were belted then, while young women brought clusters of carnations and roses from the shop and offered them to the men. So every strike-breaker had a flower in his coat.

From a bakery shop in the neighborhood a woman came hurrying, her hands full of small cakes hot from the oven. They were devoured in a twinkling by the uniformed recipients and she ran back to her shop and brought more.

Strikers Jear and Threaten.

But the afternoon's trip was not all cakes and flowers. A counting, howling crowd of more than 1,000 strikers and strike sympathizers jogtrotted for blocks along the sidewalks, reviling the carmen, yelling frenzied threats to "get them yet," crying "murderers," "cowards," and "scabs." Now and then a stone or brick was thrown, but the guilty man—or boy—hidden in the mob, escaped detection invariably.

Though no shooting was witnessed by the police or the company officials, one of the motormen declared that a shot was fired from the sidewalk, in proof of his statement he pointed to a clean hole in one of the ventilator windows of the car.

The program for Friday is to run two cars through a more dangerous section of the city than the western addition. In this event serious trouble is anticipated.

Twelve of the nonunion operatives who were arrested Tuesday for shooting made affidavits Thursday that when taken to jail they were severely beaten by the police and deprived of food, water and beds for 24 hours.

FIRE VICTIM'S BODY FOUND.

Miss Wittebort's Remains Taken From Kansas City Ruins.

Kansas City, May 11.—The body of Miss Anora Wittebort, the artist, who lost her life in the destruction by fire of the University building, was recovered from the ruins Friday afternoon. Miss Wittebort had been suffocated, and her body was badly burned. No other bodies were found.

The condition of Countess Alexander Blumberg is still considered serious, but she may recover.

Brig. Gen. O. B. Willcox Dies.

Detroit, May 11.—Word has been received here that Brig. Gen. Orlando B. Willcox, U. S. A., retired, former governor of the National Soldiers' home at Washington, died Friday at Coburg, Ont., aged 86.

OFFICIAL CROP BULLETIN

CONDITION OF WINTER WHEAT ON MAY 1 WAS 82.9.

Plowing and Planting Well Advanced —Season Somewhat Late but Improvement Will Be Rapid.

Washington, May 11.—The following crop bulletin was issued Friday: The crop reporting board of the bureau of statistics of the department of agriculture, from the reports of the correspondents and agents of the bureau, finds the area under winter wheat remaining in cultivation on May 1 to have been about 28,132,000 acres. This is 11.2 per cent. or about 3,533,000 acres less than the area reported as sown last fall, and 5 per cent., or about 1,458,000 acres less than the area of winter wheat reported as harvested last year.

The average condition of the growing winter wheat crop on May 1 was 82.9, as compared with 89.0 on April 1, 1907, 94.3 on May 1, 1906, 92.5 on May 1, 1905, and 85.5, the mean of the May averages for the last ten years.

The average condition of winter rye on May 1 was 88, as compared with 92 on April 1, 1907, 92.9 on May 1, 1906, 92.6 on May 1, 1905, and 90.4, the mean of the May averages of the last ten years.

Of the total acreage of spring plowing contemplated, 71.5 per cent. is reported as actually done up to May 1, as compared with 61.9 per cent. at the corresponding date last year, and a ten-year average on May 1 of 65.

Of spring planting 47.9 per cent. is reported as having been completed on May 1 as compared with 53 per cent. on May 1, 1906.

After the crop report was issued by the department of agriculture, Acting Secretary Hays said that the figures were something like what was expected. "Of course," said he, "the season is a little late but on the other hand, there is plenty of moisture in the soil to take the crops out and they are going to improve rapidly. Hay and pasture crops are going to grow rapidly. The conditions are generally good now for crops to do well."

NO MEXICO-GUATEMALA WAR.

Trouble Over Demand For Extradition of Lima Settled.

City of Mexico, May 11.—The Guatemalan affair has been settled. Mexico will not persist in her demand for the extradition of Gen. Jose Lima and Col. Onofre Bone, charged with complicity in the assassination of Gen. Barillas. Diplomatic relations will not be severed.

Senor Gambos, Mexico's minister to Guatemala, will be met in Salvador. A Mexican consul will attend to this country's affairs in Guatemala. At the same time Mexico will not give Senor Giron, Guatemalan minister to Mexico, his passports, the idea being that the withdrawal of each will express Mexico's resentment for Cabrera's conduct during the affair.

The state department will shortly publish the history of the entire matter, with the official correspondence. In this way showing to the world what this government terms the bad faith of Guatemala.

Wages Raised; Rents Go Up.

Fall River, Mass., May 11.—With the recent ten per cent. advance in wages to mill operatives in this city the landlords have started a movement to increase rents. For several months the population of the city has grown steadily with the mills calling for more operatives to keep pace with their business, and as a result the demand for tenements has become great. In many cases rents were advanced $1 to $2 a month on May 1, but a meeting of real estate owners has been called to consider the question of a greater advance.

Tries to Kill Wife, Dies.

St. Louis, May 11.—Following a quarrel in their bedroom early Friday, Christian Miller, a butcher, shot at his wife and mistook her as she ran screaming from the room. As a policeman, attracted by the shot, entered the room, Miller committed suicide with a revolver.

OPENING OF HAYWOOD TRIAL IS PEACEFUL

FIRST PANEL OF TALESMEN AT BOISE, IDAHO, IS EXAMINED BEFORE NIGHT.

Adjourned Till Monday—No Juror Finally Accepted, But Good Progress Is Made—Judge Is Liberal with the Counsel.

Boise, Idaho, May 10.—William D. Haywood, first of the alleged participants in the avenging conspiracy by which it is averred the assassination of Frank Steunenberg was plotted and executed, was placed upon trial for his life Thursday. Counsel for state and prisoner entered at once in a business like way upon the examination of prospective jurors, and kept steadily at the task for five hours.

No juror was finally accepted, but substantial progress was made and the indications at the close of the session were that a jury would be obtained by the end of next week. The opening day of the trial went through to its conclusion in quiet harmony, unmarked by unusual incident. It was earnest and business-like. Its striking feature was the entire absence of crowds or demonstration in any form.

At no time was the courtroom more than half filled and the streets forming the courthouse square contained not a single loiterer.

Adjourned Till Monday.

The session was halted shortly before five o'clock by the exhaustion of the jury panel, and adjournment was taken until Monday morning. Meantime the sheriff will summon a special venire of 100 men. The 11 men under examination, one not yet finally accepted or rejected, were locked up and will be closely guarded.

Haywood was brought to the courtroom sharp at ten in the morning. He found his family in a line of chairs to the right of his seat, and in front were all of his counsel. He paid more attention to his youngest daughter than to anyone else, and throughout the day took practically no part in the selection of jurors. Mrs. Haywood and the elder daughter stood the ordeal apparently well, but the younger child cried after the examination of talesmen began. Mrs. Haywood and her children did not attend the afternoon session.

President's Letter Read.

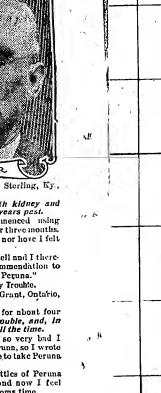
The questioning of the defense took a much wider range than that of the state, and its most striking feature dealt with the possible effect upon the minds and attitudes of jurors of the letter of President Roosevelt in calling Haywood and his associates "undesirable citizens," the speeches in Idaho of Secretary Taft, the message of Gov. Gooding to the legislature of Idaho, the speech in Boise of Senator Heyburn, and the action of the Idaho legislature in passing a resolution appropriating money for the prosecution of the three prisoners.

Mr. Richardson, who conducted the examination of the talesmen, was also particular to ascertain their attitude toward socialists and members of labor organizations, and whether they could give them a fair trial. He was also anxious to know if they had any professional, personal, fraternal, religious or political affiliations with any of the counsel for the state, any connection with detective agencies, any experience in the pursuit or prosecution of criminals, or were members of the Mine Owners' association.

'A remarkable feature of this examination was that all of the talesmen questioned by the defense swore that they had not been influenced by the letter of President Roosevelt or by the speeches of other officials of the national or state governments, and a majority of them said they were Republicans.

Questions of the State.

The chief concern of the counsel for the state in the examination of talesmen, as indicated by their questions, was their attitude towards circumstantial evidence, the absence of which the accused from the state when the crime was committed, the effect of the manner in which jurors and his companions were brought from Colorado, view of the talesmen as to the death penalty for murder in the first degree, and as to union labor. Their examination brought out the fact that the labor and socialistic papers are being distributed free of charge in ports of Ada county.



The custom of the Idaho courts in selecting juries for criminal cases is to call 12 talesmen to the jury box and to keep the box full by immediately filling any vacancies that occur. The state passed 12 men early in the afternoon and the defense began examination in the bands of the defense. Of the 11 men who were remaining in the box at the close of the day's session, only three had been passed by both sides. They were not finally accepted and eBorn and are still subject to peremptory challenge.

They are A. L. Ewing, a carpenter and veteran of the civil war; William Van Ornsdale, a grocer of Boise, and Samuel D. Gilman, a farmer, who lives in the country ten miles from Boise.

Judge Wood announced that he intended to give both sides a wide latitude in the examination of talesmen. He also showed a willingness to grant challenges where they seemed any reasonable objection to the attitude of the talesmen, and in the one contest of the day he ruled with the defense, which had challenged the talesman and was rewarded by the state.

KIDNEY TROUBLE

Suffered Two Years—Relieved In Three Months.

C. B. FIZER.

MR. C. B. FIZER, Mt. Sterling, Ky., writes:

"I have suffered with kidney and bladder trouble for ten years past.

"Last March I commenced using Peruna and continued for three months. I love not used it since, nor have I felt a pain.

"I believe that I am well and I therefore give my highest commendation to the curative qualities of Peruna."

Peruna for Kidney Trouble.

Mrs. Geo. H. Simser, Grant, Ontario, Can., writes:

"I had not been well for about four years. I had kidney trouble, and, in fact, felt badly nearly all the time.

"This summer I got so very bad I thought I would try Peruna, so I wrote to you and began at once to take Peruna and Manalin.

"I took only two bottles of Peruna and one of Manalin, and now I feel better than I have for some time.

"I feel that Peruna and Manalin cured me and made a different woman of me altogether. I have the day I picked up the little book and read of your Peruna."

It is the business of the kidneys to remove from the blood all poisonous materials. They must be active all the time, else the system suffers. There comes when they play but a little assistance.

Peruna is exactly this sort of a remedy. It has saved many people from disaster by rendering the kidneys service at a time when they were not able to bear their own burdens.

SHOWED PRESENCE OF MIND.

Narvy Act of Well Drillers Averted Fearful Disaster.

Two oil well drillers, Earl Sheets and Frank Winks, near Carl Junction, underwent an experience last week that would make a "feature" for a rifle and death melodrama, says the Kansas City Star. The two men were superintending the shooting of a well. Three hundred quarts of nitroglycerin had been brought to the well to be used in the shot.

A "shell" containing 30 quarts had been lowered, but it stuck in the well. The operators thought they could shove the can on down in the well by the rope that held it, but it fell on top of it. The plan appeared to have worked all right, and the baler was drawn up out of the hole and part way up toward the top of the derrick before the horrified spectators noticed that the can of deadly explosive had caught in the baler and was then dangling in the air, ready to fall.

Just as Sheets and Wiake looked up, the shell came loose and started toward the ground. Realizing that if it were hit the ground these 30 quarts of nitro would explode and kill everyone in the vicinity, the two men with presence of mind, ran under it and caught it in their hands. If they had failed in this, not one of the four survivors would have "lived to tell the story."

ZEAL THAT WAS MISDIRECTED

Housekeeper Meant to Please Employer, but Alas!

"Such an article," said H. P. Judson, the new head of the University of Chicago, in declining a rather unusual interview, "would be not only futile but even a mild way harmful. It would be like the work of the cornful housekeeper. There was an old gentleman who had brought home from the war a splendid flag—a flag all torn with bullets, faded with fierce sun and stained with the dust and blood of battle. This superb trophy hung over the mantle in his library. Well, one unlucky day he engaged a new housekeeper and the next week missed his flag. She had, at once, thought in that fag of mine?' he said, politely anxiously to the empty space on the wall.

"I have been working on it, sir," the housekeeper answered. 'I've washed it thoroughly and sewed up all the rents and darned all the holes and when I bring it back to you, sir, I'm sure you'll say it looks as good as new.'"

An Indian's View of an Organ.

After a while curiosity led me back to the end house, and I saw for the first time how the white woman pumps so much air into a box that when she presses on the top board it bowls conveively. I forgot my hashfulness so far as to listen openly and enjoy the operation, wondering much how the white man puts a pair of lungs into a box, which is furnished with a whole set of backs, and while I watched and when he sings to it it appears to answer him. This is how the white people teach their children to dig things, I thought.—From the Outlook—Dr. Charles A. Eastman's "Schooldays of an Indian."

Then She Takes the Links.

The young girl's air was pensive. "To-morrow," she said, "Reginald will conduct me to the altar. There—" Sniffing, she lighted another cigarette.

KEPT PROMISE TO MOTHER TO MARRY ONLY AN AMERICAN

ROMANCE of SYBIL KANE and A. T. KEMP

Hand of Beautiful Southern Girl Was Vainly Sought by Scions of Proudest Houses of European Nobility—Rumor That Heir to Throne Was Among Admirers.

Bridegroom, Young and Immensely Wealthy New Yorker, Has Been Married Before—Couple Will Return to This Country Some Time Next Month.

New York—Live abroad if you want to, but you must promise never to marry a foreigner."

That was the promise the mother of Miss Sybil Kaye made her dive, and Mrs. Kaye gave it. She has married an American, Arthur T. Kemp, a young New York millionaire and society favorite. But in the track of young Mrs. Kemp's honeymoon tour in Europe is a long line of broken hearts—the hearts of earls, dukes, lords and barons.

And that was just what Mrs. Augustus Post, the mother—she has married again since the death of Mr. Kaye—was thinking of when she exacted the promise.

"Have nothing to do with any of these foreign noblemen," was her last behest to her daughter as she left for Europe six years ago. "Meet them if you want to, and study them if you feel so disposed, but don't, don't fall in love, I beg of you. Marry an American as your mother did, and be happy!"

Miss Kaye is well-to-do in her own right and Mr. Post, her step-father, is a man of means and a broker on 'Change. But beautiful as she is, New York society has never known Miss Kaye, although the "400" knows young Mr. Kemp well. He inherited $3,000,000 from his father, who was a member of the big firm of chemists, Lanman & Kemp.

Coming Home in June.

The young pair intend to return in June. You may be sure that Newport and New York are anxious indeed to see the bride who now takes her place in the innermost circle, just as the first Mrs. Kemp did—she was divorced from Mr. Kemp four years ago and is now Mrs. Hollis H. Hunnewell. Mr. Hunnewell was also divorced, his first wife having been Miss Mandin Jaffray.

MRS. A. T. KEMP

If Mrs. Kemp No. 2 has never made her appearance in New York as Mrs. Kemp No. 1 has. She is the sister of Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt and the daughter of Mrs. Frederic Neilson. Her uncle is Frederic Gebhard.

Miss Kaye took Europe by storm.

Soon she became known as "the beautiful Miss Kaye." She made her home in Paris with her aunt, Mrs. A. M. Nelson. No. 3 Place d' Iena, but she traveled extensively. And from the first the foreigners were smitten and more than one heart was laid at her feet.

The Wooing of the Count.

The most ardent of them followed Miss Kaye and her chum, Miss Mildred Harrison, of Philadelphia, across that continent and all the way to Europe, but in vain. He was Count Carl Hohenstein, whose mother was lady-in-waiting to the wife of the prince regent of Bavaria.

Miss Kaye met him in the west, where she was traveling with Miss Harrison, just before leaving for Paris. Count Hohenstein appeared at every city and always at the same hotel where Miss Kaye was stopping. The count's mother was with him; the transcontinental chase of the nobleman after the American girls was chronicled in the newspapers at the time.

But when it was over Miss Kaye was heart whole and fancy-free. She finally eluded the count and his mother at Colorado Springs. She hired a special car and before the count or his mother was aware of it the American girls and their chaperon were in New York.

The next steamer took them to Europe, where Miss Kaye has been ever since. There she traveled everywhere—to the British isles, all over the continent, even to Egypt, up the Nile and into the Holy Land.

With her beauty and her wealth she found it easy to be presented at the courts of Europe. Her social success everywhere was most pronounced. Even it was whispered that the heir to one of the minor thrones had offered to give up his prospective kingship for the American girl's hand.

But Miss Kaye remembered her promise to her mother.

Nons But an American.

"I can marry only an American," she told them all, whether she liked them or not.

Then Arthur Kemp appeared on the scene.

He had gone to Paris three years ago to seek relaxation from all his domestic troubles. He told his friends he would never tempt matrimony again; that he intended to remain a bachelor for the rest of his days. All of his resolutions were changed in the twinkling of an eye.

At a reception at the American embassy in Paris Arthur Kemp met Miss Kaye. He was smitten from the very first; gossip soon linked their names together. While young Mr. Kemp had never known Miss Kaye in the country, he found she came of a fine New Orleans family.

She was born there and when but a young girl went to Nazareth convent in Kentucky, under the tutelage of both French and Spanish sisters. She was already a linguist of distinction—this bright southern girl—and at the tender age of ten carried off the medal for French against older girls than she at Mme. Pickard's fashionable school for girls in New Orleans.

Finally young Mr. Kemp forgot his resolution. He proposed and was accepted.

The marriage took place the other day between this young man who said he'd never marry again, and this girl, who had promised to marry none but an American. The man failed in his resolution—but do you blame him? The girl kept hers—and do you blame her?

Married in England.

The wedding was at the home of the bridegroom's cousin, Gilmore House, Hitchin, Hertfordshire, England. Mrs. Nelson, the bride's aunt, and a few relatives and intimate friends were present.

And as soon as the knot was tied the bride called to her mother, Mrs. Post, who lives at the Holland house, in New York:

"My promise fulfilled. I have married an American. Sibyl."

And Mrs. Post answered: "A mother's blessing."

Mr. Kemp and his young wife will reach New York within a few weeks. At present they are touring southern France in an automobile. Mr. Kemp's friends are legion here and so the fashionables are eager to see his new bride. She has always caroll little for society, preferring music, literary and charitable work to dinners, dances and the opera.

The Kemp divorce three years ago was a sensation. With such connections as the Reginald Vanderbilts and others of equal prominence the affair kept society busy talking for days and days.

Mrs. Kemp before her marriage was the beautiful "Baby Bello" Nelson. Arthur T. Kemp was graduated from Yale in 1894, and at once took the place here in society and stubdom to which his position and wealth entitled him.

Arthur Kemp's First Love.

He was elected to the Knickerbocker and the Union clubs, the two smartest in town, as well as to other clubs of almost as much importance. In due season he met Miss Neilson and in 1897 he married her. The ceremony took place at St. Patrick's cathedral, for all the Neilsons are Roman Catholics, and one of the smartest congregations of the season filled the pews. The late Archbishop Corrigan officiated at the service.

A few days later the young bridal couple were called in the bedside of the bridegroom's dying mother. She expired soon afterward.

The two were apparently perfectly happy until 1902, spending their winters in New York and their summers in Newport. Then there was gossip that the two had become estranged; this proved to be true when Mrs. Kemp left her husband's home and went back to her mother's, No. 109 Fifth avenue. There she lay ill a long while with nervous prostration.

As soon as she was well Mrs. Kemp, No. 1 determined to take matters in her own hands. She made up her mind to get a divorcn in Rhode Island. As the law of that state requires a person to live there a year before attaining legal residence, Mrs. Kemp took a cottage and remained in Newport for the winter. Meanwhile there was all sorts nf gossip. In due season Mrs. Kemp got her divorce. In the interval her sister, Kathleen Neilson, had become Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt.

Mrs. Kemp's Second Marriage.

Then Mrs. Kemp announced her second engagement, this time to Hollis H. Hunnewell of Boston; big, handsome and heir to millions. Only the relatives and a handful of friends assembled for the ceremony, which was performed by Mr. Hunnewell's friend, Judge William W. Douglas of the supreme court of Rhode Island. No Roman Catholic priest, much as the Neilson family have had it, is allowed to officiate at the marriage of a divorced person.

Mr. Hunnewell took his bride off for a honeymoon trip to China and Japan, while young Mr. Kemp went in the opposite direction—to Europe.

Among the few guests were Mrs. Neilson, the mother of the bride, and her other daughter, young Mrs. Vanderbilt; Jules Neilson and their uncle, Frederick Gebhard. Among the friends were Mrs. Sallie Duncan Elliott and Mrs. Victor Sorchan, who had been Miss Hunnewell.

And some of them harked back to that other wedding years before—so different, with the great cathedral packed and the Neilson house filled with flowers and music and the chitter-chatter of many guests. Some of the smartest men in society and the pick of children served as grooms men and the prettiest girls in town were the bridesmaids.

MRS. J. S. TOOKER

And they remembered young Mr. Kemp's bachelor dinner, too. It was the smartest thing ever seen, so those who were present declared. The rooms were set to represent a barnyard and there were all sorts of high jinks, besides a special vintage of champagne, to which numerous toasts to the bride-to-be were tossed off.

But all that jollity is with the dead now—both sides would forget in a new love. Mrs. Kemp has another husband, and even Mrs. Hunnewell No. 1 has married again—the Maude Jeffray that was Mrs. Hunnewell is now the wife of J. S. Tooker. So of the three marriages and the six persons involved, only Miss Kaye has not been married twice.

The Posts, parents of this latest bride, are very wealthy, but care little for society. Mr. Post is an enthusiastic aeronaut and has made several successful ascensions. He is secretary of the Aero club.

Young Mr. Kemp's grandfather was Maj. John S. Thacker, one of the pioneers in the organization of the New York national guard. His daughter is Mrs. Post. Mrs. Post is very much interested in charities and is a member of Father Ducey's church.

Her sister is Mrs. C. Downing Fripp, of Ottawa, Can. She also has a brother in the oil business at Beaumont, Tex.

And all this is society's newest romance—or romances, quite jumbled, but romances still.

Killing a Bear.

A boy named Hiram Frayson, living in the state of Washington, had a most curious adventure a few weeks ago. He was out hunting with a shotgun on his shoulder. Unknown to him a bear struck his trail and followed. The beast was within 20 feet of him, and getting ready to move up and attack, when the hammer of the gun caught on the limb of a tree and was drawn back and the weapon discharged.

The boy heard a roar and a growl behind him and looked around to find a big black bear kicking his last. The charge of shot had nearly blown his head off. He wasn't out bear-hunting that day, but he got one to him on a wagon to hn drawn home.

Caterpillars in Swarms.

Travelers in the Wodonga and Barnawartha districts of Victoria, Australia, find it difficult to get their horses to face the caterpillars that swarm the country roads. They are denuding vegetation and it is feared the vineyards will be devastated. An excursion train was brought to a standstill because dense masses of the insects blocked the rails.

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Fish Substation.

Winona.—Winona is to have a government fish substation, and there is every reason to believe that it will be established early in the present summer. The decision to have the substation established here is due largely to the efforts of Congressman James A. Tawney, whose interest in the matter was awakened by the Winona County Fishermen's association.

Recently the federal commissioner sent R. S. Johnson, the superintendent of the fish hatchery at Manchester, Iowa, to Winona to make an investigation, and Mrs. Johnson has reported favorably. Congressman Tawney has written to Commissioner Bowers, calling his attention to the favorable report, and to a promise of last winter. Definite action is expected soon.

This will be the only government substation in the state, and will be a great benefit to the state, as the small bass and pike saved and cared for here can be shipped to waters in different parts of the state or elsewhere. Samuel Fullerton of the state game and fish commission has expressed himself as delighted at the prospect of the establishment of the substation here, as he believes this is one of the best headquarters that could be found for work along the upper river, and for distribution.

A Vanished City.

Le Sueur.—Ottawa, Le Sueur county, Minn., is dead, vanished, gone, as a municipal corporation. At a vote of the citizens taken pursuant to law for the purpose of dissolving the corporation about four-fifths of the vote cast was to the affirmative.

"To be, or not two be," was the interrogation Ottawa put to itself, and when the votes had fallen as silently, chill and cold as the flakes of a belated snow storm that was whitening the earth outside, the dead of self-effacement was complete and Ottawa was no more forever.

Ottawa was one of the oldest towns in Minnesota. It was, in its lifetime, located where the pallid corpse now lies, on a beautiful, tree-shaded, rock ribbed site on the banks of the Minnesota river, on the Omaha road, seventy miles south of the Twin Cities and twenty miles north of Mankato. It had shops, creameries, quarries, a graded public school and similar things, but it was filled to overflowing with wandering and gibbering phantoms of the rudely dispelled dreams of greatness in the past.

Two Men Drowned.

St. Paul.—Fred Hill and Darwin Truax of St. Paul Park, in attempting to drive across the Rock Island bridge near Inver Grove when it was open, were drowned in the Mississippi river. The bridge had started to swing to allow a steamboat to pass down stream, and the two men, not knowing the bridge tender heard the vehicle approaching he rushed to the open gate, but the two men did not heed him and in the darkness they rushed to their death.

The first intimation that the family of either men received of the accident was the arrival of the horse, without carriage or harness, at the Hill home at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The horse had evidently swam to the shore, landing about half a mile below the bridge.

Mr. Hill was twenty-eight years of age and was a farmer living with his mother, Mrs. Abbie Hill, one mile northeast of St. Paul Park. Mr. Truax was a well digger, forty-five years old, well known in the country south of St. Paul. He was married and leaves five children.

Will Claim Filed in 1800.

St. Peter.—After the lapse of more than a century since the original claim accrued William Cox, Mrs. Irene Buell and Eugene Cox, children of the late E. St. Julien Cox, have received from the estate of their grandfather, a prominent figure in the Revolutionary war, checks representing their share of an allowance made by the United States government on account of their French spoliation claims. The Cox claim rested upon damages inflicted upon French war vessels in reprisal between 1703 and 1800 for alleged violations of treaty pledges made between the United States and France. Cox was the owner of several vessels that operated against the French, and this is the second allowance the heirs have received.

NEWS NOTES.

Duluth.—A teamster named Samuel Ibsen, aged thirty years and single, was shot and instantly killed while standing in a resort near the Holman mine, two miles from Bovey, Itasca county. A man named Toney Talbot is accused of the shooting.

Owatonna.—The annual meeting of the Steele county business men and farmers was in progress at the court house in this city, the meeting being conducted by the American Society of Equity. C. Webber of Rochester made an address on the conduct of business, and the management of the Co-Op-Erative.

Mankato.—Health Officer Bjolland to-day suspended the order requiring that dogs be muzzled. It is considered that the danger of more cases of rabies developing is past.

Minneapolis.—Mrs. Patrick Gibbons 73 years old, of 603 Main street northeast, was probably fatally burned as the result of a lamp explosion in her home.

St. Peter.—Twenty young men at Gustavus Adolphus college have formed a debating society which is proving one of the most popular student organizations at the institution.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. S. KUNZ.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam, Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The talk that some people in dulse in, and some news papers publish, that president Roosevelt must be re-elected to save the country, reminds us of a remark we heard an old lady make a good many years ago when she said. "I don't know what America will do if they should get into war, after Grant dies."

Shadow Etiquette.

"I selected the Kaffir chief rapped softly and hearty," said the sailor. "Can you imagine my surprise when he gave me a kick?

"'Get off my shadder,' he says.

"'Wot?'

"'Get off my shadder.'

"I was standing, by crimus, on his shadder, the shadder of his stomach, I skipped from there to the face. He frowned. When I got on to sunlit ground again he says to me:

"'Didn't you never have no bringin up? Look at you now, lengthenin' out your shadder longer'n mine. Crooch, canarn you, or I'll warm your hide with this here club.'"

The sailor gave a long laugh and emptied his glass of milk.

"Them Kaffirs," he said, "regards their shadders as part of themselves. A polite Kaffir would no more walk on another's shadder than a polite Apache would bite a lady. They have a regular shadder etiquette. You mustn't on no account let your shadder be longer than a superior's. You must crouch to make it smaller, and that there crouch for the purpose of flinchin' the shadder is thought by the Spencerian philosophers—I don't say I think so, mind—to be the origin of the bow."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Much Law, Poor Cost.

Among lawyers there is a saying that in the trial of a case an attorney of light on facts must be heavy on law. The other day an attorney was preparing to leave his office in one of the big office buildings to go to the courthouse to try a case. From the shelves of his library he had taken many large law books containing decisions and opinions of higher courts. At intervals a boy went in and out of the door, and each time he bore in his arms a load of the books, which he carried to an express wagon that stood in the street below. The attorney was to use the books in the courtroom. Another lawyer, who is of southern birth and who always addresses his friends with some army title, watched the boy as he went in and out carrying the love books. Then he dug his hands deep into his trousers pockets and said to the lawyer:

"Well, Ahyll swash, kunnel, you must have no case at all."—Kansas City Times.

Wrecking Your Watch.

The old superstitious belief that you will change your luck if you stop winding your watch at night and wind it in the morning may have some slight basis in fact, according to a jeweler, who says that the morning is the proper time to do the winding. This is not only because the hour of rising is for the average man much more regular than that for retiring, but also as a harvest and most orderly of men are apt to relax and prone to carelessness at bedtime, when more or less worn by the wear and tear of the day. In this condition the winding is apt to be done in a jerky, irregular sort of way or too far or not far enough. "Nine people out of ten wind their watches on going to bed," said the jeweler, "but if they would do it when they get up, at some regular point in the process of making their toilet, they would do it much better."—Philadelphia Record.

Not Too Cold For Him.

The unconscious humor of the English peasantry is shown in a story told by the London Tribune. "Lady Bountiful was calling on a crooked old couple with such creature comforts as the doctor said were available for the old man, who was ill, found being tenderly nursed by his consort. Entering the cottage, she saw the old dame leaning over the fire. "Ah, Susan," she said, "and how's John?"

"He be goan, miss; he be goan," sobbed the old lady. "Leastways that's say that for certain sure, but I did seem agwine just now. But, then, it's that mortal cold up there as I had to come doWn to warm my hands."

His Idea.

Miss Kate—I shall refer you to mamma before giving you a final answer, Mr. Wise—I'm perfectly willing to take you without any reference.—Mail and Express.

Spoiled Cafes.

The cafes and hotels of New York are rivaling each other in the almost dazzling splendor with which they have fitted up small rooms for dinner and after theater parties. At one cafe near Broadway the sides of one of these rooms are composed entirely of mirrors, after the French fashion, while the ceiling is covered with green leaves and grapes, bunches of pink and purple grapes of glass, within which are electric lights. The effect is that of a beautiful arbor. Another cafe has mirrors reflecting small red lights throughout the room, while the ceiling, also of mirrors, is an exquisite imitation of moonlight, the effect of which is obtained by electrics inclosed in globes of the color and sheen of moonlight seen through a delicate tracery of faint green leaves.—Exchange.

A Sad Case.

A Chicago physician was one day called to attend a sick child in a "shabby genteel" quarter of the Windy City.

"Madam," said the doctor to the mother, "you should send this child to the country for several weeks each summer."

"I am sorry to say, doctor," responded the woman, "that we are not rich enough to do that."

"Then," suggested the physician, "why not try the free ward?"

"Oh, doctor," exclaimed the woman, "we are not poor enough!"—Harper's Weekly.

Too Selfish.

Gilman—What's the matter with all you Swamphunt fellows? You don't seem to like my friend Rackidy. Rubber—He's too selfish, Gilman.—Oh, come now! Subduhs—That's what he is. A barn spar him caught fire the other day and he put it out without waiting for the rest of us members of the Swamphunt Hose to reach the scene.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Comfortable Sertges.

"What's your idea of a comfortable fortune?" asked the ambitious youth.

"One," answered the man of experience, "that'll big enough so that you everything you want and not big enough to attract the attention of the grand jury."—Washington Star.

A Novelty.

Guest—I hear you are going to give up housekeeping. Host—Sh! Not so loud! My wife wants to have the satisfaction of discharging the cook.—Puck.

A Bungler.

Very few persons accept themselves safely to their maiden speech. At a wedding feast recently the bridegroom was called upon, as usual, to respond to the given toast, in spite of the fact that he had previously pleaded to be excused. Blushing to the roots of his hair, he rose to his feet. He intended to imply that he was unprepared for speech making, but, unfortunately, placed his hand upon the bride's shoulder and looked down at her as he stammered out his opening (and concluding) remark:

"This—er—thing has been thrust upon me."—London Tit-Bits.

Oddities of Sight.

The two eyes really see two objects. If, for instance, foreigners be held, one at the distance of one foot, the other two feet in front of the eyes and the forefinger held at, two positions of the latter will be observed, one on each side. If the letter be regarded two phantoms of the nearer finger will be observed mounting guard, one on each side.

Good and Evil.

Accustom yourself to submit on every occasion to a small present evil to obtain a greater distant good. This will give decision, tone and energy to the mind, which thus disciplined will often reap victory from defeat and honor from repulse.—Colton.

Gallant.

"That pen will never come to perfection," remarked a young woman walking through a garden with Sydney Smith.

"Then let me lead perfection to the pen," said he gallantly offering her his arm.

A Difficult Labor.

Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.—George Washington.

Prodigies.

"I was just telling my daughter," said Mrs. Nordyke, "that it's a shame of her to play the piano on Sunday."

"Huh!" exclaimed Mrs. Peppery. "Why Sunday especially?"

Marks will keep if it is sprinkled about.

Turpentine and soap will remove ink stains from linen.

Turpentine will remove wheel grease, pitch and tar stains.

Clean gilt frames with a sponge moistened in turpentine.

It will exterminate roaches if sprinkled in their haunts.

A few drops on a woolen cloth will clean it quite nicely.

A few drops added to water in which clothes are boiled will whiten them.

An equal mixture of turpentine and linseed oil will remove white marks from furniture caused by water.

Ivory knife handles that have become yellow can be restored to their former whiteness by rubbing with turpentine.

Carpets can be cleaned and colors restored by going over occasionally with a sponge dipped in warm water in which a little turpentine is added.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

The Juice of the Grape.

The Arabs say that when the first grapevine was planted the demon Iblis sacrificed a peacock on the spot where the plant was set. As soon as it began to sprout, Iblis he slaughtered an ape over it. When the grapes began to appear he slaughtered a lion, and when those were ripe he killed a pig; hence it is that he who drinks wine feels at first as proud as a peacock and imagines himself as handsome as an ape, as bold as a lion and as brutish as a swine.

Fatal Accident.

A most shocking accident occured at the residence of Walt McAndress on Sunnday last, by which little Charlie McAndress as the four year old son of Mr. and Mrs. McAndress lost his life. At about 6 o'clonk in the morning the oldest boy Lenard, a boy ten years old took his little 22 rifle and started to go down to the river a short distance from the house, and Charlie went with him. The boys stopd by a pile of lumber and were playing there when the gun was accidently discharged and the ball struck Charlie on the point of the forehead, penetrated the scull and brain and came out about two inches from where it entered, making a fatal wound. They picked the little fellow un and carried him into the house and notified the neighbors who came to render what assistance they could. But they could do nothing but stand and watch the young life ebb away and try to comfort the grief stricken parents. Jerry O'Brien went to Germantown to telephone for a doctor to Thief River Falls, but the boy died soon after he left and Henry Arndt went to send a telephon to him not to come as the boy was dead.

The remains were taken to Thief River Falls Monday and funeral services conducted by Father Adolph were held in the Catholyick church there Tuesday and the burial had in the cemetary at that place, where Mr. McAndress have another boy buried who died last fall.

Charlie was a bright little boy and his sudden death cast a gloom over the entire comunity who extend their heart felt sympathy to the grief stricken parents.

Editor Sunbeam:

We have just recently heard of the sad news that befell Mr and Mrs. Walt McAndrees, last Sunday morning, and we shal therefore hasten to offer our heart felt sympathy to them in their sad bereavement. In words alone, we can scarsely lessen their sorrow grief and pain, but in our hearts let us hope that it was all for the best, death's angel called but once, and when those summons come we must go Little Charlie has but answered the angels call: his little mission on earth was, short, but sweet to the last. He is now happy, yes happier by far then he was when he nestled in his mothers arms, so let us not begrudge him of his heavenly joys, but instead, let us cherish fond memories of him.

Definitions.

Asked to define a suffragist, a British schoolboy answered, "A person who creates a disturbance." One boy described "surf" as "a form of seaweed which grows in the Pacific ocean." In an essay on the canine race a pupil declared that "small dogs improve by keeping," and another gave the singular of "twain" as "worsted."

There Yet.

Scott—My wife's mother has visited us only once in five years. Mott—That isn't bad. When do you expect her to pay her second visit? Scott—Oh, she hasn't got through her first yet.—New York Telegraph.

A Pretty Experiment.

A very pretty effect may be produced by using some aniline dye in powdered form in alcohol. Fill a small glass with the alcohol and drop the aniliney portion of the dye on its surface. It will shoot down through the liquid, like a strand of color, dividing into two distinct parts, which will subdivide again and again until you have, apparently, an inverted plant in miniature growing before your eyes. All arrangement of leaves may be made to throw the entire growth of this in a fantastic or quaint and delightful shadowy style by varying the position of the glass.

MARJORY

BY J. J. BELL

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Mr. Paton was very proud of his cucumbers. Every morning after breakfast he strolled round his lawn and raveled in his beautiful possessions. Although still on the right side of 40, he was a retired business man. The death of a relative had enabled him to quit an occupation both distasteful and unprofitable. Mr. Paton had no foolish scorn of the tea trade, but he felt no reluctance in leaving it when his relatives legacy allowed him to indulge the two desires of his mind—literary work and gardening. His success in the latter was apparent to anyone who passed Allsa View; in the former he had not yet made a bid for fame, owing to a strange lack of appreciation on the part of publishers.

James Paton was a confirmed woman hater. Although ten years had passed since his first love had jilted him James was still unable to see the humor of that event or of anything else in the world.

It was a gay morning in early April, and the bachelor was enjoying his accustomed promenade along the carefully tended walks of his garden.

His whole attention was concentrated on his crocuses, and he strolled round and round, never seeming to take his eyes from his beautiful lawn. A movement in the shrubbery along the north wall put him on the alert and, stooping down, he picked up a couple of pebbles from the path. In addition to women, Mr. Paton hated cats. The cat had evidently some business in view, for she was crouching and preparing for a spring. Suddenly Mr. Paton's arm went up and the next moment, o nasty thump on the pile raised the cat to emit a dismal yell and leap for the top of the wall.

"Oh naughty, naughty!" said some one behind him.

Mr. Paton wheeled round quickly. A little girl, hugging a hideous doll, was standing on the footpath, gazing at him

"I beg your pardon. Did you speak?" said Mr. Paton. She simply nodded and repeated her observation:

"Naughty, naughty!"

Mr. Paton stared at the child for a moment, then continued his stroll.

"Poor pussy cat," said the little one. "Naughty man!" she added, as the object of her disapproval moved further away.

Finally, annoyed at his want of attention, she picked up a small handful of gravel and flung it through the railings. The missile did not come near striking Mr. Paton, but it scattered and fell among his crocuses.

"Go away, little girl," he said angrily, "or I'll get the policeman for you."

Two minutes later a woful wail came from the railings.

"Lost my dolly, lost my dolly!" said a tearful voice.

Mr. Paton's eyes immediately caught sight of a ragged-looking bundle lying at the foot of the low stone wall.

"Well, it serves you right for being so careless," he said, unkindly. "You'll never see your dolly again," he added, solemnly. "Are you satisfied now?"

A storm of tears was the answer he received.

"Well, well!" he exclaimed hastily. "Now, if I give you back your dolly will you promise never to come here again?"

The child signified her acquiescence in the arrangement. Whereupon Mr. Paton stepped gingerly over the soft, damp earth and secured the unnatural two-looking object of parental affection. Alas! Dolly's china head had struck upon a stone and was split in twain.

"Never mind, little girl," whispered Mr. Paton, hurriedly, and, to tell the truth, dreadfully sorry. "Oh, naughty, bad man! You has killed my dolly!" cried the child, passionately.

"What! D'ye think I did it? Why, confound it! You're making a mistake. See? Don't go away—"

But the small figure was moving along the railing and pressing her broken joy against her bosom.

The bachelor shut the gate and walked up to the house without so much as a glance at his crocuses.

He shut himself up in his study, but somehow he could not apply himself to his work. In the afternoon he took the train to Glasgow, returning late in the evening.

The next morning he proceeded to make his usual promenade of the garden, but it might have been shunned that his eyes turned reverence to the railings than to the lawn. He remained out of doors longer than was his wont, and when he went in at last there was a queer, worried look about his eyes.

After an early dinner he surprised his landlady by telling her that he was going out for the afternoon. It should be mentioned that Mr. Paton had never left his house or garden for years without the express purpose of a visit to the city. But for the time being Mr. Paton was in an extraordinary frame of mind. An old desire had been roused to trouble the peace he had forced upon himself. James Paton had fallen in love again with the woman who jilted him ten years before—who married a man, in the eyes of her parents, immeasurably superior to a struggling tea merchant. James had neither seen nor heard of his faithless sweetheart since the night she took her freedom, and yet, as if her frozen memory had suddenly melted, the old longing took possession of him once more.

Mr. Paton, carrying a brown paper parcel under his arm, set out that afternoon to try to find the little maid whose acquaintance he had made so unhappily the previous morning. He felt that she could not be dwelling far from Allsa View. So he began operations by making a careful survey of the shore for nearly a quarter of a mile. Being unrewarded, he took the side ronds one by one, and then he wandered up the high Fairlie road, till at last, tired and despondent, he betook himself homeward. One thing, however, had happened during his walk. He had made up his mind to burn all his manuscripts.

Ten minutes later he carefully closed the gate of Allsa View behind him. Suddenly he stopped and looked across the lawn. Here and there his crocuses had been torn up by hand-fuls, and the narrow walks were sprinkled with the ruined flowers.

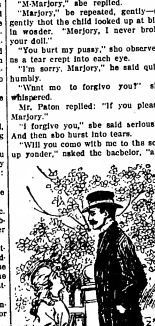
His eyo was arrested by something moving among the shrubbery in the direction of the gato: Childish fingors and his own caught the hands almost at the samo instast. The man, grey with anger, stood looking down on the child with wide fear.

"What's your name?" asked Mr. Paton sternly.

"Marjory," she replied.

"Marjory," he repeated, gently—so gently thot the child looked up at him in wonder. "Marjory, I never broke your doll."

"You burt my pussy," sho observed, as a tear crept into each eye.



"I'm sorry, Marjory," he said quits humbly.

"What mo to forgivo you?" she whispered.

Mr. Paton replied: "If you please, Marjory."

"I forgive you," she said seriously. And then she burst into tears.

"Will you come with me to the seat up yonder," naked the bachelor, "and

"Want tn Kiss You," Said Marjory

see what's in this parcel? I've been looking for you all afternoon," remarked Mr. Paton, on tho way up the walk.

"Saw you goin' out," said Marjory. Then all at once hnr tears flowed afresh.

"What is it, Marjory? You'rn not afraid of me now, ara you?" he asked.

"W-want you to forgivo me," she sobbed.

"I forgive you, Marjory," he returned gently. "But now we must both be hanpy," he added, cheerfully, as they reachod the seat.

"Want to kiss you," said Marjory.

Without a word the bachelor bent down.

"Better now," sighed the child. "Now you cryin'?" she demanded abruptly.

"Nonsense, Marjory. Come away now and open the parcel. It's a present to you from me, Marjory."

Marjory's shrill voice rent the air with one long shriek of delight over the finest doll that Mr. Paton had been ahle to procnro in Glasgow.

"I want to cuddle you," she whispered.

And he took her up in his arms.

"Marjory, Marjory," he observed, a little later, "it's about timn you were going home.

"What will your daddy say tn you for being away so lyag?" asked Mr. Paton as they went along the road.

"Got no daddy," returned the child. "Daddy dead long time ago."

"And your mother?"

"Mummy's never angry—sometimes sorry," said Marjory.

The bachelor was about to bid her ask permission before coming in to see hnr other dolly, with its head in sticking plaster, and to make friends with her pussy cat. He smiled good-naturedly, and accompanied her np the path to the house.

"Marjory, Marjory, whero have yon been?" cried a voice, and Mr. Paton looked so queer that the child gazed at him in alarm.

Round a clnmp of rhododendrons came a woman, at the sight of whom the bachelor stood staring like one suddenly awakened from a dream.

"How do you do, James?" said Marjory the elder, holding out her hand to Mr. Paton.

Blouses for Young Girl and Her Older Sister

Pale blue spotted delaine in this style makes a pretty girlish blouse. The yoke is lined with sateen, and edged with a very narrow white silk gimp or lace insertion. The material for the lower part is tucked in graduated lengths before being joined to the yoke. The fastening is down the center front under a wide box-plait, ornamented with buttons. Waistband of plain blue silk.

Velveteen in a rich, dark shede of red is used for this blouse, which is quite easy to make. The yoke is composed of a small cream lace collar, pointed in front, but rounded off narrower across the back. These collars can now be bought with collar band already fixed. The velveteen is plaited from the shoulders to the bust, then allowed to fall free. The fastening is down the center back. The sleeves are of velveteen puffed to the elbow; they are worn with undersleeves of cream lace.

ALL MATCH IN COLOR

Gloves, Hosiery and Other Things Must Be of Same Shade, Is the Decree.

When asked recently to name some of the new frivolities of fashion a French woman who does shopping in Paris for the 400 of all lands said:

"The new gowns are remarkable in that they must be worn with small things to match. I buy gloves, hosn, etc., with all gowns, and the price of the set is often equal to the cost of the entire costume. I buy the small appointments of dress this season rather than the gowns themselves. A set may include fan. bag, stock, bos, shoes, stockings and hat.

"I have a customer who wrote me that she desired to spend $500 upon small trimmings for her costume. 'I have gowns enough,' said she, 'but I need all sorts of trimmings in the new colors to go with my gowns.'

"With part of the money I bought a turquoise feather hoa, nearly two yards long. It is a pale turquoise. I purchased a sandal wood fan with long sticks and covered with ostrich feathers at the tips. I bought a long, blue feather for the bat and I added a pair of turquoise-blue gloves.

"For another woman who also desired blno I bought a set of turquoise jewelry, which this season is quite unique. I chose the imitation of course. But I selected somo blue enamel flowers set with turquoise and I bought a long fine gold chain with turquoise set in the links. I added a pair of turquoise glove garters and I bought some blue enamel flowers for thn hat.

"I have a customer who complains that her skirts set badly around the foot. They do not flare sufficiently, though she spends plenty of money for her skirts. And for her I selected half a dozen petticoats made in the latest style around the foot. They are specially designed to make the lingerie skirts set out."

Gown of Ecru Pongee.

A gown of ecru pongee which appeals to a discriminating taste is fashioned with a full skirt showing three tucks as the only trimming. The bodice is of the shirt-waist variety in cut, but has a deep yoke and wide bands of heavy clury lace, coffee dipped to give the proper coloring. The sleeves have full uppers of pongee, the long undersleeves being of the lace.

Square Yokes Have Come Again.

The square yoke, jumper and guimpe effects are gaining over the curved, and particularly the oval lines so popular last winter. Here, there is a decided movement in the direction of high necks and the newest collars curve down in the front for the comfort of the chin, but creep up very high behind the ears and at the nape of the neck.

The Little Girls' Hat.

Charming models in hats are shown for little girls in the bell shape so much in favor for her big sister. Very lovely they are, trimmed with quaint bunches of field flowers of soft-lonlaine ribbon in pale shades of pink and blue.

NEW DESIGN IN COLLARS.

One of the newest collars. The fullness from the tucks form a ruffle at the lower edge.

IN RICH BROWN CLOTH

Skirt and Bolero with Shoulder Cape, Trimmed with Fur and Braid.

A costume of tobacco-brown Amazon cloth is shown here. The skirt, which is a circular shape, is trimmed with a narrow band of beaver fur, headed by rows of silk braid put on straight, and once in loops. The foot is stiffened by an interlining of canvas about seven inches deep.

The bolero has a shoulder cape, the fronts of which are continued in ends to the lower edge. It is lined with silk, and is trimmed with fur and braid. The elbow sleeves are finished by bell-shaped cuffs, open at the back, and trimmed with fur and braid. The muff is of beaver, ornamented with lace.

The low, soft crown of the hat is of the same cloth as the dress, with a silk applique in the center. Thn brim is of beaver.

New Fan Design.

A new idea in feather fans has been recently introduced. The feathers may be copied feathers, pheasants, birds of gayer plumage or the quiet pigeon, and the sticks tortoise shell. When the fan is closed the head of the bird ornaments the first stick, and when open it is on one side. Those who like such a use of birds consider this a charming effect.

"Old Garden" Hat Back.

Many old-fashioned hats have returned into high favor.

The garden hats are lovely with their low, broad crowns and drooping brims. The new effect in to have streamers, which, instead of being tied under the chin, as in other days, are now tied loosely at the back hoop of the hat and hang between the shoulder blades.

Enlivening Tailor-Mades.

To enliven the severe tailor-made there are the smartest waistcoats imaginable. They can be made either in silk, velvet or cloth, but they must always be checked or striped. A gray cloth costume with a black and white taffeta vest edged with black velvet and trimmed with black velvet buttons should appeal to ono's taste.

Girdles Worn with Net Waists.

Girdles to be worn with net waists are often the simplest of crushed belts made from the material itself or soft liberty taffeta silk or ribbon. Chains of coral, topaz, turquoise and other delicately colored semi-precious stones are worn over these blouses and give just the right dash of color.

ROADS TO SUCCESS.

The youthful jokesmith stood in the august presence of the great editor. With trembling fingers he untied the string around his batch of jokes and laid them on the editor's desk.

"I have brought you some jokes," he said, with unsteady voice. "Would you care to look them over?"

"We have no use whatevnr for new jokes," replied the editor coldly, as he turned to other work on his desk.

"But these," said the young jokesmith, "are not new. Some of these are at least 20 years old."

With a cry of joy the great editor grasped the jokesmith's hand, accepted the jokes, and handed him a pure five-cent Havana, union made cigar.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Perfect Womanhood

The greatest menace to woman's permanent happiness in life is the suffering that comes from some derangement of the femininorgans.

Many thousands of women have realized this too late to save their health, barely in time to save their lives.

To be a successful wife, to retain the love and admiration of her husband, should be a woman's constant study.

If a woman finds that her energy is pleasure flagging, that she gets easily tired, dark shadows appear under her eyes, she has backache, headache, bearing-down sensations, nervousness, irregularities or the "blues," she should start at once to build up her system by a tonic with specific powers, such as the great woman's remedy for woman's ills, made only of roots and herbs.

It cures Female Complaints, such as Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation and Ulceration, and all Organic Diseases, and is invaluable in the Change of Life. It dissolves and Expels Tumors at an early stage. Subdues Faintness, Nervous Prostration, Exhaustion, and strengthens and tones the Stomach. Cures Headache, General Debility, Indigestion, and invigorates the whole female system. It is an excellent remedy for derangements of the Kidneys in either sex.

THE DAIRY

DEHORNING CHUTE.

Contrivance Which Will Make the Task of Dehorning an Easy One.

One of the good points about this chute is the hinged doors on the rear end, which make it possible to adjust the chute to any size barn door. Where the width of the rear end of the chute is stationery, and cannot be adjusted to the door as shown in the illustration, there is often a foot or two of space to be divided between the two sides. As our readers who have had experience in dehorning know, an animal will always choose to pass through this smell opening rather than into the chute, and thereby cause a great deal of aggravation. The chute proper is mounted on two heavy timbers which may be four-by-fours or four-by-sixes, while the uprights are generally four-by-fours. The stanchion is made to open and close and secured in any way that suits. The convenient part of the chute is the trough-shaped part started H. It is made of two-inch stuff and securely fastened to bottom cross pieces. After the animal is secured in the stanchion a halter is thrown over its head and the halter rope is passed through the hole just below the letter H. The letter A that suits. The convenient part of the chute is the trough-shaped part started H. It is made of two-inch stuff and securely fastened to bottom cross pieces. After the animal is secured in the stanchion a halter is thrown over its head and the halter rope is passed through the hole just below the letter H. The letter A shows a continuation of this rope to the pole which is used as a lever to bring the animal's head into position on the trough.

The Dehorning Chute.

As soon as this is accomplished the rope B is thrown over the neck of the animal, and secures the head firmly to the through, when the dehorning operation may be performed. As soon as the operation is concluded the animal is unstanchioned and one of the sides of the chute is hinged so that it may be opened for the animal to escape from the chute, after which it is closed and another animal driven in. The dimensions for this chute, suggests the Iowa Homestead, may be made to suit the size of animals to be dehorned. However, it is a good plan to make it large enough to accommodate large animals, as the chute comes very handy in performing any kind of an operation on an animal when it is necessary to secure him. The hinge and latch on the side door and on the swinging gates at the rear should be made extra strong and not less than three in number, as sometimes an animal will throw itself and place more or less strain on the sides of the chute. The width of the chute at the stanchion is commonly three feet, while at the rear end it is eight inches wider.

MANIPULATING THE UDDER.

System Developed by Danish Scientist Proves Valuable Under Test.

It is well known that the average milker gets less milk than he who does a thorough job; that incompetent milking means not only inferior, but indirect loss, not only an immediate lessening of the fat yield, but tends toward drying the cow up. A Danish scientist has recently developed a special system of udder manipulation, a sort of massage of the mammary gland, as it were, which it is claimed augments the flow. The Hegelund method, as it is called, involves three manipulations, each thrice repeated or until no more milk is obtained. First, the pressure of the quarter on each side against each other thrice repeated, followed by removal of the milk; second, the pressure of the glands together on each side, the fore quarter being first manipulated and then the hind quarters, followed by removal of the milk, and third, the fore quarters are pressed between hand and body, the hands holding the teats loosely then the hind quarters also, followed by milking. Trials of the schemes made at the Wisconsin and New York stations accorded a daily average increase per cow of a pound of milk and two ounces of butter. The after milk was very rich in fat, testing about ten per cent. This after milking takes not to exceed five minutes' time, often only two or three minutes. The two ounces of butter may be held at a low estimate to be worth two cents. This would be a fair pay for five minutes' work, 24 cents an hour and the skim milk thrown in. Not only is more milk and butter made, but the secretion is stimulated, and the lactation period prolonged. It may be remarked, however, that the differences in milk and butter yields between this method and careful stripping are not great. The Danish method emphasizes more perhaps than has hitherto been done, the actual and potential losses due to incomplete milking.

Stop the churn as soon as the butter granulates if you want to work it all the buttermilk is out.

Swede Returned According to Instructions on Envelope.

Christ Nelson, having been in this country only a few weeks, was slow in learning American customs, and especially the inscriptions on envelopes. One of his first acts after landing in Oregon was to take out naturalization papers. On the corner of the envelope in which were contained the documents that made him an American citizen, were the words: "Return in five days."

"Wal, I be hay," he said yesterday, as he shuffled up to the counter in the county clerk's office and spoke to Deputy Praap.

"What do you want?" asked that official, carefully noting the embarrassed flush on the Swede's face.

"Wal, it say on this her envelope 'return in five days,' and time be up to-day, so I kin come round."

When assured that nobody wanted him, he turned with surprise and walked sadly away, not certain whether he was naturalized or not.—Portland Oregonian.

Since he is elected to the next congress he will, if he lives to the end of his term, take the first place in the list of veterans.—Youth's Companion.

CHANGE IN FOOD

Works Wonders in Health.

It is worth knowing that a change in food can cure dyspepsia. "I deem it my duty to let you know how Grape-Nuts food has cured me of indigestion. "I had been troubled with it for years, until last year my doctor recommended Grape-Nuts food to be used every morning. I followed instructions and now I am entirely well.

"The whole family like Grape-Nuts, we use four packages a week. You are welcome to use this testimonial if you see fit."

The reason this lady was helped by the use of Grape-Nuts food, is that it is predigested by natural processes and therefore does not tax the stomach as the food she had been using; it also contains the elements required for building up the nervous system. If that part of the human body is in perfect working order, there can be no dyspepsia, for nervous energy represents the steam that drives the engine.

When the nervous system is run down, the machinery of the body works badly. Grape-Nuts food can be used by small children as well as adults. It is perfectly cooked and ready for instant use.

SUCCESSFUL TONIC TREATMENT, FOOD IN DISREPUTE.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Cured This Woman and Have Cured Many Hundreds of Other Cases of Common Ailments

Loss of appetite, coated tongue, bad taste in the mouth, heavy dull headache and a dull, sluggish feeling—these are the symptoms of stomach trouble. They indicate that the stomach is on a strike; that it is no longer furnishing to the blood the full quota of nourishment that the body demands, hence every organ suffers.

There are two methods of treatment, the old one by which the stomach is humored by the use of prejudiced foods and artificial ferments, and the new one by which the stomach is toned up to do the work which nature intended of it. A recent cure by the latter treatment is that of Mrs. Mary Stackpole, of 81 Liberty street, Lowell, Mass. She says:

"I suffered constantly for years from stomach trouble and terrible backaches and was confined to my bed the greater part of three years. I was under the care of our family physician most of the time, but did not seem to get better.

"I was completely run down and was not able to do any work about the house. My blood was impure and my complexion pale. I suffered from flashes of heat, followed suddenly by chills. I had awful headaches, which lasted from three to four days. I could get but little rest at night, as my sleep was broken and fitful. As a result I lost 20 pounds in weight and became very nervous.

"I was in a wretched condition when I heard about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I started to take the pills at once and began to gain in weight and health. I was encouraged by this to keep on until I was cured. My friends and neighbors often remark what a changed woman I am and I owe it all to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

These wonderful pills are useful in a wide range of diseases such as anaemia, rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, nervous headaches, and even locomotor ataxia and partial paralysis.

The great success of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills lies in the fact that they actually make new blood and in this way build up and strength to every portion of the body. The stomach digests food, the nerves are strengthened, every organ is stimulated to do its work.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Y. M. C. A. IN THE FIELD

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Tokio, Japan—"Before the war" is as much a stock phrase in Japan today as it ever was in the United States after the struggle of the sixties. The war has made all things new. Now Japan is a ship that has found herself. And what are mostly guesses on the part of the rest of the world concerning Japan's purposes and future are intensely interesting present problems with persons on the scene. The situation here is complex and rather bewildering, but there are certain unquestioned facts which stand out clearly as a result of the war.

One of the wonders wrought by this wonderful war takes rank as perhaps the most conspicuous achievement of its kind in religious history. For the conflict lately waged to Macchuria has been the means of winning the whole nation to friendliness for Christianity. This amounts to nothing less than a vast Christian conquest. It justifies the sanguine reports which missionaries sometimes send home, without any such grounds as they may stand upon in the present case. Representatives of many denominations, from all parts of the empire, natives as well as foreigners, have assured me that practically the last vestige of active opposition to Christianity has gone from Japan, thanks to the work done in that prompted the offer to the government at the outset of the war, by the national Y. M. C. A. of a work for the army similar to that among American and British soldiers.

All sorts of organizations and agencies and persons wanted to go to the front. Religious bodies were especially eager. But, like the war correspondents, they were kept waiting, till Y. M. C. A. men were chosen. Indeed, it had been said that the opposition to Christianity in the army had been based on the very limit of their rights. While various self-esteeming gentlemen of the press were being deported from Chikamgo they kept their place in the service. The association patiently waited and worked. Finally its day came. All other Christian enterprises were debarred from the scene of warfare. But three representatives of the Association, two Japanese and one American, with their equipment, were started for Antung. During two weeks detention at Chikamgo they kept their place in serving the garrison. So when the three secretaries resumed their journey it was with the cordial endorsement of the commandant at the latter place. At Antung the authorities gave to the best located building in the city for the Y. M. C. A. workers, and soon the secretaries Manchuria by the Y. M. C. A., with contributions given at first in this country by interested Americans, but later, with equal generosity, by the Japanese themselves. Long ago red glove liberty was officially granted, but it takes more than an imperial edict to alter the attitude of a people and their atmosphere, so to speak. Despite the exaggerated reports in the past of Japan's having been won to Christianity, it has remained true, until this war, that missionaries have encountered many definite obstacles as well as a hostile spirit not infrequently displayed.

Emperor Strikes Blow at His Own Deity.

The most remarkable outcome of the work which is herein described was the gift of the emperor of Japan of 10,000 yen ($5,000) towards the army work of the Young Men's Christian Association. What this means the western world can scarcely comprehend. It has given "face" to the whole movement. All public criticism has been stilled by it. The Young Men's Christian Association has been identified with the national life. Followed, as it was, by the empress' gift of 5,000 yen to the Okayama orphanage, a Christian institution, with a pledge of 1,000 yen each year for five years, the impression made upon the Japanese mind has been profound. A man who keeps posted upon affairs at the capital, Rev. Dr. John D. Forest, assures me that, so far as he can learn, the emperor has since made no gift to any Buddhist object.

The curious feature of this extraordinary episode is that it is like an idol's putting a lighted dynamite bomb under its own pedestal. At least that is the way it strikes a western mind. The emperor of Japan is considered a deity by the vast majority of his subjects. His picture is worshiped in the schoolrooms. He is the most popular figure in the nation's pantheon. Yet here he indorses and supports an avowedly Christian movement, which, if successful, must overthrow all other worship than that of the Christian's God. Truly, among the lanmmerskin anomalous conditions in modern Japan this is not the least anomalous.

Americans to the Front.

As is generally known, the Y. M. C. A. work in Japan was planted and is fostered by the international committee, having its headquarters in New York. With a skill which some older missionaries find it difficult to emulate, the American association secretaries have kept themselves in the background and have put the work entirely in the control of the Japanese; yet the American secretaries are still here, and recognized by their native associates as real leaders in the work. The associations that exist in Tokio, Osaka, Nagasaki, Kioto and Kobe have American as well as native secretaries. It was American alertness that secured the first contract for the army work, and with the most unusual cooperation on the part of officials, as shown by free transportation of men and supplies, granting privileges for mail and telegrams, details of soldiers for manual labor, etc., the Association work expanded until it has eleven bases established and reached even to the firing line. The status speedily attained by the workers is evident from the fact that it soon became an ordinary occurrence for commanders of regiments to send for the American secretaries as if they were superior officers.

The Religion of a Hair Cut.

The type of religion displayed was most practical; the approval of the Japanese was not accorded for any sentimental considerations. Simply because the Y. M. C. A. proved useful to the soldier it was welcomed and assisted. Thus, during the entire campaign, 3,385,000 pieces of stationery were distributed, but only 416,000 pieces of religious literature. In even more marked proportion 1,752 concerts were given for the men, and only 613 religious meetings. Of course the entire project was avowedly Christian, but its faith was manifested by its works rather than by words. It was the religion of good deeds, and so even the most ignorant coolie in the ranks could comprehend it.

Recreation, diversion, accommodation and comfort were the aims of the Y. M. C. A. rooms. Here a soldier could find a place to write home and free stationery. Every one of the three and a quarter million pieces of stationery, bearing the Christian name, as it did, became a silent evangelist for the Christian propaganda. Into the remotest corner of the empire it carried the news that Christians were brotharing the man at the front. And, naturally, every letter written told of the comforts and pleasures provided by this Young Men's Christian Association. Could the most bigoted Buddhist, in the remotest rural region, cherish ill-will toward a religion that was so helpful to his son and his neighbors?

Bathhouse, tashouse, barber shop, music hall, library, tailor shop, writing room and lounging room are all combined in these Y. M. C. A. quarters. The men were supplied with innumerable games, including baseball (the American national game has become ubiquitous), archery, fencing and fishing tackle. This last enabled the men to vary their meager diet and at some places literally hundreds of men would be found lined up along the bank of a stream fishing for fun and a dinner. It takes little imagination to read into the following figures, just issued, a royal and far-reaching ministry that fairly stirred the nation, and called forth from every general in the field, and from the prime minister and minister of war, the strongest expressions of approval and gratitude. Three quarters of a million different, individual soldiers were touched by the work. About 1,566,000 soldiers notared the 11 different branches during the war, some men more than once, of course, which explains the enormous total.' Eighty-eight thousand obtained buttons, soap, thread, patches, etc. Books were borrowed by 26,000 men, and 152,000 used the association's barber supplies. The laundry facilities of a single branch were employed by 18,000 soldiers. In addition, hundreds of visits were made by the workers to hospitals and troop tracks and camp at a distance from the association bases.

After the day's work was done, the secretaries generally had to stay up late at night putting the overworked hair-cloth into condition for the morrow. The wounded men's hair was cut by the secretaries themselves. A pathetic incident of the work of ministry required is related by Secretary Hibbard: "Oas day a man accosted him with: 'Will you please wash my face?' I looked at him and saw that he certainly needed it, and that both arms were in slings, because of having been shot away. He had not had a chance to wash his face for two weeks before he was wounded. So I started in. But soap and water had no effect on that accumulated dirt, so I finally had to scrape the man clean. Then I cut his matted, bloody hair, and when I got through the man was weeping for gratitude. He could not utter a word of thanks—and when the politeness of the Japanese deserts him, he is in a pretty bad way."

A New Feature of the Army.

All this work was done by e force of only 41 secretaries, the Americans who initiated and largely directed it being C. V. Hibbard, Y. W. Helm, George Gleason and S. D. Hauge. There was an abundance of volunteer help on the part of the soldiers, and by military details officially ordered. The officers themselves freely cooperated. In the matter of outdoor sports and indoor entertainments the soldiers gave unlimited assistance. But the best friend of the secretaries was the graphophone, of which they men seemed never to tire. Now one hears these machines at work day and night all over Japan.

Since the return of the army, permanent Y. M. C. A. headquarters have been established, by the urgent request of the army officers, at Liaoyang and at Port Arthur. The governor-general of Liaoyang peninsula made a personal subscription of a thousand yen for the continuence of the work. At Port Arthur the military officials turned over to the association and agreed to keep in repair, a beautiful Russian cathedral to be used as Y. M. C. A. headquarters. The most active Y. M. C. A. in the world was probably at Dalny; as many as 10,000 soldiers passed within its portale in a single day. When the main army was returning home it ministered to more than half a million men. One of the Japanese secretaries of the association has gone into rescue work at Dalny, for, while the army was kept absolutetly free from these camp followers during hostilities, a flood of dissolute women, recruited under the most pitiable circumstances, has since poured into Macchuria.

Touching the Nation Through the Army.

The part that the army has played in the modern religious history of Japan is more considerable than would at first sight appear. During the war the Christians were foremost in visiting hospitals, meeting soldier trains with refreshments and food, and in preparing "comfort bags," a compect assortment of useful articles, including a copy of the gospels. Some 180,000 portions of Scripture were distributed among the soldiers. A small book of "Comfort Songs for Soldiers" was compiled and distributed freely by the missionaries, and it was quite common to hear crowds of men lustily sing these Christian hymns. Not a few of the missionaries did nursing during the war, and in the care of soldiers' families and orphans they have been conspicuous.

The value of this work as an adjunct to the strictly military preparations were seen at Dalny, where practically the whole army of the Japanese passed through the Y. M. C. A. rooms. After the fall of Port Arthur the soldiers expected to go home, at least for a rest. They had endured hardships of which the world has some knowledge. Of the manner in which the world knows nothing; one of these was the inability to gat through the censor more than one letter a month or two. Even then the paper and envelope cost five cents, and the soldiers' pay for a month was 20 cents. After the fortress surrendered the soldiers thought these troubles were over. Instead, they were ordered across the ice, at a temperature always below freezing, to augment the army at Harbin. En route this dispirited army touched the Y. M. C. A. It warmed itself, drank its fill of hot tea, heard the old home songs on the graphophone, and wrote letters, sometimes 25,000 a day. This revived the spirits of the men to a degree almost inconceivable. They entered with grumbling; they left with songs, assured that such a country which made possible such an institution as this had not forgotten them.

The consequence of all this self-effacing, assidnous and effective ministry to the nation's soldiers has been to establish Christianity on new and more favorable basis throughout Japan; and should this soon come to pass, as is predicted, a national movement toward Christianity, this army work will have been largely responsible for it.

Some people are so poor that they can afford to pay an honest tax rate by buying only what they possess.

TRADING AT HOME

MANY REASONS WHY IT IS THE BEST POLICY.

SELF-INTEREST A BIG FEATURE

That Which Benefits the Community as a Whole Benefits Each Individual—The "Why and Wherefore."

Antifreeze is the law which governs the transactions of trade. It is the first light in which the subject of "Trading at Home" must be treated. Sentiment has little influence in trade.

The prosperity of any community depends on the volume of business transacted within its borders. The facility with which business can be transacted depends largely upon the amount of money in circulation and any influence which takes money out of a community is detrimental to the financial welfare of the community.

It is in this respect that trading with mail order houses operates to the community. Money which should be kept in local circulation goes to swell the volume of money in the distant city instead of remaining at home to be turned over and over again as the medium of transfer among local merchants and their customers.

The effect of this diversion of money is not generally known to the citizens who lose sales thereby; it extends eventually to every member of the community. It is a curtailment of business which affects the value of all property even to the labor of the man who labors for a day's work for his living. It reacts upon the people who purchase away from home in a degree which more than offsets any possible saving in price that may be effected in the purchase.

Every dollar sent out of any community for goods which can be purchased at home represents a percentage of injustice to the community itself. In the first place, some merchant loses the profit on a sale. Not only that, but the price of the article represents so much of the merchant's capital which is tied up in the article and is not working. Having capital tied up means that the operations of the merchant are curtailed to that extent. He has that much less to spend; that much less to pay to salaries to his clerks; to pay in patronage of the butcher, the baker and the other purveyors of the necessities of life; to invest in property, in newspaper advertising. The money which goes to the mail order house decreases the per capita purchasing power of the community; a factor which determines largely the value of all goods or property on the market, the scale of wages and the interest on loans.

It is not hard to trace the effect of the diversion of money from its legitimate channels. When money is scarce trade languishes because of the lack of circulating medium; merchants and all others curtail expenses; the volume of trade decreases and nothing is done; activity in trade but an increase from some quarter of the circulating medium. When the volume of money increases trade revives and it moves as fast as the volume of money will permit. Money that is working is constantly producing profit to all; money that is not working produces stagnation in trade.

Accordingly, it is to the interest of every member of a community to confine his expenditures as nearly as possible to the community in which he lives. Every dollar he spends at home helps to make his own holdings more valuable because they are more salable. When a community has money with even to the outsider. Spending money at home is a species of loyalty which makes materially for the upgrowth of every community to reinvest the money it produces in the community which produces it.

The chance of being swindled is an argument used against trading with the mail order houses. Goods advertised at cut prices often fail to measure up to the description of the advertisement. But very few cents which is saved on the price of—an article so bought is usually sacrificed in the quality of the article. Buying from the mail order house is buying blind. A purchaser never thinks of buying from a local merchant without examining the goods, but will often send his money to a mail order house with blind faith that the article will prove to be as represented. How often this faith is misplaced can be proven by any one comparing the goods bought from mail order houses with the goods offered for sale at home. The home merchant never would follow this system for a little while, he would probably find that the goods offered at home as to price, quality and as good bargains as the mail order goods, taking quality into consideration. If this fact is known in true, the buyer of mail order goods is a distinct loser, as he has not only purchased poor goods but robbed the community in which he lives, as well as himself, of the use of the money.

The catalogue man recognizes in the advertising spent his most powerful assistant. He realizes that it is advertising which brings him his orders. Let the local merchants awaken to the fact that the local papers can do for them just what the advertising agents of the catalogue houses and the flew of money to the city mail order houses from this community will stop.

Sporting Gossip

The season of 1907 promises to be the most successful in baseball history. There are more professional clubs under the national agreement, which is the supreme government of baseball to-day, then at any time since the league consisted of eight clubs, 40 years ago. Listed under the head of the legitimate there are 30 professional baseball leagues throughout the United States, and these will average seven clubs to the league. That gives us 210 professional baseball clubs to entertain the sport loving public from the cosmopolitan cities to the small hamlet. These clubs will try out and employ regularly 20 players during the season, that means that 4,200 professional ball players are on the pay roll of the various clubs, and through the support of the public $840,000, or nearly $1,000,000, is paid out to the boys and men throughout the country, who can dexterously catch and hit e ball. Aside from the professional players so listed, there are hundreds of semi-professional eagues, in which the players receive eeleries ranging from $50 to $100 a month. If it were possible to reach anything like an accurate aggregate of the money paid out in this way, it is very likely that the salaries paid to ball players would easily reach $1,500,000. This year the Tri-State league and other small organizations have been brought into the "legitimate" baseball fold, and in nearly every city of the United States preparations are being made for a prosperous season. New stands are being built in nearly all the minor league cities, and the towns which could formerly present nothing more than a "skinned diamond" have gardeners at work laying sod for a grass field. Moreover, a pride in the general appearance of baseball fields has enveloped the entire country, and in a few years the unpretentious baseball parks will resemble public parks, so great has been the tendency toward the artistic and beautiful.

Walter Clerkson.

Walter Clerkson in 1901 played his first, season os a professional. He signed with the New York American club in 1906 and joined the team after the close of the college term in June. In addition to being the captain of the Harvard team Clerkson had for four years been the best pitcher in college. In his four years he only lost five games—three to Princeton and one each to Georgetown and Williams. He did not prove the phenomenol pitcher his over-enthusiastic friends expected him to be in the American league, and he was frequently batted for other great batsmen. The Quakers always started off at a great clip, threatening all sorts of things. But they never finished anywhere.

"Why? Because, in midsummer, when the pitchers of the opposing clubs in the league had rounded into shape and were going along at their best, the heavy hitters of the Philadelphia club were at a disadvantage, and they had nothing to fall back on. In modern baseball, pure and dimple slugging will not carry any team through a season or a finish any more. The men who are pennant pitchers that the sluggers cannot hit consecutively from start to finish to win must fall back on team work.

"I take it that the Cleveland club, like the old Quakers, has no resource in reserve. When its policy of straight-hard hitting does not avail, it is all at sea. The old Philadelphia club was supposed to be the strongest in the league, and it was so, in pure mechanical ability, but it never won any pennants. For the same reason I do not believe that Cleveland will do much to capture the American league flag this season, or any other, so long as nothing but straightaway baseball is played on."

"The Cleveland club," said Ned Hanlon the other day, "reminds me altogether too much of the old Philadelphia team, which had big Delehanty, Jimmy Slick and other great batsmen. The Quakers always started off at a great clip, threatening all sorts of things. But they never finished anywhere.

"Why? Because, in midsummer, when the pitchers of the opposing clubs in the league had rounded into shape and were going along at their best, the heavy hitters of the Philadelphia club were at a disadvantage, and they had nothing to fall back on. News Gathered Here and There at the National Capital

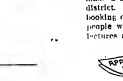
CAPTAIN HOBSON TO TRY NEW POLITICAL SCHEME



WASHINGTON.—Capt. Richmond Pearson Hobson, of Merrimac fame, is going to play some practical politics for a change. The former naval officer and advance agent of a million dollar navy is thought by many to have become a rather astute politician. His latest is the development of a schema that promises to make no end of trouble for the scientific departments of the government.

The captain has borrowed from the agricultural department an expert on road building, one on soils, one on cotton growing and one on forestry. From the post office department he has obtained the loan of a rural free delivery expert.

With this menagg and accompanied by his wife the captain is going to make a month's tour of his Alabama district. There will be a careful booking of the aggregation and where people wish its advice they will get lectures and practical demonstrations in all the subjects the experts represent. Capt. Hobson will do the handshaking and political solidification act.

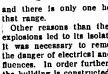
Alabama people happen to know that Mrs. Hobson is one of the best women politicians in Washington. She grew with him over every county in the district. They got acquainted with everybody, explained their desire to go to congress, convinced folks that they were justified in it, and when primary day came bore off the nomination in triumph over Mr. Bankhead, who had held the seat for 20 years.

Other representatives are casting envious eyes on this Hobson programme and are beginning to prepare applications for the use of government experts. If the departments allow the captain to be generally copied there will be a dearth of experts and the scientific departments have to conscript them before long.

MILLIONS APPROPRIATED BY THE LATE CONGRESS

A GRAND total of 15,349 new governmental positions was created by congress at its last session, with $8,783,759 in salaries. Most of the increase is taken up by an addition of 4,359 coast and field artillerymen, 4,541 seamen and 4,770 additional employes in the postal service, leaving a net increase of but 569 for all other branches of the public service.

All the various acts of the last session created 18,993 new government positions, but at the same time 5,674 places were abolished.



The total appropriations by the fifty-ninth congress were $1,800,287,-079.96. Those of the second session exceed those of the first by $41,208,958.

During the last session 16,434 salaries were increased at an annual cost of $2,949,352. This includes the vice president, speaker, nine cabinet officers, 90 senators, 386 representatives and 34 employes of congress.

Contracts were authorized for public works requiring future appropriations aggregating $97,934,546, of which almost $16,000,000 is for battleships, torpedo boats, etc. The largest appropriation carried by any one measure was $212,091,193 by the postoffice bill. The naval bill carried $99,958,-507, the army bill $78,654,582 and the pension bill $146,142,000.

A comparison of the total appropriations made in the second session of the Fifty-ninth congress for 1908 $920,738,144, with those of the first session of that congress for 1907, $879,559,185, shows an increase of $41,208,959.

CARNEGIE LABORATORY TO BUILD VOLCANO FACTORY

THE most dangerous thing in Washington is the new geophysical laboratory constructed with funds of the Carnegie institution. It is dedicated to making rocks, and the main purpose it proposes to reproduce pent-up volcanoes, and the frightful pressures and heat of the earth's interior. It is the only building in the world devoted exclusively to high pressures and temperatures.

"We don't know just what we will be able to do," said Prof. Arthur L. Day. "We shall have to deal in very high temperatures and pressures, and it may end by our all being blown up. But if we avoid that we hope to discover some interesting things about the crust of the earth."

The new geophysical laboratory has been located at a safe distance from residential Washington. It is 1,000 feet from the nearest car line, and there is only one house within that range.

Other reasons than the danger of explosions led to its isolated location. It was necessary to remove it from the danger of electrical and jarring influences. In order further to do this, the building is constructed on special-ly insulated foundations, and with no connection between its walls and floor. The walls are anchored in deep sand, and the floor of each room is a cement island set in a lake of dry sand.

This branch of Mr. Carnegie's institution has already solved one problem. It has made quartz glass. Its second problem is still unsolved; namely, what is Portland cement, and why?

The new laboratory, with its volcano machines, will begin to do business next month.

BULLDOG "PETE" AT LAST MEETS HIS WATERLOO

"PETE," the famous bull terrier of the White House, has at last been vanquished. He met his Waterloo in the ordinary morning in the jaws of an unknown white bulldog, who made a meal of Pete's front leg and shoulder with a good bite out of his ear for a chaser.

Among the newspaper correspondents there is general rejoicing and they swarmed over the White House grounds to their heart's content all day and long into the night.

But in the president's household there is much sorrow over Pete's disgrace. "Pete" was put under the ban because he chewed up a navy department clerk, and he was in disgrace generally. Next this feeling gave way to one of genuine sympathy for "Pete," who surely needs friends now if he ever did.

"Pete" was allowed to take some exercise early in the morning, after having been chained all night as a punishment for his work on the navy department clerk. He evidently had a "grouch" against the navy for being tied up like a common, ordinary dog, and he was in search of trouble, sure.

He raced around the White House grounds for a time, looking for excitement, and it soon bove in sight in the shape of a husky fellow bull terrier. "Pete" tackled him without ceremony, but the other dog was too quick for him. He made a grab for "Pete's" fareleg under the shoulder, and got a magnificent under hold.

If the owner of "Pete's" vanquisher will send word privately to a lot of officials high in the government service, he will receive the finest collar and dog tag that money can buy.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

PRINCE OF PLUNGERS QUITS

John W. Gates has quit the speculative field. The active gossip that the financial harpoon has been so deftly and effectively driven into the picturesque plungar that he has been obliged to forsake the turmoil of Wall street for a more simple speculative life, one in which the chips are not so high and the play less rapid.

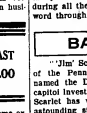
In a career comprehending everything from moonshining barb wire to dropping a million dollars on a horse race, John W. Gates has been acclaimed the prince of his peculiar profession. His smiling "bet-you-a-million" is a phrase as well known as the name of the nation's executive.

Thirty-two miles from Chicago, and a pair of miles from what was then known as Turner's Junction, Ill., John Warne Gates was born on his father's farm in 1855. He married at 18 and kept a little hardware store at Turner's, which made him a scant living. His chance came when Isaac L. Ellwood persuaded him to sell barbed wire in the cattle country of the southwest. Gates sold his hardware store and hitched to the $100 a month southwest. Gates sold his hardware store and hitched to the $100 a month job. When 21 he entered San Antonio, Tex., with a spool of wire and secured a permit from the authorities to erect a corral in the plaza. His fence was the first of barbed wire ever seen in the Lone Star state and people came from miles around to see it. He hired 25 wild steers from the Pan-handle ranges and penned them in his corral. He convinced the people by the exhibition that herbed wire fencing was the thing for Texas and he sold more in a day than Ellwood could manufacture in a month. From that time on his rise was rapid.

At the height of the Gates success, in the days when he was taking a whirl in wheat, gambling big on horses, holding the strings taut, and having a good time generally, Edwin Lefavre left him into the "captains of industry" set and summed him up thus:

"His philosophy is the philosophy of America—the philosophy of action. He does not love money. But money is the reward of action and $20,000,000 has been his reward. He is an interesting man whose life, if written in the form of fiction, would be the great American novel. A western hustler, breezy, shrewd, epigrammatic, lacking a certain personal polish, it may be but a staunch friend, a fearless hater, utterly without fear, mental or physical, at home anywhere in the United States, a politician millionaire, optimistic, cal; at home anywhere in the United States, a politician millionaire, optimistic, a clear and vivid thinker, knowing his country and his countrymen better than most men, conscious of his ability and the soundness of his judgment, son of a farmer, organizer of trusts, successful operator in stocks, overawed by nothing and by no one—and always working, always thinking, always doing, undaunted, importantly American."

INVITED TO AMERICA



Antonio Fogazzaro, the Italian author whose work has won the praise of President Roosevelt and an invitation to visit this country, has in the last few years wrasted from Gabriele D'Annuzio almost the position of premier novelist of Italy. His latest novel, "Il Santo" (The Saint), has made a great sensation throughout Italy.

This great religious novel, which, though written by a devout Romen Catholic, was promptly condemned by the Vatican and placed on the "Index" of forbidden books, has run through edition after edition in Italy. In other European countries it has been the most discussed romance of the past year.

Unlike most of the Italian novelists, Antonio Fogazzaro is an aristocrat by birth. In his gifted youth finished his studies, practiced as a lawyer, but he never tried in any way to practice his profession, flitting about from one thing to another in an effort to find his proper sphere. A poem, "Miranda," met great praise and he adopted literature.

The youth of the poet and novelist was influenced by his father towards literature and study and by his mother towards art and music. He, in now in his mature age, a passionate lover of music, plays feelingly himself, and is so dependent upon it that he says to it he owes much of his political inspiration and certainly half his delight in life.

MEXICO'S GRAND OLD MAN

Not a chence traveler who visits this country but must write a piece about Mexico's Grand Old Man. He is lauded as the savior of a nation, as the soldier who brought order out of chaos and established a republic.

Intimacy mostly dims hero worship somewhat, and certainly we who have lived in Mexico for years, know that the republic is still something of a form. Yet when we begin to analyze the things that we have brought her out of a chaos of riot and revolution that lested for almost three-quarters of a century, this one figure stands out so preeminently that we can only join the chrus of universal praise and conceda that the soldier has grown into the statesman, that the iron hand has relaxed as circumstances warranted.

Porfirin Diaz is practically an absolute ruler in Mexico to-day, yet certainly one of the strongest evidences of his character has been the fact that, during all these years that his word has been law, he has promulgated that word through tha channels of a regularly organized Republican government.

BARED STORY OF GRAFT

"Jim' Scarlet, who is he?" was the question of the Pennsylvanie public when Gov. Stuart named the Danville lawyer as attorney for the capitol investigation commission. In a few weeks Scarlet has wrung from reluctant witnesses the astounding story of how the state was held up for $13,000,000 for a building that was put up for $6,000,000.

In 1875 James Scarlet was known in Danville, Pa., as an excellent blacksmith. He had other ambitions, and spent his spare time studying law in a local office. To-day a practitioner before the United States supreme court, he still can swing a hammer with old-time vigor.

As a trial lawyer of wonderful oratorical ability, the kind which makes a jury laugh or weep at will, Scarlet soon gained a reputation. But behind that were his quick grasp of details and his matchless skill as a cross-examiner. Those who know Scarlet best say that as a master of cross-examination he is without his equal in his state.

When Scarlet was proposed to Gov. Stuart as one of the attorneys to probe the $13,000,000 capitol scandal, the governor was informed: "If you can get 'Jim' Scarlet to take the case, that will be sufficient guarantee that the investigation will be thorough.

Attorney Scarlet has been chosen by Gov. Stuart and Attorney General Todd to take general charge of all the proposed criminal and civil suits growing out of the capitol graft disclosures.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

SCION OF ARISTOCRACY ON MAGISTRATE'S BENCH

NEW YORK.—One of the recent appointments to the magistrate's bench by the mayor has attracted a great deal of attantion in the social world. This new judge, who is now sitting in what is known as the courts of the people, whore all tha drunks are arraigned and all the women of the streets tried, is Frederick Kernichan, a scion of one of the oldest and most aristocratic families of the city and one of the best amateur athletes in these parts. Just to show that he is popular with many different classes of people it may be mentioned that he found upon his desk when he first saw many floral tributes, but the one that overtopped them all was the mass of flowers sent in by the Larry Mulligan association, a well-known politicel organization on the Bowery.

In the course of nine years that he has been out of college Kernichan has had an artilleryman's experience in the Spanish war as well as a cavalry man's turn with Squadron A, policing the, rioters at the Croton dam a few years ago. At Yale Kernichan was a crack lightweight boxer, and they still talk at Morley's, in Naw Havon, of a certain bout that went 20 rounds. His principal sport now is riding. He has followed the hounds ever since he was old enough to mount and he often takes fences in Virginia and upon Meadow Brook ground. He is a good polo player and he has distinguished himself as a gentleman rider. But, with all his love of sports, he has found time to qualify himself as a good lawyer. Kernichen's appointment follows closely on that of "Big Bill" Edwards as deputy commissioner of the street cleaning department. Edwards was the captain of the Princeton football team in 1899 and 1900, and, in spite of his great bulk now, he is one of the most active men in the employ of the city.

ABE ERLANGER, theatrical manager, and partner in the Klaw & Erlanger trust, is about the most famiiliar figure on Broadway. There is something very remarkable about Erlanger's success. Through brains, determination and the hardest kind of hard work he has advanced himself from a programme boy at the Cleveland Euclid avenue opera house to be the dominant spirit of the theatrical syndicate which controls all the first-class theaters and attractions in the United States.

Mr. Erlanger is of a very retiring disposition, and dreads publicity. Insofaticipation of his attention to his business, he no sooner gets his projects for the season launched than he begins to rush for the coast, and from nine s. m. to six p. m. every day in the year, excepting Sundays, he applies himself assiduously to his vast enterprises, supervising every detail. He personally directs the final rehearsals of all his companies, and to his really profound knowledge of stage requirements and what the amusement-seeking public desires, a large share of their success may be attributed. Mr. Erlanger's solo recreation is in athletics and saddle and driving horses. He is undoubtedly one of the best all-round athletes in this country, and as a rider, could follow President Roosevelt wherever he might lead.

To-day the little Cleveland programme boy is a millionaire, and can control more ready capital, probably, than all other managers in America combined. His interests in his enterprises must exceed $250,000 a year, and yet he is now just as dependeatle as he was the day ho first stood in the box at the Euclid aveque opera house as e full fledged tresse urer.

ONCE PROGRAMME BOY; NOW AMUSEMENT CHIEF

WALL STREET GAME ONLY ONE FOR GATES, IS SAID

WALL STREET has received the report that John W. Gates has decided to quit Wall street and stock speculation with a smile. The old timers grin and recollect that once there was a great singer named Patti who was always making farewell tours, and will probably continue to make them until the sun goes down for good for her.

Aside from horse racing and a little speculation of an evening with pieces of cardboard having hearts and diamonds and clubs and spades on them, the Wall street game is the only one that Mr. Gates knows and enjoys. No one has ever heard that he spends his spare time in deep devotion to art or literature. He is not an expert on theology, nor does he devote his hours of recreation to chemistry or ran a private machine shop in a country home. His health has not been of the best, but he is more or less of what is known as a game sport, and he will die, when he does pass away, with his boots on and will still be playing his game—the same old game of getting the other fellow's money by matching wits—when he goes away.

It is said that Mr. Gates has lost from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 backing his son's firm of Charles Gates & Co. That may or may not be true, but if it is true it probably has not put a shock of gray hair over night on Gates' head, and there has been no need of calling a consultation of physicians to see if it is advisable to commit him to the melancholy werd.

REALTY ASSESSMENTS COMPARED WITH VALUES

OWNERS of real estate in this city are up on the enormouse burden of all the expenses of the city falls sat up the other day and rubbed their eyes over the statement of Comptroller Herman A. Metz, the financial wizard of the municipality, to the effect that the real estate assessments in all the boroughs were in general far below the market value over the city. It was only a few years ago that it was declared to be the policy of the city government to make full value assessments as required by a law which had been a dead letter, and immediately there was a tremendous rise in valuations which cut the tax almost in two and nearly doubled the borrowing margin of the city, which is limited to ten per nent. of the realty valuation. This gave the municipality a wide leeway in the matter of public improvements.

The realty owners were rather startled at the first great rise in valuations, but they had begun to get used to its play as the valuations were put up at the rate of $500,000,000 a year. They thought surely that by this process the valuations were kept up to the market rate. But the comptroller has opened their eyes. He declares that the real estate, instead of being assessed at its full market value, is in reality only assessed at 50 per cent in Manhattan and 27 per cent. in Brooklyn. If Mr. Metz's figures are correct, the assessments would be more than doubled again and the tax rate further cut in half-again. The real estate valuations now amount to about $5,000,000,000

SCHMITZ GIVES UP REIGN OF FRISCO

MAYOR, ACCUSED AS BRIBE-TAKER, TURNS OVER RULE TO CITIZENS' COMMITTEE.

Ruef Tells Grand Jury of $200,000 Fund Given by Railroad Company $50,000 of Sum Went to City's Chief Executive.

San Francisco, May 18.—Charged by "Abe" Ruef before the grand jury with receiving a bribe of $50,000 from the United Railroads company and facing the penitentiary, Mayor Schmitz has relinquished the reins of San Francisco's government to a committee of seven, representing the five most commercial organizations of the city. From today on he will be mayor of the city in name only. The city is under the control of men whom the mayor selected to administer its affairs upon the lines demanded by the public.

On the committee of seven is a representative from each of the following commercial bodies:

Merchants' Exchange, Chamber of Commerce, Board of Trade, Merchants' association and Manufacturers' and Producers' association.

To Oust Police Chief.

Preliminary steps have been taken by the committee to remove Chief of Police Dinan and make needed changes in the commissions through which the city is governed under the charter. It is said that Mayor Schmitz was induced to take this step by Gov. Gillett.

Schmitz is on the verge of nervous and physical collapse as the result of the long strain and the confession of Ruef. He will be called into court Monday to face trial on the charge of extortion. He will have little time to give to city affairs and realizes that his reign is over. He would gladly retire to private life at once if he could reckon without confessing his guilt.

Mayor Denies Statement.

San Francisco, May 18.—In a statement to the Evening Post, Mayor Schmitz said Friday night:

"The statement that I have handed the reins of government to any person or committee is an unqualified falsehood. I called the committee of 50 together some time ago in order that I might take advantage of the wisdom and advice of the best citizens of the city in a financial and industrial crisis. This committee of 50 selected sub-committees in order that the important work might be systematized and carried out and one of the committees, the so-called committee of seven, I have not resigned, nor yield my prerogative to any body, and any statement to the contrary is a malicious falsehood. There is no reason why I should pass over the reins of government to other people.

"As for Ruef's charges, I will say he has never paid me any bribe money, and he knows it. If he says he paid bribe money to me he also lies. I only know that he has made such charges from what I am told and from the newspaper reports."

Ruef Confesses.

San Francisco, May 16.—Abraham Ruef, better known as Abe Ruef, the acknowledged adviser of Mayor Schmitz and once the recognized dictator of municipal affairs in this city, pleaded guilty to the charge of extortion in Judge Dunne's department of the superior court Wednesday. Sentence will be pronounced upon him two weeks hence.

How Bondis Was Divided.

Ruef himself, it is understood, told the grand jury that he pocketed $61,000 as his "fee" out of the $200,000 bribe fund paid by the United Railroads, and $50,000 went to Schmitz.

The rest of the money, $89,000, was divided among 18 supervisors, 16 of them getting $4,000 each, one $10,000 and one $15,000.

The man who Ruef says got the $15,000 was Chairman Gallagher, of the finance committee.

In return for the $200,000 re distributed the supervisors granted the United Railroads a change in its charter allowing it to electrify its 250 miles of street railway in the city.

The foregoing information as to the testimony given by Abe Ruef to the grand jury is given by Special Agent Burns.

Ruef was on the witness stand from 3:20 o'clock until after 5 o'clock, refused to make any public statement when he came from the jury room.

Mrs. Yerkes-Mizner Free.

New York, May 18.—Mrs. Mary Adelaide Yerkes-Mizner, widow of Charles T. Yerkes, the millionaire traction promotor, of Chicago and London, Friday found guilty in interlocutory decree of divorce from her youthful husband, Wilson Mizner. By the terms of the decree Mrs. Yerkes-Mizner may resume her maiden name and she is also granted permission to remarry should she choose.

Minnesota Mayor Dead.

Winona, Minn., May 14.—John A. Mathews, a pioneer resident of this city, who served four terms as mayor of Winona, in the 60's and 70's, died Monday, aged 82. He came to Minnesota in 1855 from Pennsylvania.

Automobile Law Sustained.

Jefferson City, Mo., May 15.—The Missouri supreme court sustained the constitutionality of the state automobile law, which fixes the speed limit at nine miles an hour.

JULY WHEAT AT $1.02

CHICAGO BROKERS GO WILD WHEN TOP WAS REACHED.

It Marked the Highest Price of the Year—Decembar Delivery Passes $1.03.

Chicago, May 18.—Every pit on the board of trade went wild when July wheat topped the dollar mark, the highest point of the year, at 11 o'clock Friday morning. The cry of "1" and "July" was echoed and re-echoed about the floor and brokers deserted other pits to crowd about the wheat pit and watch the activity. The entire floor was a mass of cheering brokers, who pulled and tore at each other in clothes attempts to show their feelings. The great rush of buying orders that poured in on the brokerage houses Friday morning swamped the efforts of the selling crowd to stem the upward flight of the cereal and gave the shorts a bad few minutes.

After the one dollar mark had been reached July reacted to 99¾ cents where it hovered for some time, then went up to $1.02. September sold at $1.03¾ and December at $1.03¾.

SMALL CYCLONE IN ILLINOIS.

A Terrific Gale Sweeps Through Three Counties.

Joliet, Ill., May 16.—A storm resembling a tornado swept through Grundy, Will and Kendall counties Tuesday afternoon and caused heavy destruction of property.

At Coton a school building, in which 50 pupils were studying, was lifted from the foundation and swung bodily around. None of the children was hurt.

Scores of barns and smaller buildings were blown down in the path of the cyclone, which was three or four rods in width and extended over a stretch of country 30 miles long. So far as could be learned most residences withstood the shock, but rather extensive damage was done to the ground. In some instances the farmers were compelled to lie flat to escape being hurt. The storm lasted less than a minute at any one place.

The cyclone formed at somo point in Grundy county, swept through Kendall and Will, and was lost somewhere northwest of here. There seem to be two or three divisions, as reports come from different places.

PIERCE MUST GO TO TEXAS.

St. Louis Judge Rules Against Oil Man—Two Appeals Taken.

St. Louis, May 16.—Judge Adams, of the circuit court of the United States, Wednesday denied the application of H. Clay Pierce, chairman of the board of the Waters-Pierce Oil company, for a writ of habeas corpus, and ordered that the petitioner be remanded to the custody of the chief of police, to be delivered to Sheriff George D. Matlock of Travis county, Texas, for extradition.

Pierce is wanted in Texas to answer an indictment charging perjury in an affidavit made by him in May, 1900, to the effect that the Waters-Pierce company was not a party to any pool, trust, confederation or combination in restraint of trade.

Attorney Priest, counsel for the petitioner, gave notice formally that two appeals would be taken from the decision of Judge Adams, one to the United States circuit court of appeals, and one to the United States supreme court. The court then admitted Pierce to bond in the sum of $20,000 on each appeal.

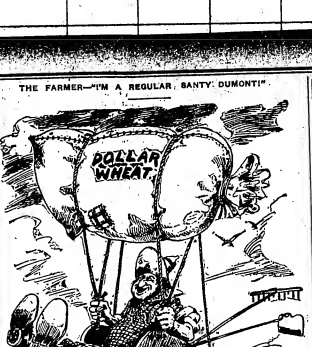
URGE BAPTISTS TO GIVE.

Plea Made for One-Tenth of Income for Church.

Washington, May 17.—The adoption of resolutions in favor of the movement to ask the Baptists of the country to give one-tenth toward the advancement of the work of Christ and urging the president to inquire into the reasons why the Kongo question has not been settled, were the features of the fourth session of the American Baptist Missionary Union Thursday. More than 2,000 delegates were in attendance.

The action regarding the giving of one-tenth of incomes followed a number of spirited addresses in advocacy of a decided increase in the income of the missionary union in order to meet the pressing needs of the work and to enable the union to enter fields urgently inviting occupation.

Ninety-Year Sentence for Youth.



St. Louis, May 16.—On a plea of guilty to a charge of murder in the second degree, John Stapp, 15 years of age, was Wednesday sentenced by Judge Williams in the juvenile branch of the criminal court to 99 years in the penitentiary. Stapp was charged with having stabbed to death Mrs. Ollilie Kraus, wife of a grocer, on July 4.

Dr. J. R. Howerton Chosen Moderator.

Birmingham, Ala., May 17.—With the election of Dr. John R. Howerton, of Montreal, N. C., as moderator, Thursday afternoon, the forty-seventh annual session of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States (southern) got down to work in earnest.

Important to Shippers.

Washington, May 15.—A decision rendered by the interstate commerce commission is of notable importance, because in it the commission holds that where two rates between the same point are in force, the shipper must be given the benefit of the lower.

BAD LABOR RIOTS AT EVANSVILLE

INDIANA TOWN SCENE OF SERIOUS DISTURBANCES CAUSED BY CAR STRIKE.

One Man Is Killed and Six Injured in Conflict Between Union and Nonunion Forces—Two Hundred Special Police Sworn In.

Evansville, Ind., May 18.—After a day of rioting, violence and accident, the second day of the street car strike in this city ended with one man dead, six persons injured and all street car traffic completely suspended. Late Friday night Mayor Boehne called a special meeting of the board of safety and ordered 200 special policemen sworn in.

A street car manned by a nonunion crew, going at full speed, jumped, a curve at Eighth and Walnut streets and crashed into a two-story office building at one o'clock Friday afternoon, partially destroying the building, killing one man and injuring four others, including a baby 18 months old. The street car company makes the claim that a strike sympathizer boarded the car and after knocking down the motorman and conductor threw on the power to the limit, causing the derailment of the car.

Grant Kinney and Felix Oden, strike-breakers, were assaulted on the corner of Fulton avenue and Franklin street by a mob of several hundred. Both were knocked down and kicked. Kinney suffered two cuts and bruises on the head and Oden had his ear cut off and his arm fractured.

Mayor Boehne is still making efforts to have the difficulty settled by arbitration. The street car company has so far refused to arbitrate, but the union men have agreed to the mayor's plan.

PUT BLAME ON NEGROES.

Witnesses Swear Colored Soldiers Shot Up Brownsville.

Washington, May 17.—Two witnesses in the Brownsville investigation before the senate committee on military affairs Thursday testified they saw negro soldiers shooting up the Texas town on the night of August 13. One of these was Lieut. Dobbins, chief of the Brownsville police, and another was Policeman Padron, who described a busy quarter of an hour dodging bullets. He also was positive the men doing the shooting were negro soldiers. Dr. Charles Thorn, a dentist, testified that he heard a group of men firing at the rear of his house and shouting comments to each other. He gave as his judgment that the voices were those of negroes.

Policeman Padron was cross-examined by Senator Foraker at some length without affecting his story. Dominguez also was cross-examined by Senator Foraker, but his story was not changed in the least.

President at Pine Knot.

Charlottesville, Va., May 18.—President and Mrs. Roosevelt and their son Archie, arrived Friday at Pine Knot, Mrs. Roosevelt's country home in the southern part of Albemarle county, where they will remain until the middle of the week. The presidential party arrived at North Garden, 11 miles south of Charlottesville, at 2:27 o'clock Friday afternoon, and a few minutes later left for Pine Knot.

Springfield, Ill., May 17. — Governor Deneen on Thursday signed the local option bill. The measure gives to cities, towns, villages, and townships in certain counties, the right to vote on the question of saloons or no saloons.

Kansas Republicans for Taft.

Topeka, Kas., May 17.—The Republican state central committee at its meeting here declared William H. Taft the choice of Kansas to succeed Roosevelt as president.

OENOUNCES IDAHO GOVERNOR

DEFENSE IN HAYWOOD TRIAL MAKES A SERIOUS CHARGE.

Asks That Chief Executive Be Cited for Contempt—Result of Orchard Interview.

Boise, Idaho, May 18.—At the opening of the Steunenberg murder trial Friday Judge Wood directed the prosecuting attorney of Ada county to investigate the circumstances under which Harry Orchard was interviewed for publication Thursday, with a view of ascertaining if there had been any attempt to influence the jurors in the case and to take such steps as he found the circumstances to warrant. In drawing attention to the matter Judge Wood asked counsel if they could offer any suggestions as to the duty of the court.

Would Cite Governor for Contempt.

Mr. Richardson vigorously denounced the incident as a deliberate attempt to influence prospective jurors suggested by the disclosure of prejudice against Harry Orchard, and the testimony and inspired by Governor Gooding. Mr. Darrow took the same ground and suggested that Governor Gooding be cited for contempt. Both Mr. Richardson and Mr. Darrow protested that the publication of the Orchard interview grievously injured the defense.

Mr. Hawley, for the state, deplored the incident, but maintained that it would injure the prosecution more than the defense. He also drew attention to the widespread newspaper campaign in behalf of the defense, and the misstatements that had been circulated about Orchard, and said that he could see no harm in permitting the newspaper men to interview Orchard on general lines.

While the matter was under discussion the witnesses and jury were excused. The trial was interrupted for an hour, at the end of which time the examination of talesmen was resumed.

Plea for Uniform Laws.

Washington, May 17.—A meeting was held Thursday at the bureau of standards of the department of commerce and labor, attended by delegates from most of the states, to consider the drafting of uniform laws providing for the supervision of all weights and measures used in trade. The enactment of such laws will be urged upon congress and upon the legislatures of the various states.

Drowns in Whisky Vat.

Detroit, Mich., May 16.—William Kenney, an employe of the Walker distillery at Walkerville, Ontario, just across the Detroit river from this city, was drowned in a vat of whisky mash. In some unknown manner Kenney fell into the fermenting vat and his body was discovered there. He had entered the employ of the distillery only last Friday.

River Out of Banks.

Ashland, Wis., May 16.—Bad river, which runs through the Chippewa river basin, south of Ashland, has overflowed its banks and is the highest in years. The village of Odanah is flooded and one-third of the inhabitants have been forced from their homes. Many of them were taken out in canoes.

Kansas Sheriff Destroys Liquor.

Pass German Trade Compact.

Berlin, May 14.—The reichstag Monday, with only a few negative votes, passed the second reading of the commercial modus vivendi between Germany and the United States.

RECOMMEND SUITS AGAINST RAILROADS

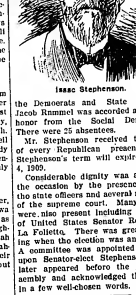
REPORT OF ATTORNEYS FOR COMMERCE COMMISSION ATTACKS COMBINES.

Competition in Area Equal to One-Third of United States Suppressed, According to Findings—Slump in Union Pacific Stocks.

New York, May 16.—A portion of the recommendations of Frank B. Kellogg and Charles Severance to the interstate commerce commission concerning the Harriman railroad investigation has been published here. It reviews the testimony, and holds that railroad competition has been suppressed in an area equal to one-third of the United States; that the contracts between the Union Pacific and Rock Island for the control of the Alton railway, as well as the contracts between the Union and Southern Pacific and the control of the Illinois Central and the San Pedro road, are all in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act. It recommends that the attorney general institute proceedings to annul these agreements. It also recommends that there should be new and effective laws to prevent inflation of securities and declares that the profits of the great railroads of the far west are being used to buy stocks and control systems in the east instead of building more roads for the development of the west as they should be.

Big Slump in Union Pacific.

Union Pacific was the storm center of an attack by traders on the stock exchange on the appearance of the report of counsel for the interstate commerce commission. Union Pacific stock slumped nearly four points before support was forthcoming and the whole list became weak and unsettled on the news and declined a point on the average. Southern Pacific fell off a point but steadied with good buying. The railroad holding stock control of other lines were adversely affected by the news, principally Pennsylvania, which became weak. After the first shock of the news had passed the market became steady at the decline.



Hasty Recommendations as Yet.

Washington, May 16.—The recommendations of Messrs. Kellogg and Severance in regard to the Harriman railroads are not yet accepted and confirmed by the interstate commerce commission, so that they stand at present merely as recommendations to the commission and not the report of the commission itself. Commissioners Harlan and Knapp of the interstate commerce commission say that the commission has not yet made its report.

STEPHENSON IS THE CHOICE.

Named by Wisconsin Republicans to Succeed Spooner.

Madison, Wis., May 18.—The nomination of Isaac Stephenson of Marinette in Republican caucus Thursday night as United States senator to succeed John C. Spooner, resigned, was ratified Friday formally ratified in joint assembly. Mr. Stephenson received 87 votes. State Senator George W. Bird received the complimentary vote of the Democrats and State Senator Jacob Hammel was accorded a similar honor from the Social Democrats. There were 25 absentees.

A committee was appointed to wait upon Senator-elect Stephenson who later appeared before the joint assembly and acknowledged the honor in a few well-chosen words.

Express Gratitude to Leishman.

Constantinople, May 17.—Missionaries from all parts of Turkey, who are attending their annual conference in Constantinople, were received Thursday at the American embassy by Ambassador Leishman. An address signed by the heads of the missionary board, expressing gratitude for his constant labors in their behalf, was presented to the ambassador.

Pure Food Bill Signed.

Springfield, Ill., May 16.—After careful scrutiny at the hands of both Gov. Deneen and State Chemist Bryan, the pure food bill passed muster and was approved by Gov. Deneen. Chemist Bryan stated that he considered the new Illinois act as the best pure food law in the United States, excepting the national law.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

The American Baptist Missionary union met in Washington in its ninety-third annual session.

JOHN W. GATES IN MANY WAYS TYPE OF AMERICAN

A Few of the Striking Episodes in the Life of the Great Plunger Who Has Raked In Some of the Biggest Jackpots Known to the World of High Finance—Has Had Many Years of Unvarying Success.

New York—John W. Gates, the most picturesque plunger who ever came to fame and fortune in Wall street, has leased a great hunting preserve in France, and is wielding up the business of his "House of Twelve Partners." He is through with Wall street, writes Frank Fayrant in the Times. When a market operator of his performance quits the speculative game immediately after a disastrous panic in the market it is but natural for the gossips of the street to say: "There is not him at last." Ever since Gates began swinging big lines of stock in bull markets and making about of men of great power in Wall street the dealings of the street have taken their heads wisely and said: "The old pet him some day." During the lazy days of March, when the panic mongers were telling of the huge forces piling up against wealthy operations, they were sure that the "House of Twelve Partners" was in deep water. And now that the famous house, that in big markets has carried as much as $125,000,000 worth of stock on margin, is going out of business, the rumor mongers are saying: "I told you so."

But John W. only smiles and says: "I wish they were all as comfortably fixed as I am." His friends say that he began trimming his sails last winter, when stocks were selling at sky high prices, and that when the storm broke in March he had all his reefs in. They say that he actually bought stocks during the panicky days of March, and that banks were carrying millions of dollars of free cash for him when some very wealthy men were lying awake nights wondering how they would make their bank balances good the next day. His friends think that he is worth at least $25,000,000, and perhaps a good deal more.

So John W. isn't exactly broke.

Barbed Wire the Beginning.

It was in barbed wire that Gates began to build his fortune. Gates was a poor farmer's boy out west. His first business venture was contracting to hook a neighbor's corn. From the money he saved out of this work he made his first speculation. He bought a third interest in a threshing machine that came rattling across the prairie after the harvest. The old farmers took their heads at that. For it was a tradition that the threshing machine man usually came to financial grief. But it was a year of large crops, and threshing proved so profitable that before the winter came the idea came to him that if the farmer would sell him the timber rights he could fell the hard wood and cut it up into firewood to sell to the neighboring villages. The boy went home after a tape measure, paper and pencil, and then back to the woods "timber-looking." Going about the woods, selecting small areas, counting the hard wood and measuring them, he got an idea of the density of the forest. He sat down on a stump, and by dint of figuring made a rough estimate of the number of cords of firewood an acre would yield. Then he went to the owner to make a bargain. He made an offer for all the timber, agreeing to pay for it as money came in from his sales of firewood.

"I haven't any money," the boy told the farmer, "but you can have my threshing machine as security."

"Go ahead, Johnny; your word is as good as a government bond."

Gates as a Woodcutter.

All through the winter the lad was out in the wood lot before daybreak, working with a woodchopper he hired to help him. The great trees were felled, sawed into short lengths, and split into firewood. Young Gates delivered two loads of wood a day by sled to the neighboring villages. Before the snow was off the ground the woods had been cleared, the owner had been paid in full, and the boy had $1,000 in the bank. He took this money and opened a hardware shop at the neighboring railway junction. He sold farmers their implements and machinery. One commodity that had a large sale was the newly invented barbed wire. The little hardware shop at the junction prospered, but Gates wanted to do something bigger. He saw that there was money in barbed wire, and so he sold out his business and went to see the man, in an Illinois town, from whom he had been buying his wire.

This was Col. Isaac Elwood, a pioneer in the business. He was not looking for partners, but he gave the bright young country shopkeeper a job as a traveling man for the concern. Gates traveled back and forth through the wheat belt selling barbed wire, and made a reputation as one of the best "drummers" on the road. But he wasn't content with his "drummer's" commissions. He wanted to divide the manufacturing profits with Col. Elwood. The manufacturer couldn't see it that way, and so Gates put up a barbed wire mill of his own. His knowledge of the trade was an asset, and he soon became a dangerous rival of the Elwood factory. The colonel brought an action for infringement of patent rights and a bitter fight was the result. Gates hung right on. Col. Elwood finally had to make peace with the wire king. The two became business partners and have been closely associated in big enterprises ever since.

Other barbed wire mills began to spring up, and Gates saw that there would be a disastrous trade war if the rivals were not corralled. He went around the country buying them up and formed a barbed wire trust. This was the nucleus of the $90,000,000 American Steel & Wire company, now a part of the Steel corporation. The first big flotation engineered by Gates was the Federal Steel, a $100,000,000 corporation. That was in September, 1898, at the beginning of the great steel boom following the Spanish-American war. He followed that with the American Steel & Wire, with $90,000,000 capital, four months later. The manner in which Gates and Elwood brought out this company is characteristic of the man. On a telephone call from Pittsburg they jumped from Pennsylvania and bought a wire mill at Sharon; then they went to Cleveland and bought a $5,000,000 rolling mill, and the next day they were back in New York to close a deal for the purchase of another mill.

The Steel Merger.

They picked up everything in sight, hurried to Chicago, and, within a week after the opening of their campaign, they had the whole company organized. This is the way that Gates likes to do things. Gates and all his followers cleaned up fortunes in this flotation. The public appetite was keen for industrial stocks, especially for steel stocks, and the creation of millions of dollars' worth of newly manufactured stock certificates into the coin of the realm was accomplished in a short time. Two years later the big trust was formed in the steel trade and the Gates companies were turned into the merger. Gates wanted to go on the steel board, but the chief promoter, Mr. Morgan, wouldn't have it. The banker said he didn't think that Gates was a safe man to have in a great corporation directorate.

Mr. Morgan's coldness toward him didn't seem to worry him at all. Not many months later Gates began to plunge heavily in Louisville & Nashville. He had his friends that it was a great property and that it ought to go higher. He and his following in New York and Chicago, when by that time had grown to large proportions because of the money he had made for them in his steel stocks, put the stock from around par to above $150. The street woke up one morning to discover that Gates had "cornered" Louisville. The Northern Pacific corner panic was still fresh in the mind of Wall street and there was a momentary scare. But Gates said he didn't want to hurt anybody. The road looked good to him and he had bought some of the stock. In fact, he had bought the control. Gates didn't have any special use for a railroad with 3,300 miles of track, and he looked around for a purchaser. He went to Mr. Morgan's office one morning, and said: "Morgan, I own the control of the Louisville. If you want it or have a buyer for it, you can take it off my hands." Mr. Morgan found a buyer and Gates cleaned up a fortune.

Gates is a born gambler. When he was a country shopkeeper out in Illinois he spent many a night in a "box car" on the siding, playing the "great American game" by the light of a trainman's lantern. "Great financier, that man Gates," exclaimed a railway fireman one day, as he saw by the newspaper headline that Gates had made a big coup in Wall street. "We knew that before Wall street ever heard of him, when he raked in the jackpots out at Turner Junction," was the engineer's reply. Gates believes that gambling is what makes the world go. "Life is a gamble," said he the other day. "Everything is a gamble. When the farmer plants his corn he is gambling. He bets that the weather conditions will enable him to raise a good crop. Sometimes he loses. Sometimes he wins. Every man who goes into business gambles. Of course, the element of judgment enters in, but the element of chance cannot be ruled out. Whenever a man starts out on a railway journey it's a gamble whether he ever reaches his destination. All life is a gamble you see."[illegible]

In active markets it has not been unusual for Gates to carry a line of $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 worth of stocks on margin. Some of the men in the street have tried again and again to tie him up, but they have never succeeded. Gates has always had his eyes open. Where he couldn't see far enough with his own eyes, he paid somebody else to look out for him. No operator in Wall Street ever organized a more elaborate system of getting advance information on things that would affect Wall street. When the street was waiting anxiously for the final decision of the Northern Securities case, and the Union Pacific party believed that it had defeated James J. Hill, Mr. Gates one day sent word to Mr. Hill's office that he had something to tell him. The railroad president walked into Nassau street and across Wall street to the plunger's office. There he learned from Gates that the Supreme court decision would be against the Union Pacific. Gates didn't tell how he knew it, but he assured Mr. Hill that he knew what he was talking about. Northern Securities began to sear, that day, and never stopped until it had advanced $70 a share. Some days later the Supreme court decision was made public. It was just what Gates said it would be.

Gates is a horn bull. He has never taken any part in bear campaigns, because he's too much of an optimist to bet on stocks going down. Every time during the past six or seven years when the street has had a bad break, the story has gone around that Gates was hurt. The bull markets of the fall of 1903 was almost entirely a Gates market. Gates and his following put St. Paul nearly to $200, and were loaded up with stocks when it was discovered that the Standard Oil crowd had been selling stocks all the way up. The market collapsed and the Gates crowd took heavy losses.

It is Gates' peculiar trait that he owns, so far as is known, the most singular pleasure craft possessed by a millionaire. It is a sidewheel yacht of unusual age, but steady as the proverbial church, and fitted out in a manner that puts to shame its more pretentious rivals of the propeller variety. With his wife he has spent much time on this distinctly Fulton sweeping craft, which pleases him to the point where he tolerates good naturedly the quips of his friends on its packingcase proportions.

Small wonder is it that his liking for pictures has taken him into the school called "photographic" by the critics. His favorite is Messoelor and of the sad and lonely soldiers, courtiers and ladies who troop through that artist's canvases he has a goodly company in his Waldorf rooms. And he finds unending delight in the bright colors and clear-cut figures.

Of the hordes of newly created millionaires borne into Wall street on the wave of industrial combinations which overwhelmed the country from 1898 to 1901, Gates was the most picturesque. He has added to that distinction the further honor of lasting the longest and of retiring not without laurels. One may not wonder if it might not be said of him now what he once said of himself on another question, that he is "not broke, but badly bent."

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

The State Fair.

Minneapolis—The heavy work under contemplation at the Minnesota State Fair grounds was forwarded at a special meeting of the board of managers held at the secretary's office, when preliminary plans for new Poultry building and the Dairy building were examined and the sewerage system was outlined.

Mr. Alban of Theri, Alban & Fisher, the architects of the two new buildings, explained the preliminary plans and discussed details with the board members. As a result of the conference the plans will be altered in some respects and specifications will be drawn at once. In a general way the Dairy Building will be about 110 by 150 feet in size and the Poultry Building 160 by 180. Both will be of brick and of simple though attractive design.

A. R. Starkey, engineer in charge of the St. Paul sewers, appeared before the board and explained plans for the sewerage of the grounds. He recommended a project for pumping the fair grounds sewage through a special pipe line to the sewer at Prior avenue and will prepare detailed plans for this work as well as for system for the grounds proper. The department will do this for the fair grounds at the bare cost of the draughtsmen's work. It is probable that specifications will be ready for the sewer work in ten days.

As the building plans will be ready about the same time several large contracts will be let shortly and the grounds will be very busy with numerous gangs of men at work by June 15th.

After disposing of the office business the board inspected the work in progress on the fair grounds—the grading sheut the grand stand and speed barns and the new Manufacturers building.

Mannix Is State Printar.

St. Paul.—Joseph T. Mannix, the veteran Minneapolis newspaper man, was appointed state printer at a meeting of the state printing commission.

A. N. Dare of Elk River, who has filled the position for the past four years, presented his resignation, having decreed it at the request of the commission till the legislative session was over. He was asked to remain until August 1, when the present contracts expire, and consented to do so. Mr. Mannix was then unanimously elected, and will assume his duties August 1. The salary is $2,100 a year.

The commission will meet June 4, to open bids and award contracts for state printing for the next year.

$20,000 Fire at Rush City.

Rush City.—Fire originated in the Johnson block and destroyed the entire block, together with one or two buildings of less value. For a time it was feared the town would be wiped out. The estimate of the loss is $20,000.

The Johnson block contained two banks, the Rush City State bank and the First National bank. It also contained the city electric light plant, two telephone offices and the offices of many professional men, besides some stores. The block was the principal business structure of the village.

A Spectacular Suicide.

Minneapolis.—While a hundred or more hebdered people stood by unable to stop him from carrying out his purpose, Joseph Montour, sixty-five years of age, leaped to his death in the Mississippi river from the steel arch bridge.

The old man was despondent over the illness of his wife and his inability to secure employment. He had been melancholy for some time before he made up his mind to take his life. Though he has been threatening to kill himself, his daughters and sons were fearful that he would do so.

NEWS NOTES.

Rush City.—Herbert J. Broom, manager of the electric light plant was taken to Minneapolis in a serious condition from burns received in a peculiar accident. While doing in a chair in the Grant hotel office Mr. Broom slipped off the chair and fell into the fireplace in which a brisk coal fire was burning. In falling his head struck one of the andirons, rendering him unconscious. When he was found soon after he had received second degree burns about the head and shoulders.

Spooner.—Orders have been received in Spooner and Brandell from Sheriff Thomas Bailey of Bemidji that all gambling must cease. This order applies to the entire county, and as a result the professional gamblers have packed up their outfits and decamped. Even the slot machines have been stored or sent away.

Duluth.—The Madison school building was damaged to the extent of $20,000 by fire. It is believed that the fire originated from defective wiring. The damage is covered by insurance. The building is practically a total loss.

Insurance Companies Must Pay.

St. Paul.—Insurance companies will not escape paying the registry tax on mortgages on real estate in this state by the attorney general's department gives the opinion that the provision which was supposed to exempt insurance companies from paying the tax cannot be construed in that way, but holds that the insurance companies will have to pay the tax when filing mortgages. The law exempts mortgages taken by persons or corporations which pay a commuted tax in lieu of all other taxes, but as the 2 per cent tax which the insurance companies pay is not in lieu of all other taxes the provision does not apply to them.

Kills Self in Hospital.

Duluth.—Joseph Richards, forty years old, of Carver, Minn., committed suicide in St. Mary's hospital. Richards was taken to the hospital suffering from a general breakdown. The nurse that attended him brought him some eggnog and left the glass with him. Richards broke the glass and cut his throat with the sharp, ragged edge of one of the pieces. The patient was found bleeding to death, and it was too late to save him.

Find Guide's Body.

Brainerd.—Edward Archibald, one of the best known guides in this vicinity, whose headquarters were at the Kabekona resort, was found dead at Birch Point, between Gist lake and Woman lake, by a party which had gone in search of him. Archibald had been missing for a week. It is believed that the guide lost his way and that death was due to exposure. He was fifty-five years old, and his relatives are supposed to reside in Montreal, Canada.

Don't get discouraged because the season is a little late for the crops have plenty of time to grow yet this year.

It is not safe for that fellow that propels a 4 in early spring on account of an early Easter to show up for a week or so yet.

Spectator: The Thief River Falls News claims that the county seat pro hoters already have secured more than enough names on their petition. Now watch the sawyers get busy.

Oh yes two years work is all they can get out of it, before datory repeals the self.

It always makes us smile to see a local merchant, who never spends a cent to advertise, go over and borrow his neighbor's paper, to see if the editor is asking his readers to patronize home industrys

Thief River Falls is going to try to warm things no with a county court fight. Most any sunshiny will welcome any kind of a game that will warm the weather up, and we guess its common warm that we noticed one of the pets on circulators fanning himself with a tulten the other day.

The petition for the location of the county seat from Red Lake Falls on the same section that Thief River Falls is located on, was quite liberally signed throughout the county and it is the sentiment of a majority of our people that they like to help the man at that is circulating the petition, as the roads are bad and set are scarce.

Give The Farm A Chance.

The tendency of people to go to town to get fifth dollck does not give the farm a square deal. When you get in dollr you can't sit down and smoke your pipe and watch an dollr that pile up lumber for a mill company for six days of ten hours each. Then go up to the mill white on Saturday night and draw his wages, and you will have to do them four hours work yourself if you expect to get paid for it. Give the farm a square deal by doing as all a seasons work on your own farm as you give that boss and he if you don't get good pay for it and if you should get tired at noon and want to take an hours extra rest your safety don't stop, for your wheat is growing, your oats are growing and your potatoes are growing. Give the farm a chance. Thereare farmers on this reservation that will be without comfortably off in a few years, but very time you visit other place you will see there is work being done on that farm, when there are others that are doing nothing but the patch of brush that was growing in their yard 20 years ago, to go down to an old beaver dam to get a load of brush, would be cut and hauled on the first day, and it would not be a hard days work either.

FRANKLIN'S GARB.

The Philosopher Often Taken For a Quaker, Though He Was Not One.

Benjamin Franklin was often taken for a Quaker, but the philosopher did not belong to the Society of Friends. Franklin, being a simple citizen of Philadelphia, wore clothes of a fashion set by the Quakers, a plain gray or drab suit. He continued to wear this costume while he was in France. Once when his court suit was not ready he appeared in his "republican" garb before Louis XVI. His became the fashion in France and indeed in nearly all Europe, and it was at one time the proper thing for young republicans and litterateurs to dress a la Franklin. The German historian, Schlosser, describing Franklin's appearance in the French drawing rooms, speaks of "the simplicity of his external appearance, the friendly meekness of the old man and the apparent humility of the Quaker." In truth, the humility and the meekness were mostly matters of appearance, and the Quaker aspect was only an aspect. Franklin was brought up by his parents in Boston in the Congregational church and was intended by them for the ministry. When he went to Philadelphia, he says in his autobiography, he paid his "utmost subscription to the only Presbyterian minister or meeting we had in Philadelphia." But he distinctly avows his disagreement with Presbyterian doctrine and later was quite as ready to welcome and assist Whitefield, the Methodist, with whom he also openly disagreed. Later still, he took a pew in an Episcopal church, but he was never a communicant Episcopalian. He says much about religion in his autobiography, explains how he became a deist in his youth, then abandoned the doctrine because it was not useful in making men good. His own creed he declares to be belief in God and in the immortality of the soul. "Though my science was not wholly without religion," he writes, "there was no mark of any of the distinguishing tenets of any particular sect."—Youth's Companion.

HE GAINED HIS POINT.

To Be in the Actor Built the Play and Lost His Position.

An American actress who had lauren in England was telling her experiences and illustrated an incident that amused her. She said:

"In a play produced in the provinces during a scene in which the hero strikes the villain, who slinks away without seeking to defend himself, there broke in a fierce denunciation from the young fellow who played the deep dyed scoundrel remarked to the hero just before the curtain rose:

"'I say, old chap, I've got my fiance out in front behind with her father and mother, and they don't know anything about my business, and I'm afraid it would rather hurt me with them if I received a slipper and red paint in the dishd cowardly fashion as usual, all plain, can't you omit the knock-down?'

"'Why, my dear boy, the management will fine me 2 shillings.'

"'Oh, I'll pay the fine.'

"'Will you? That's all very well for you, but what do I get out of it? Nothing but a bad name with the row ers the pit.'

"'Oh, well, I'll give you 2 shillings extra for the matter yet, run hit me hard, and I'll hit back! There'll fine be, and you, and I'll give you the 2 shillings besides. You see how I'm situated. I shouldn't like the girl to mix me up with the character I play. Our affairs are so funny that way.'

"So the compact was made, and that night when the hero cried, 'Sir Daniel Deepwater—or something of that sort base offspring of a noble race, take their Sir Daniel not only took that, but gave it back with such force that it knocked its owner flat on him. Including his relatives to be by marriage, and he walked off the stage in triumph. I am sorry to add he lost his situation, but he gained his point."

An Odd Animal Community.

Natural enemies of the animal world are sometimes found living together in odd communities. J. G. Wood in a volume on animals quotes this experience of an observer: "On one occasion when ferreting I bolted a fox, a cat, a stoat and several rabbits and rats out of the same earth. The fox I killed first, after giving the ferret a slip across the back, from the effects of which it died an hour later. Next came a rabbit, and then the cat, both of which I shot. Then followed the rabbits, which ran promiscuously. It was a hard matter to the bank of a deep dry watercourse and often held a rat when I ferreted it afterward."

The Rainy Day.

A well known writer recently received a letter from a chap who has regularly made it a practice to borrow money of him. In his letter the chap, who is always in financial difficulties surprised his correspondent by saying:

"While time I have decided to pursue the usual order of things, and, instead of borrowing from you, I inclose here with $20, which I am going to eat that you will lay aside for me for a rainy day."

It is the first contract that any of its substance in the letter. He accepting for it on the terms stated, the inside fact, everywhere he thought he might have dropped it. Then quite accidentally he turned over the paper on which the letter was written and discovered this postscript:

"If you just looked out of the window and find it's raining like the very deuce."—Collier's.

Blessing the River.

In the little Italian state of Holmank it has been the custom from time immemorial for towns by the river Danube to keep the Christmas feast by a peculiar ceremony called "blessing the river." This used to be carried out on a scaffolding erected on the frozen river, but owing to the present, when the ice broke, and hundreds of people were drowned, it is now held upon the bank. The people wear turbahs of colored paper and carry long, white wands. Some are dressed to represent Biblical characters. The service, conducted by priests, lasts about half an hour, and then the ice is broken and a small wooden cross thrown into the water. The people rush into the icy river after it to get him, and the person who secures it is supposed to be assured of great good luck for the coming year.

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Hearses That Carry a Voice.

The parish church of Chertsey possesses a curious anomaly. It has several pews in the gallery, which are bought and sold by auction, just like a table or a chair, and these pews give their purpose for the time being a legal right to vote at parliamentary elections in the division. Moreover, the members of the pews have to pay the poor rate of 12 d. per rule, the hearse, a privilege they are not so eager to buy as the pews are. Many years ago the churchwardens of Chertsey were at their wits' end in order to raise money for the preservation and repair of the sacred edifice, and they could find no solution to the question until some parishioners suggested that they should sell the gallery-pews to the highest bidder. They accepted the idea and obtained a special act of parliament allowing them to do this and also to sell the hearse.

Hearses After Night.

There is often kind of vehicle that neither the oldest nor the youngest inhabitant has seen on the street at night, or, if he has seen it at all, only hurriedly. That is a hearse. Every other kind of conveyance used by modern man is driven about the streets freely after nightfall—the hearse alone comes under the curfew law. Early hours seem to be imposed upon that somber carriage by common consent. The public doesn't like to see it after dark, and the undertakers don't like to drive it. No doubt there are hearses that are compelled by the exigencies of funeral arrangements to come home at unseasonable hours, but when forced to an infringement of the unwritten law they proceed through quiet streets where they will be least likely to wound the sensibilities of the superstitious.—Pall Mall Gazette.

WANTED:

Person to travel in home territory; salary $3.50 per day and expenses. Address, J. A. Alexander, 125 Plymouth Place, Chicago, Ill.

H. S. Quam of Deer Park was up here Tuesday lookin up the prospects to get a lot of freight down to Thief River Falls by the boat route.

There was a social dance at the Radney hall on Saturday evening last, which was enjoyed by about 20 couple. Music was furnished by the Kolskie band and was first class.

Hans Quam is going to move down to Thief River Falls for the summer so as to improve his property down there. He will ship by boat from here.

Our school term will close on next Friday May 31st. We understand the teacher and scholars have prepared to render a good programme on the afternoon of that day, and the parents are invited to attend.

Death called at the home of Willie Rodman in Deer Park on Saturday morning last and took from them one of their two months old baby twins. Surely death is abroad in the land, and the roads don't seem to be to bad for him to get out this way

Arrangements are being made for a social at the Highlanding school house on Saturday evening June 1st, for the benefit of the school library. First class music will be in attendance and a pleasent evenings entertainment provided. Remember this is for the benefit of the school library and we hope to see all take an active interest in making the intertainment a success.

We have some pretty good farmers in Highlanding township who are putting in a good big crop in good order this spring. On this side of the river we have Walt McAndreas, and P. Sullivan, on the other side is Henry Arndt, P.G Weld, Peat Hunstad, Ray Arndt, Ole Overum, Mrs. Shoeten, T.S. Jacobson, Rolstrand Bros., Alfred Hammerstein, and August J. Wentzel. These and many others are putting in good sized crops this spring with full faith that they will get good returns for their labor.

CLEARWATER LOCALS.

Everybody busy planting that garden.

Butter maker Halverson left last Friday for Winger to visit with his friends and relatives.

Miss Ida M. Lillo and her mother left for an extended visit with relatives and friends in Olmstead county, this week

Mrs. R.N. Fore visited with Mrs. A. Rolandson on Tuesday.

Mr. Letvig completed his well at Mr. Rolandsons this week at a depth of 206 feet, being the first flowing well struck in Deer Park Township.

Miss Thone Johnson is going to work for Mr. Sails this summer.

August Lillo went down to Plummer yesterday to meet his sister Eindra who returned from Grand Forks, where she has been staying the past few months.

Mr. P. Mihn and his son John left for a visit to the town of Hill River Wednesday.

M.H. Hyland, Hans Quam, and Mike Kolski drove down to Gully Sunday, returning Tuesday.

Married At Sunbeam.

On last Monday afternoon, at Sunbeam Halvor K. Homme, of this township and Miss Thone Knutson of Equality township were united in matrimoney by W. G. Hunt, justice of the peace. The happy young couple will make it their future home on the farm of Mr. Homme here Erie in this County.

THE SUNBEAM joins with their many friends in wishing them a long and happy journey through life.

Crossed The River.

Mr. and Mrs. Willie Swanson, of Deer Park are mourning the the loss of their oldest daughter, a girl four years old, who died of heart failure on Friday morning last. The little one has been suffer from a nervous desise all her short life and the parents have been carefully nursing her and hopeing she would get well when she got older, but death called and ended the little ones suffering on Friday last.

Funeral services were held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Swanson on Sunday afternoon, conducted by Rev. B A. Meatue, which was attended by a large number of neighbors and friends, who came to render their assistance and consolation to parents, The remains were buried on the farm as there is no laid out burying ground in Deer Park township, as yet.

CARD OF THANKS.

To the kind neighbors and friends who rendered us their assistance in our late bereavement, we extend our sincer and heart felt thanks.

CRACK NUT SUNDAY.

Queer Method of Hearing a Sermon Still in Use in England.

"One fine autumn Sunday I attended a service in a north of England country church that would have driven a New York preacher clean crazy," said the man who travels. "The congregation didn't do a thing but sit around and crack nuts. Fancy a New York minister talking to a crowd of that kind! The modern preacher likes to have things quiet when he talks. It disconcerts him to hear a baby cry or a woman cough or an old man snore. If he is put out by such trifles as these, it is interesting to conjecture what he would do if he were to take hold of a congregation where everybody brought nuts to crack during the sermon.

"Whispers, it seems, used to do this in England and even in our own states during colonial days. This disturbance was not a weekly occurrence by any means. If it had been, the poor preacher would have undoubtedly left his flock to administer spiritual consolation to suit themselves. But as it happened only once a year he was forced to endure it. This one day which was attended by such remarkable license came the Sunday before Michaelmas day and was called 'cracknut Sunday.' Nobody, no matter how pious he might be, hesitated to avail himself of the peculiar privilege granted him, and men, women and children came to church with their pockets stuffed with nuts, which they completely cracked and munched during the sermon.

"It was that kind of a sermon that so impressed me with its oddity. It can be easily imagined that when forty or fifty people get to cracking nuts with all their might the noise is apt to be something terrific, and many times the minister was hard put to it to 'hear himself think.' That custom, from being regarded with high favor for many years, finally came to be looked upon as a nuisance, and the habit was suppressed, except in a few remote localities, although the act of suppression was attended with considerable difficulty, so firmly had the nut cracking fever taken hold of the fancy of the people."—New York Press.

Definitions.

Asked to define a suffragist, a British schoolboy answered, "A person who creates a disturbance." One boy described "sarf" as "a form of seed which grows in the Pacific ocean." In an essay on the canine had a pupil declared that "mast dogs ldrive by keeplog," and another gave the singular of "twaln" as "worsted."

A Theatrical Superstition.

They were rehearsing a new play, and every one was nervous, for the first night was close at hand. The play was a tragedy, yet at the end of the dying scene, as the curtain descended, said: "Three beers, please."

Those words concluded the play. Yet they were entirely out of keeping. The concluding words should have been, "I die, but, since I have saved you, I die happy," or something to that effect.

A dramatic critic new to the business asked how it was that the tragedy ended with "Three beers, please," and the stage manager said:

"Superstition. It is always thought bad luck in rehearsals of new plays to speak the last sentence before the opening night. He who has the last sentence to speak substitutes some meaningless phrase for it. If he dared to speak the true phrase the prospects of the play would be thought doomed. Some playwrights write even entire the last line of a play. They whisper it to the assembled company on its first reading, and from that day till the actual production the line is never again heard."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Diet and Digestion.

Abstemiousness in diet is very conducive to good digestion. It is preferable to eat a little underfed than overfed. Hence we come to one of the first causes of indigestion in the adult, too large a quantity of food. After an ordinary meal the food should all have left the stomach by the end of six or seven hours. If owing to an excessive quantity the stomach cannot deal with the amount some food remains in the stomach and ferments. This creates discomfort, pain, wind, nausea and perhaps vomiting by means of which the stunned stomach gets rid of its burden. If the sufferer is not thus fortunately sick the best thing he can do is to drink a large tumbler of lukewarm water, which will probably induce vomiting and so wash out the stomach. Half a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda added to the fluid will cause still more relief. During the next twenty-four hours the lightest diet, such as a little tea and dried toast, some boiled rice, a little arrowroot or corn flour, should be taken.

TICK-Tick-Tickety-Tick-Tick.
The telegraph instruments spelled out the nation's cry for help. Into every city, village and hamlet went the rallying call to Columbia's sons.

A nation's emblem—Old Glory—had been fired upon. Flying from the mast head it had been met in a southern port by the ominous boom of defiant cannon.

War, grim visaged war, had come. A conflict that was to leave its record of heroic deeds, of unexampled valor, upon all history.

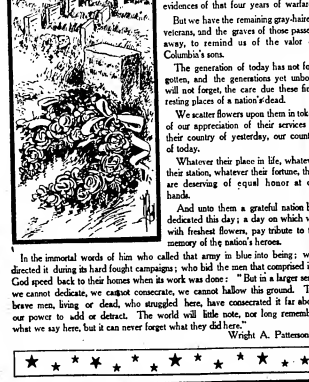
A conflict that was to pit brother against brother, friend against friend, each battling for the right as he saw the right.

From the farm and factory, the store and office, the pulpit and schoolroom came the answer. It echoed from ocean to ocean, from east to west and north:

"We're coming, Father Abraham,
Five hundred thousand strong!"

The roll of the drum, the shrill notes of the bugle, marked the mustering camps, and five them gathered the flower of the nation's manhood.

From out these mustering camps there marched an army clad in blue, each hero eager to perform that duty, no matter what it be, assigned to him.



"Southward, ever southward," was the battle cry. "Southward to meet the foeman, an army clad in gray."

For four long years the din of battle resounded through the land. For four long years there was an incessant boom of cannon, a rattle of musketry, the clash of steel upon steel. For four long years the army in gray proved a valiant foeman for the army in blue. Sons of the north and of the south fell upon hundreds of stubbornly contested battlegrounds, and found a last long resting place side by side in nameless graves. The prayers that ascended unto heaven from those battlefields were for both blue and gray; one bugle's strains sounded the final "taps" for the valiant sons of both the north and south.

Near half a century has passed away since the disbanding of those two mighty armies; since the victorious blue and the defeated gray parted with a handshake at Appomattox. The heartaches and pain of four years of strife are healed by the glories of peace and a reunited nation. Back to the plow and the factory, back to the store and office, back to the pulpit and school room, back to the duties of peace, to the work of repairing the devastations of war, went Columbia's sons, north and south.

As we gather today with spring flowers to do reverance to the heroes who have gone we must look back that half a century to review those scenes of conflict.

The cannon that then dealt death and destruction are today moss covered and buried beneath the debris of the battlefields of old.

Time has healed the ravages of war, and covered with a softening hand the evidences of that four years of warfare.

But we have the remaining gray-haired veterans, and the graves of those passed away, to remind us of the valor of Columbia's sons.

The generation of today has not forgotten, and the generations yet unborn will not forget, the care due these final resting places of a nation's dead.

We scatter flowers upon them in token of our appreciation of their services to their country of yesterday, our country of today.

Whatever their place in life, whatever their station, whatever their fortune, they are deserving of equal honor at our hands.

And unto them a grateful nation has dedicated this day; a day on which we, with freshest flowers, pay tribute to the memory of the nation's heroes.

In the immortal words of him who called that army in blue into being; who directed it during its hard fought campaigns; who bid the men that composed it a God speed back to their homes when its work was done: "But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living or dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here."

Wright A. Patterson.

Women Should Study to Look Pretty in Theater

"Looking pretty at the theater is a thing that all should study," says a fashion writer. "It means so much to a woman. At the theater, with a man by your side, here is time to think and to reflect. Matches are made at the theater. A man looks at the women by the side of him and thinks. Just what he thinks depends upon her appearance.

"The profile is important from a standpoint of failing in love, if one may drift so far away from the topic. The woman who does not study her profile when she is going to the theater makes a great mistake. She should know which side her escort will sit on and she should dress her curls to dance more gayly on that side. And she should likewise study her jewels and prepare them for inspection on that side. She need not be vulgar nor ostentatious, but she should try to please.

"The theater-going woman should look at her side face to see if she has a double chin. The double chin is a very discouraging feature. It denotes experience and few men like experienced women. If the chin be too double it can be reduced by the wearing of looser bands around the throat and also by the trick of holding up the head and chin. The minute the head is lowered the chin and neck will thicken.

"Few American women look well at the theater, for the simple reason that they hurry too much. The American habit of hurry pervades most women, and they hurry through their dressing with results that are plainly visible later on. Take time; time is beauty—when one is dressing up."

IN WEAVES OF VOILE

Material Popular for "Dressy" Costumes, Such as Afternoon and Reception Affairs.

Voile is unquestionably the most popular material for reception gowns and afternoon dresses this season. There are coarse voiles, approaching very nearly to canvas, and then there are qualities so fine as to be almost indistinguishable from chiffon. There are plain and fancy, striped and figured, dark shades and light, in fact, all kinds of conditions of voile, made up in almost every conceivable model from the most severe tailor costume to the daintiest and most elaborate robe for the spring weddings, luncheons, etc.

As this material is so very fashionable it is certainly better to have a suit of voile than anything else, and really a remarkable amount of wear is to be derived from a smart robe of this goods.

For afternoon use this season voile gowns are especially attractive. Perhaps the striped ones are most in favor, but the various checks and figures are also much in evidence. The striped voiles are often in two shades of one color, but a narrow stripe of a decided tone in combination with white is probably the most popular. The majority of voilings are made up over white this year, so that in order to give character to the trimmings are generally rather decided and striking in coloring. A pink and white striped voile, for example, will be trimmed with a deep shade of rose velvet or silk, or if the tint of the voiling is a deep carnation, then a touch of pale blue in the trimming is exceedingly smart. Brown, in either the bodice or the hat, is frequently made use of to bring out the color of a pale pink, blue or mauve.

There is a great deal of lace used in the decoration of nearly all the newest costumes, and on some of the silk and voiling models the bodice is composed almost entirely of white, cream or ecru lace with just some straps or embroidered bands of the material itself to show the color. There is a decided suggestion of the popular suspender dress necessitate in many models that have straps coming up over the shoulder from a high wide band of the material, which is either run up from the skirt or else separated by a girdle or band of lattice work in silk or ribbon. The sleeves and yoke in such a garment should be composed entirely of lace with just a touch of the color in silk or ribbon found about the cuff. There is a great deal of embroidery used this spring, and it is now found possible to work with silk upon almost any cloth.

BODICE OF CASHMERE

Costume That Has Points Differing from Ordinary—Pointed Revers Trimmed with Velvet.

This is a bodice made to a dress of wine-colored cashmere. The vest, of embroidered net over silk, is attached to the right side of lining, and is hooked over to the left. The material is set in two inch-wide tucks each side from waist, both back and front, and is slightly gathered at waist. The pointed revers are trimmed with a strap of velvet, and the fronts are connected by straps of velvet, passed through holes to form loops on the right side.

There are five one-half-inch tucks to draw the sleeves below elbow; the turned-back cuffs match the revers.

Materials required: 2½ yards 46 inches wide, 1¾ yards lining, five-eighths yard lace 18 inches wide, five-eighths yard silk, one-quarter yard piece velvet, one yard ribbon velvet, 1¼ inches wide.

Freak Jewelry.

Among the charms most generally worn at the present moment are the signs of the zodiac cut in gold and acting as a spell during certain months against all unlucky influence, sprigs of white heather set in crystal, jade stars having points according to the owner's lucky number, boxwood pigs, Connemara marble owls, small pieces of wood begged from lucky card tables and carried in miniature boxes of gold, lucky beans, lucky nails, and, of course, that well-tried talisman, the bent sixpence.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

When You Want Pure White Lead, Get It

Probably there is no other article of commerce subjected to so much adulteration and misrepresentation as White Lead.

Out of 18 brands of "White Lead" recently analyzed by the Government Agricultural Experiment Station of North Dakota, 5 contained absolutely No White Lead, 5 less than 25% of White Lead, and only 3 over 90% of White Lead.

There is, however, a way to be certain of the purity and genuineness of the White Lead you buy, and that is to see that the keg you buy bears the Dutch Boy trade mark. This trade mark is a positive guarantee of absolutely Pure White Lead made by the Old Dutch Process.

Tired Nervous Women Make Unhappy Homes

MRS. NELLIE MAKHAM

A nervous irritable woman often on the verge of hysterics, is a source of misery to everyone who comes under her influence, and unhappy and miserable herself.

Such women not only drive husbands from home but are wholly unfit to govern children.

The ills of women act like a fire brand upon the nerves, consequently seven-tenths of the nervous prostration, nervous despondency, "the blues", sleeplessness, and nervous irritability of women arise from some female derangements.

Do you experience fits of depression with restlessness alternating with extreme irritability? Do you suffer from pains in the abdominal region, backache, bearing-down pains, nervous dyspepsia, sleeplessness, and occasionally cross and snappy? If so, your nerves are in a shattered condition and you are threatened with nervous prostration.

Proof is incontestable that nothing in the world is better for nervous troubles of women than Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs. Thousands and thousands of women can testify to this fact.

Mrs. Nellie Makham, of 161 Morgan St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"I was a wreck from nervous prostration.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs and today holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases of any medicine the world has ever known, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the laboratory at Lynn, Mass., which testify to its wonderful value.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; a Woman's Remedy for Women's Ills.

MRS. GEO. A. JAMES

I suffered so I did not care what became of me, and my physician gave up all hopes of my recovery. Physicians failing to help me, I was urged by a friend to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I want to tell you that it has entirely cured me. I think it is the finest medicine on earth and I feel like recommending it to all my friends and acquaintances.

Mrs. Geo. A. James, a life long resident of Fredonia, N. Y., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"I was in a badly run down condition and had nervous prostration caused by female trouble, in fact I had not been well since my children were born. This continued to worry me very much, and I was often worked on my nerves until I was irritable and miserable. I had tried many remedies without getting much help but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound brought me back to health and strength. It has also cured me safely through the Change of Life. I cannot too strongly recommend your medicine."

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to communicate promptly with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Free from the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest road of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

SELF-FEEDER FOR HOGS.

Arrangement by Which the Work Is Much Simplified.

I have a plan for making a self-feeder for hogs which I think is different from anything that has as yet appeared, says a correspondent of Prairie Farmer. It has a capacity of 250 bushels of shelled corn, 70 bushels of oats, and is just right to feed one car load of hogs. I think that this self-feeder is one of the most profitable conveniences on my farm.

The Back-Board.

As shown in fig. 1 there are two divisions, one being for shelled corn and the other for oats. Twelve spaces on each side are made for the corn and four on each side for the oats. Each space, whether for corn or oats is 11 inches wide in the clear, 22 inches high and 18 inches deep.

At the end of each one of these stalls is a space exactly three inches wide, for feeding grain to the floor into the stall. As shown in fig. 2, a six-inch board is placed a few inches back of the opening so as to prevent the corn and oats from getting out and under the feet of the hogs.

In fig. 3 there is shown a front view of this self-feeder with the stalls arranged for the hogs. As already suggested, similar stalls are made on the rear side.

By this method I wish to say most emphatically that hogs cannot and do not waste any feed. They feed quietly and profitably, but I do not recommend that any feeder attempt to use a self-feeder of this kind with mixed grade hogs. Arrange to feed an even car load and I believe that it is more important that they should be even in size.

I have found that hogs fed in this way will make money fast and easy. It is important, however, to keep good oats at one end and good shelled corn on the other and you can safely count on getting one pound of pork for every five pounds of grain fed. Providing you put this little building up properly any intelligent farmer can make a structure of this kind for $40, and will save him a great deal of labor to feed.

Here is another strong advantage in a feeder of this kind. If you have some of that corn-and-to-death land, plant to clover and then pull this self-feeder when empty to the place where you want the land built up. Next fall when the corn is gathered from this land you will find, if your experience agrees with mine, that where you had your feeder you have your best corn.

I do not have my hogs get sick when starting them on feed. We prefer starting pigs to feed when they weigh about 150 pounds.

SHEEP NOTES.

Do not hurry sheep through doors and gates so that they will crowd and get hurt.

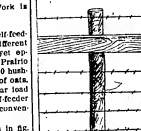
Grain should be given the ewes twice each day. Hay in the morning, shredded fodder at noon and a feed rack of hay at night.

Sheep should not be caught by clutching handfuls of their wool, as this injures the fleece, but by nothing of giving pain to the sheep. Catch them always as if they had no wool.

This is the time of year when you will need the best feed for as the warmer weather comes the appetite is not so keen, and they will also need a more succulent feed at this time.

Early lambs and their mothers as well need to be kept warm for quite a while. They will soon get a good hold on life so that they will endure almost anything. But they will do much better in return for good treatment.

When a lamb stands with its back bent up in the shape of a rainbow, you had better look after it. It is not doing well, for some reason. Perhaps the mother does not have enough to eat; or it may be the food of the ewe is not nourishing enough.



Half the Living.

Those who do not have a garden lose a great deal, for a good garden furnishes half the family living.

FENCING AGAINST DOGS.

Narrow Board Just Below Top Wire Proves Effective.

Many shepherds testify to the benefit of a good fence around sheep as a defense against dogs. A fence that is tight enough to turn dogs as well as high enough so that they cannot readily jump over will, in many cases, prevent the dogs chasing the sheep. Especially where the sheep are confined in a lot with a high fence, dogs will not enter, and seldom do much damage.

Where wire fences are used, a device such as shown in cut is very effective. To get over this fence, the dog will jump at he railing and he throws back by the top wire. A few attempts of this fence and he will give it up. Such a rail can be made from poles and need not be expensive. The point is to allow no dogs to enter by way of gates or embankments where fences may not be kept secure.

DO NOT MIX BREEDS OF CATTLE.

Experience of One Farmer Was That It Did Not Pay.

The temptation of farmers not especially interested in dairying to cater to meat production as well as milk is very strong, but if they will follow the experience of others who have endeavored to carry on dual purpose stock raising, I believe they can save themselves some costly experiments. I refer in particular to the mixing of different breeds of cattle in order to obtain an animal that will be valuable for both milk and beef.

I met the other day a farmer, continues this writer in Orange Judd Farmer, who had used no less than four different breeds of bulls in the last six years. He said he had arrived at the point where he was determined to sell out everything and start again, this time to breed one kind of stock and keep them pure.

The demand to-day is for animals that are able to do a certain class of work a little better than the ordinary or common kind. To do this we must use special purpose animals. There is no dodging the fact that such animals will in the long run perform their work with greater economy and greater profit. There is no objection to grading up with one line of stock. In fact, this is a good method to pursue, and certainly a practical one, but I believe it is a great mistake to use, in this grading up, animals with a great difference of type and conformation.

As competition grows sharper, and it certainly will, we will feel the need of getting the best service from not only our live stock, but also our fields. The importance of making two blades of grass grow where one formerly did, or to make a cow produce as much butter as two of the common sort, or a steer to fatten a year earlier and with less feed than his scrub cousin, is growing more urgent every year. Don't be satisfied with average results for the average is always poor, and certainly one should have an ambition to do better than poor.

The Mortgage Lifter.

Some successful hog raisers like to speak of the hog as a mortgage lifter, and doubtless he is that in many cases. The great fecundity of the hog and the fact that his meat always brings a big price makes him an easy animal to feature on to help lift the debt that has been placed on the farm. The study of the hog and his needs will increase in importance as a mortgage lifter. There is no doubt that if we can learn how to keep the cholera away and learn to furnish cheap hog food, rich in muscle-building elements, we will reduce in number the mortgages on American farms.

Abnormal Appetite.

The sow that eats her pigs has an abnormal appetite. It is believed by hog feeders that this is caused by a deficiency in the food. A ration of corn meal with nothing to offset the high starchy properties does not give the substances that the sow needs for the building up of her body. She seeks to satisfy the abnormal craving and the pigs suffer.

The Kicking Horse.

The kicking horse should not be suddenly startled. When entering the stable where a horse is he should be spoken to. Fear is often the cause of a horse kicking, this being due to his instinct of self-protection. Horsemen that handle kicking horses make a practice of speaking gently to them, especially when working about them.

Talk to your sheep; they will understand you. Try it and see.

WORN TO A SKELETON.

A Wonderful Restoration Caused a Sensation in a Pennsylvania Town.

Mrs. Charles N. Preston, of Ikland, Pa., says: "Three years ago I found that my house work was becoming a burden. I tired easily, had no ambition and was fading fast. My complexion got very low and I lost over 50 pounds. My thirst was terrible, and there was sugar in the kidney secretions. My doctor kept me on a strict diet, but as his medicine was not helping me, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They helped me at once, and soon all traces of sugar disappeared. I have regained my former weight and am perfectly well."

An Oversight.

When Chapple got up the other morning he wandered around his apartment in his pretty pink pajamas, the very picture of woe.

"What's the matter, sir?" inquired his valet.

"I don't know, Alphonse," he groaned; "I passed a most unhappy night."

Alphonse looked him over carefully.

"Oh, sir," he exclaimed, "I know what was the matter. The trousers of your pajamas were not creased. You must be more careful, sir. There is had prepared for you were hanging across the foot of the bed."—The Bohemian.

ITCHING RASH 18 YEARS.

Girl's Rash Spread and Grew Worse Under Specialist's Care.—Perfect Cure by Cuticura Remedies.

"When my daughter was a baby she had a breaking out behind the ears. The doctor said that she would outgrow it, and it did get somewhat better until she was about fifteen years old, and after that she could get nothing that would drive it away. She was always applying something in the way of salves. It troubled her behind the knees, opposite the elbows, back of the neck and ears, under the chin, and then it got on the face. That was about three years ago. She took treatment with a specialist and seemed to get worse all the time. We were then advised to try the Cuticura Remedies, and now I don't see any breaking out. M. Carley, 11-19 Sixteenth St., Bay City, Mich., May 30, 1906."

The Money Devil.

"It's my candid opinion," he said, "that money is infested with seven devils, and I shouldn't wonder if 70 times seven would be more correct. There is trouble and a world of worry in the very name of it. When I haven't got it, I'm worrying as to where I'll get it, and when I get it I worry about what to do with it; for I put it in the bank I worry because it don't grow fast enough, and if I spend it I worry because I got rid of it so soon; so you see, it's a world full o' trouble anyway you take it! The poor hess and curse it; the rich don't know what to do with it; there isn't a handful of happiness in a ton of it. Here come a bill collector and I get what little I haven't got. Stay here and entertain him while I climb to the roof!"—Atlanta Constitution.

NO KISSING IN CHURCH.

Galician Peasants Punished for Untimely Osculation.

Twenty Ruthenian peasants belonging to lapso, in Galicia, have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, from a week to a month, for kissing each other in church.

A fend has arisen between two parties in the town, and the priest preached a sermon in which he urged the peasants to moke friends before they came to confession again. They took him at his word, and on the following Sunday the two hostile parties marched up the church side by side, and kissed the altar. Then they solemnly shook hands and kissed one another on both cheeks in the Polish fashion to seal the reconciliation.

The kissing scene excited laughter among the members of the congregation, and the priest prosecuted the peasants for unseemly conduct in church. The court held that a church is no place for kissing and found the peasants guilty.

FIT THE GROCER

Wife Made the Suggestion.

A grocer hos excellent opportunity to know the effects of special foods on his customers. A Cleveland grocer has a long list of customers that have been helped in health by leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee.

Ha says, regarding the effect of coffee: "Two years ago I had been drinking coffee and must say that I was almost wrecked in my nerves.

"Particularly in the morning I was so irritable and upset that I could hardly wait until the coffee was served, and then I had no appetite for breakfast and did not feel like attending to my business duties.

"One day my wife suggested that inasmuch as I was selling so much Postum there must be some merit in it and suggested that we try it. I took home a package and she prepared it according to directions. The result was a very happy one. My nervousness gradually disappeared and to-day I am all right. I would advise every one affected in any way with nervousness or stomach troubles, to leave off coffee and use Postum Food Coffee.

Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and A FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. CASTORIA DOES NOT CONTAIN NARCOTICS, if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

"NO MORE MISSIONARIES WANTED," SAY JAPANESE

COPYRIGHT, 1906, by Joseph B. Bowles.

TOKIO, Japan—That many or most Japanese Christians say no more foreign missionaries are wanted in Japan, and that numbers of the strongest missionary leaders agree with them, at least to the extent of saying that no new forces should be sent out for the present, is the rather sensational conclusion to which I have been forced after six weeks' study of the missionary situation here.

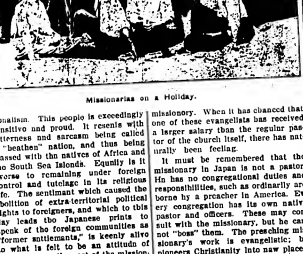
A grave crisis confronts the missions in Japan. How serious it is the church people in America have no conception. That an open rupture between the missions and the Japanese churches has been narrowly averted, and is still a dangerous possibility, is freely admitted on all sides. The gravity of the situation is recognized by everybody concerned. It affects present religious conditions in the empire, but, more important still, it has a bearing upon the future of Christian missions in almost every country in the world. The success that are up for settlement here and now will constitute a precedent for all other mission lands. The very magnitude of the crisis has sobered all parties concerned, so that the bitterness and hostilities which marked the earlier stages of the controversy are passing away, and on every side the extreme views are being modified.

Japanese Churches Assert Themselves.

The present tense situation has its tap root in the spirit of Japanese nationalism, nurtured by outside agencies. The native church in Japan covers the entire empire. It has many self-supporting congregations, and powerful leaders not a few. It is said that in remote government schools where there was not a single Christian, the students are nevertheless divided into Uemura and Ebana camps—these latter being the names of the preachers who are the leaders of two parties in the churches, whose vigorous newspaper controversies is peculiar to a wide constituency. The Japanese church has an established foreign mission work of its own in Formosa and Korea.

I have been at pains to inquire as to the character of Japanese Christians. On all sides I hear that the intelligent devotion of Japanese Christians to the central truths of Christianity is unquestioned. Whatever the outcome of the present controversy, the native church will remain loyal to the teachings which it has had from the missionaries. I personally have seen congregations of Christians here, of several denominational names, whose devotion and sincerity was apparent to any observer. A riper or more saintly character it would be hard to find than one old blind man with whom I talked, who has been through long persecution for the sake of his faith.

Undoubtedly, too, Christianity has come to have a recognized place in the life of the nation. It is a factor in the present thought and development of Japan which no Japanese leader pretends to ignore. Broadly speaking, there is now no hostility to Christianity; yet I yesterday saw one of the old edict boards which 50 years ago decorated the highways, prohibiting with death any one accepting Christianity or harboring a Christian. All of the many Japanese writers and teachers with whom I have thus far talked freely concede at least as important place in Japan's future to Christianity, while Christian authors, like Matsumura, confidently declare that it is bound to swallow up Buddhism and Shintoism. Japanese Christians are beginning to have their own schools and orphanages, supported by themselves, as well as their own religious books and periodicals.



Why No More Missionaries.

The foregoing is an endeavor to give a clear glimpse of a situation that seems to be understood very slightly in America. Back here one hears echoes of fervid reports of "Japan's Religious Awakening," and "Japan's plea for missionaries." Over these I have seen old missionaries shake their heads. At the recent meeting of the Council of Missions of the Presbyterian and Reformed churches which struggled with the present burning issues it was declared openly that no more new missionaries should be sent here until the present problematic situation has been adjusted. It may be that some men already here will have to return home. To a mere observer it appears reasonable that a man who has been in Japan many years without having learned the language, or acquired the Japanese viewpoint, or attained sympathetic and fraternal relations with the native Christians, should consider himself called to some more congenial field of labor. A recent issue of "Mission News," a monthly published in Kobo in the interests of the Japan-American Board Mission, contained these striking sentences: "The time for 'extra-territorial' Christianity in Japan is rapidly drawing to an end, if it is not already passed. Missionaries and missionaries are being united. They have accomplished a mighty work in the past and it is in their power to do even greater work in the present and immediate future. Will they meet the test and rise to the opportunity that is theirs?"

On this last point the Japanese are quite insistent. They say that a new day demands a new kind of help from America. Instead of men to do preaching and teaching—for which native talent there are now sufficient qualified Japanese—they want men of the character and calibre of President Charles Cuthbert Hall, of Union Seminary, New York, who made a pronounced impression during his recent visit to Japan. They want statesmanlike leaders, men of large culture, great learning and broad sympathies. They hear that America has in the way of teachers and pastors may profitably be sent to Japan to lead her native leaders and inspire her native inspirers.

In the meantime the majority of missionaries, as well as many Japanese, declare that Japan still needs the missionaries. Yet a native church empire say frankly that this whole uproar is a Tokio product, and they hint at the ambition of certain Tokio leaders to control the Japanese church. An English missionary told me that the control of funds could not be turned over to Japanese until the latter, as a nation, have learned new ideas of trustworthiness. He cited the case of a treasurer who used trust funds to pay his father's debts, and declared that his obligations to his father took precedence to all other obligations. On the other hand, some missionaries assert that such charges are the mere race prejudice of the white man.

As to the confusion of hundreds of conflicting opinions upon this all-absorbing topic of Japanese ecclesiastical independence, I have gathered at least one conviction, namely, that so long as the present state of uncertainty and turmoil exists, the American missionary organizations would do well to send no more young preachers to Japan, although the field for unordained teachers is large.

Missionaries on a Holiday.

tionalism. This people is exceedingly sensitive and proud. It resents with bitterness and sarcasm being called a "heathen" nation, and thus being classed with the natives of Africa and the South Sea Islands. Equally it is averse to remaining under foreign control and tutelage in its religious life. The sentiment which caused the abolition of extra-territorial political rights to foreigners, and which to this day leads the Japanese press to speak of the foreign communities as "former settlements," is keenly alive to what is felt to be an attitude of superiority on the part of the missionaries.

Underlying the problem, also, is the lnarsiaed and ineradicable Anglo-Saxon sense of superority to other races. I myself have seen enough to warrant the belief that there is ground for the Japanese sensitiveness on this subject. Not all missionaries conduct themselves toward the Japanese preachers and Christians as toward a man, a brother and an equal. Such men are few, but they should be nailed home. Their usefulness here is ended, if it ever existed. To this attitude on the part of certain foreigners may be traced the ecclesiastical inconsiderateness, not to say discourtesy, of the Japanese. Missionaries not a few know as well as the native ministry what it is to have their feelings hurt.

Church Union Ahead of Homeland.

Church Union Ahead of Homeland.

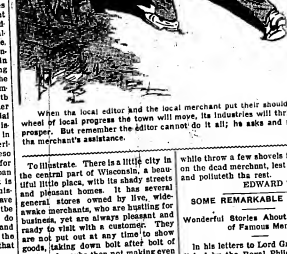
The upshot of the matter has been the growth of self-governing Japanese denominations. The largest of these is "The Church of Jesus Christ in Japan," which includes all the Presbyterian and Reformed bodies; there are hara none of the Presbyterian subdivisions that exist in America. Next in size comes the "Kumiai," or Congregational churches, with warrant shortly be included the United Brethren and Methodist Protestants. The Methodists, Episcopal, North, South and Canadian—have been seeking consolidation. At first the missions boards across the water which are interposed obstacles to this union, but the Japanese Methodists objected, but the Japanese Methodists spoke out so promptly and loudly that all barriers to the creation of one Methodist church in Japan have been removed. The Protestant Episcopal church and the Church of England have likewise joined forces. There is little doubt that this union movement will continue, the Congregationalists and the Presbyterians coalescing at an early date. Many predict a speedy union of all native churches into one Japanese Christian church. Certainly the strongness of opinion that the missionary denominational and sectarian divisions of American Christendom cannot be perpetuated here.

The present enrolled membership of the Protestant churches of Japan, by the way, is about 45,000, the past year showing an apparent decrease—through an error, it is claimed, in the statistics. Long before the churches of American got together in New York, in the Interchurch Conference on Federation, there existed a solidly established federal organization here, "the Standing Committee of Co-operating Missions," which has effected several practical results, including the production of a common hymn book for all the Japanese churches.

Where the Conflict Comes.

The paradoxical element is true, broadly speaking, that while the relations between the individual missionaries and the individual Japanese Christians have been cordial, the relations between the missions and the native churches have been strained. At the crux of the question has been the control of the forces and the funds. The missionary and his personal helpers have worked in and for the local congregations, but the latter have had no control over them. The missionary is entirely outside the jurisdiction of the native church. He works when and where and how he pleases, or as his mission directs. So, too, the evangelists employed by the missionary are governed to the matter of salary and labor entirely by the

DEAD MERCHANT



HE SOMETIMES DRIVES TRADE AWAY FROM THE TOWN.

HINDRANCE TO LIVE MERCHANT

Are as Much to Be Feared as the Competition of the Catalogue House—Should Be Awakened or Buried.

Why should the home merchant be patronized instead of the mail order house? The subject has been exhausted almost from all points of view and all sides there is no valid reason why the merchant at home should not—excepting two, price and articles wanted.

It is not the intention of the writer to jot down a pleasant flow of language or to produce an interesting bit of reading matter, but merely to state a few simple sentences that I have seen and learned of the competition between the catalogue houses and the home merchants. In the first place no one community suffers greatly in this competition. That makes the problem all the more difficult in solution. I mean by this that the majority of buyers in no one community purchase by mail. The business of the mail order house is scattered over a large territory, the number of orders coming from any one community compared with the whole is comparatively small to the number of orders in the town. There is an exception to this in a community where the home merchants are dead ones and ask exhorbitant prices.

When the local editor and the local merchant put their shoulders to the wheel of local prosperity the town will move, its industries will thrive, it will prosper. But remember the editor cannot do it all; he asks and must have the merchant's assistance.

To illustrate. There is a little city in the central part of Wisconsin, a beautiful little place, with its shady streets and pleasant homes. It has several general stores owned by live, wide-awake merchants, who are hustling for business, yet are always pleasant and ready to visit with a customer. They are not put out at any time to show goods, taking down bolt after bolt of cloth and maybe then not making even a five-cent sale. They take that as a part of their business; they are always willing to send post-haste to the city for any article they may not have in stock that is wanted by a customer; their stocks are up-to-date and free from shelf-worn goods. Courtesy reigns in them even better measure and quality than their elders would receive. And these men are advertisers. Their ads in the local papers are changed regularly and show time and study. They meet the competition in more than half way in special sales and clearing of odds and ends. Here is an instance where there is no loss in the purchase for a person sending away after goods. And the people do not. Very few articles of general merchandise are shipped into that city. The buyer and seller are working in harmony to their own interests and advantage.

But look at the other side. The city which we have in mind has one hundred and one furniture store. Both have fairly good stocks for the size of their city and trade, but just step into either one of these stores. The proprietor may be in the back room or the front office for all you know, but by and by some stir is heard and leisurely he makes his appearance—either going to a clerk or customer—and probably with some grumbles about being disturbed, asks what is wanted. There might as well be placards in the store announcing "Buy what I've got and keep off," or "We are busy, don't disturb us." No effort is made to show you an article; nothing is ever taken down from the shelves unless directly asked for. Neither hardware nor furniture man acts willing to get what you want if he does not have it in stock. And again—neither one of these stores believe in advertising. They use no space in their home papers; a newcomer would never know the city possessed such places of business enterprise. Who ever heard of a country hardware or furniture store having a special sale, or harvest sale or the like? But why not? These two storekeepers are like target at the mail order houses. I wonder why? I talked with the railroad agents in that little city and he said lots of hardware and furniture was shipped in. He said, "One day I made out an express order for $34 to pay for a bill of hardware. I told the man to go up and see if the merchant couldn't fill the order. He went but soon came back, saying that he didn't have half of the stuff on hand and that he couldn't cut a bit on what he did have."

Column after column has been written denouncing the fact that the buyer spends her or his money away from home, that she or he is helping to build up the mail order house to the detriment of the home merchant. The sentiment is good and the cause is worthy but all the efforts being made to stop this undertow; but no amount of writing, and no amount of home patriotism will ever overcome the bad effects of the dead merchant in the little town. The truth can ha plainly seen.

Let us turn back to the general stores and look up the proprietor of any one. He probably will be found busy waiting on a customer, but if not he will tell you that it is not the catalogues alone that he fears, but also that it is the lethargy of these two dealers. They are helping to drive away trade from home.

I have wandered from the subject and gotten over on the buyers side of the fence; but isn't it well at times to look at the other side of this pitiable story? I started to write a few lines on "Why People Should Trade at Home," and have gotten into the field of "Why the Home Merchant Should Induce People to Trade at Home." It may be fair to the little town to once in a while throw a few shovels full of earth on the dead merchant, lest he stinketh and polluteth the rest.

EDWARD T. HALE.

SOME REMARKABLE HORSES.

Wonderful Stories About the Steeds of Famous Men.

In his letters to Lord Granville, published by the Royal Philosophical society, who was also greatly interested in natural history, Smithson, the founder of the Smithsonian Institution in America, relates how the horse of Alexander the Great, Bucephalus, would at night, on hearing a blast of the trumpet from the soldiers on guard, answering the approach of the enemy, run at great speed to his master's tent and with his teeth grab the sleeping monarch and shake him until he sprang into the saddle and galloped toward the enemy.

Also that the great Caliph Hnroun-el-Raschid in the eight century in marching toward the forces of Constantine, Constantinople constantly had a number of trained Arabian horses (direct descendants of the famous horse used by Ishmael 4,000 years ago) thrown forward as scouts, who from time to time returned to camp and by a peculiar whinny and neigh reported the proximity of the enemy.

But, to come down to the present day, it is related by a retired New England clergyman, whose sands of life had nearly run out, that one day on leading his horse down through a lane to a brook for a drink the animal suddenly halted and, turning its head round, grabbed up with its teeth one of his bird shoes which had just dropped off, and, shaking it in its mouth with the nails dangling, it backed up against a stone wall and clapped it onto the hoof and with a few violent kicks nailed it on again.

The Actor's Complaint.

The physician looked grave.

"What is' grand opera as distinct from light opera?"

"Oh, you pretend to appreciate one, you mean?" he said, "but ten more years of work."

"Grinding his teeth, the actor hissed malevolently:

"Curse you, why didn't you tell me this before? Are you aware that you have robbed me of at least seven farewell seasons?"

Where the Difference Lies.

"Well," answered Brightley, "I consider it more gentlemanly to doubt your word than to believe you did enough to have originated those stories."

TERRORS OF RUSSIAN WINTER.

It Is So Cold That All Human Activity Is Nearly Suspended.

"Winter in Russia," said a traveler, "is a time of rest. The only work possible in the country is woodchopping, and since very few men engage in this profitably the majority of the peasants spend the cold months beside their stoves—sleeping.

"When the first snow tells they heap it up against their huts and it helps to keep them warm. In the towns every street is piled with mounds of snow ten feet high, restricting the fairway of traffic to half the usual breadth of the road.

"Bonfires burn at all street corners, round which the policemen on duty, the errand boy and the casual loafer stand thawing out frozen toes and trying to gain comfort in the cheery glare of the blaze. In Moscow the municipality has this year erected hundreds of little huts warmed to fever heat with stoves. Between these and the government drink monopoly the poorer classes of society citizens, who, but for that terrible wind, would be seeking work in a score of different directions, hover to and fro. Vodka is consumed in astonishing quantities, and it has the property of enabling the generous drinker to withstand this icy blast for hour after hour—in fact, so long as the stuff is procurable. Much credit is due to the government drink monopoly shops, and when they close the streets become strangely deserted by all but the few well-to-do who care to face the cold on business or pleasure bent.

"The only garment that will keep out frost and wind is the Siberian sheepskin, ordinary fur-lined coats with huge collars embedding the head covered with wide-eared fur cap, are useful only for short drives; for onlyking over a few miles the dokha is indispensable. This is preferably ostrich skin, without any nap heavy, close fur within, and made large enough to envelop the wearer with ease when six ordinary fur coat. If need be, as well.

"It is astonishing what extremes of cold and change the human frame will accustom itself to. You sit in a warm house at a temperature of 65 degrees one moment and the next you are out in the street breathing with exhilaration generous lungfuls of air at 40 degrees below the opening of the first door and the closing of the third—you always have at least three doors—you always have to get in and out of during a Russian winter."

King Came to Rescue.

At the time of the marriage of the crown prince of Sweden, Miss Emma Thursby, the American singer, and Mme. Christine Nilsson were appearing on alternate nights at the Royal theater at Stockholm. Mme. Nilsson would sing in opera one night and Miss Thursby in concert the next.

Both ladies were invited to the court ball given by King Oskar in honor of the crown prince and his bride, and both wished to attend. But neither had a court train, and how were at their wits' ends to know what to do. Every dressmaker in Stockholm was busy night and day; it was too late to order the dresses from Paris. Mrs. Nilsson finally solved the difficulty.

"I will write to the king about it," she said. And she did.

"Your most gracious majesty," she wrote in her letter, "Miss Thursby and I have no dress fit to wear to the court ball. What shall we do?"

"Come without them, Oskar," was the answer which he got back the same day.

They went to the ball and had a memorable time.

Donkey Was Too Sensitive.

Ellen Terry at a dinner in New York was condemning snobbishness. "It is the most contemptible of all shortcomings," she said. "And undoubtedly the so-called aristocratic snobs inflict a great deal of pain with their insults. They don't understand the hurt they inflict, though. A snob has no imagination. He has no more idea of the power of his work than had the little boy with the donkey. There was a little boy whose father gave him a donkey for an Easter gift. All week well with the animal for some weeks. Then one afternoon the lad limped into the house in tears. 'The bad donkey kicked me,' he howled.

"Shocked you? Then you must have been cruel to it,' said his mother.

"'I wasn't cruel to it at all!' he sobbed. 'I only just tried to carve my name on it with my new knife.'"

A Perfect Gentleman.

"But," protested Miss Jokeley, "I assure you the stories I've been telling you were original with me. I shouldn't think a gentleman would doubt my word."

"Well," answered Brightley, "I consider it more gentlemanly to doubt your word than to believe you did enough to have originated those stories."

Mere Housewives.

The prominent idea of education announces that "girls who wish to become merely housewives will enter the new course," while those who wish to study at the universities will enter the gymnasiums. In the gymnasiums, the domestic economy and the care of infants will be taught; in the gymnasiums, the science of household management. Hero is a new slogan for the American comic papers. We have heard of "mere men" from those who smile at women's new "spheres." Now come "mere housewives."

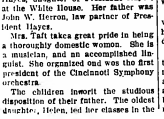
MRS. TAFT ACCOMPLISHED MUSICIAN AND LINGUIST

WASHINGTON.—Somewhat interested in the prospects of Taft's presidential boom is Mrs. Taft, wife of the secretary of "peace and war." If events continue in their present drift she is likely to be a prominent candidate for first lady of the land.

She thinks—and does not deny it—that "the judge" is the best man yet suggested for Republican candidate in 1908. She hopes that T. R. will continue of this mind. She says she thinks T. R.'s indorsement will help.

Mrs. Taft became acquainted with the inside of the White House when, at the age of 16, she was Helen Herron of Cincinnati, and visited Mollie Hayes, daughter of President Hayes, at the White House. Her father was John W. Herron, law partner of President Hayes.

Mrs. Taft takes great pride in being a thoroughly domestic woman. She is a musician, and an accomplished linguist. She organized one of the first president of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra.



The children inherit the studious disposition of their father. The oldest daughter, Helen, led her classes in the cathedral school, from which she graduated last year, and now is preparing for Bryn Mawr college.

Robert Alphonso, the eldest, now 19, is an undergraduate at Yale. He expects to adopt the hereditary occupation of law. He took a special course two years ago at Oxford in English law and history.

Charles P. Taft, youngest of the family is named for his rich newspaper uncle in Ohio. At the Force public school in this city, he site beside his crony, Quentin Roosevelt. He knows what he will be when he grows up—a soldier in the army. He plans to go to West Point as soon as dad will let him.

Secretary Taft is not a man of wealth. He has always had to live on his salary, and a secretary's salary does not go far in Washington.

The Tafts, therefore, do not entertain in any showy way, though they are able to select their friends from among the most interesting people, and their fondness for music has brought them in touch with musicians and artists.

NO CABINET MEETING—TEDDY HAS PHOTOS TAKEN

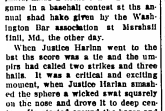
BECAUSE President Roosevelt wanted to have his picture taken on horseback—at least so the story goes—a regular cabinet meeting was postponed the other day for the first time in the memory of the oldest attache of the White House.

The president, it is said, has been thinking for some time that he ought to have a few more photographs. As day after day passed without furnishing the necessary sunshine he became more and more nervous. On the particular morning in question, after the cabinet members had gathered the clouds suddenly disappeared and the sky was clear for the first time in two weeks.

Without waiting to give much of an explanation the executive told his advisers not to wait, but to come around again next day. Then he donned his riding clothes, telephoned the photographer, called for Captain Fitzhugh Lee, and hurried to the riding course at Rock Creek park.

For more than an hour the president rode gracefully in front of the photographer, usually leaping his horse over hurdles. Some splendid negatives resulted and Mr. Roosevelt feels more than justified in postponing the cabinet meeting.

JUSTICE HARLAN WINS BALL GAME BY HOME RUN



JUSTICE HARLAN of the United States supreme court, aged 74 years, made a home run and won the game in a baseball contest at the annual shad bake given by the Washington Bar association at Marshall Hall, Md., the other day.

When Justice Harlan went to the bat the score was a tie and the umpire had called two strikes and three balls. It was a critical and exciting moment, when Justice Harlan swung and the sphere a wicked swat squarely on the nose and drove it to deep center. He started around the bases and his leg work was really marvelous.

His sprinting qualities surprised and delighted the fans, who were wild with enthusiasm. The ball went over the head of the center fielder and was lost in the tall grass.

Before it was recovered Justice Harlan had reached the home plate, where his stood slapping a mint julep which had been prepared hurriedly for the agile Kentuckian as a reward for lining out a four-base hit and showing the younger element how to get around the bases.

It is feared there will be a vacancy on the supreme bench, as "Home Run" Harlan has already received offers of contracts from a number of ball teams which are weak at the bat and need heavy hitters.

GRANDSON OF GEN. GRANT TO WED SOCIETY GIRL

THE most noted society event in Washington at least once a year will be the wedding of Miss Helen Dent Wrenshall, a pretty and talented Washington girl, to Charles Grant, of San Diego, Cal., a grandson of the late Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, which will be a function of the early June. While the blood of the greatest general America has produced courses through the veins of the young future bridegroom, the bride-to-be boasts of a lineage equally aristocratic. Miss Wrenshall says she is a lineal descendant of Alfred the Great.

When but a young boy young Grant was sent to Washington by his father to attend school. He remained here for two years, and during this period he became acquainted with Miss Wrenshall. Although very young the attachment was very strong, and after leaving the school he returned to Washington at least once a year.

After leaving school Grant went to the coast to soon left off banking and started in the real estate business, which he still follows. His father, U. S. Grant, Jr., is one of the prominent business men of San Diego. The groom is also a nephew of General Fred Grant.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

KUROKI WAR GENIUS

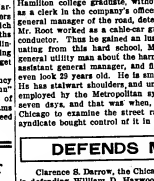
Among all the men who gained distinction in the Russo-Japanese war none has attained a higher place in the esteem of his countrymen and in the respect of the soldiers throughout the world than Gen. Baron Ital Kuroki, commander of the Japanese first army now visiting in this country. Until the appearance of Field Marshal Oyama before Liao Yang Kuroki was in supreme command of the Japanese forces in Manchuria, and even after the arrival of his superior officer, Kuroki remained very much in the limelight during the remainder of the campaign.

Kuroki it was whose military genius and sagacity forced the Russians to make the first of those "masterly retreats" that later became so much of a habit with the czar's soldiers that they will go down in history as the principal features of the war. Absolute coolness and military daring of a character such as few commanders in history have displayed are Kuroki's principal characteristics as a leader.

When the occasion, in his opinion, required it, Kuroki did not hesitate to go against all the established rules of attack and defense.

Military observers on duty with the little Japanese commander commented freely on his wonderful nerve, but from the fact that his apparently foolhardy maneuvers were almost invariably successful they could do nothing else but praise him.

GIVES MILLION TO CITY

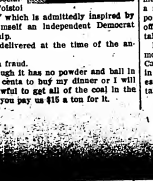


Gen. William Jackson Palmer, who has offered $1,000,000 worth of land to Colorado Springs for park purposes, finds at 70 years of age that he has too much money. He bought the site six years ago, when he sold his interest in the Denver & Rio Grande railroad to the Goulds for $6,000,000. At that time he turned over the princely sum of $1,000,000 for distribution among his former employes on the railroad.

Palmer began life in 1852 in the employ of the Pennsylvania road. He quit to serve through the civil war in the union army, retiring with the rank of brigadier general. He then went west and helped build the Kansas Pacific line.

Gen. Palmer was the first president of the Denver & Rio Grande, which he built through Colorado in 1871. He founded Colorado Springs July 13, 1871. Ever since he has made his home at Glen Eyrie, a picturesque canyon just north of the Garden of the Gods, three miles northwest of that city. He has given liberally to Colorado college. Recently he gave the city Austin Bluffs, about 1,000 acres, for park purposes. He says he has retired from railroading and he has invested his millions in building up Colorado Springs and in other public enterprises. He is averse to notoriety, but no Colorado pioneer has greater claims for distinction.

YOUNG CAPTAIN OF INDUSTRY



If you should go into the offices of the Metropolitan Street Railroad company in New York city a very portentous conviction that several hundred miles of trackage and many hundred cars, and representing an investment or $200,000,000, and should have business calling for the attention of the general manager, you would probably get a surprise when he appeared, unless you knew him. For you would be ushered into the presence of a grayheard with furrowed face, showing the years of business experience qualifying him for so important a position, but a mere lad—in appearance a college freshman. Tall, raw-boned, keenly alert, he would stand before you and transact his business with a cureness and briskness that would startle.

This is Oren Root, nephew of the secretary of state, and recently made, while scarcely over 30, vice president of the road.

Young Oren Root is the greatest railroad manager in the world. By sheer ability and hard work, within eight years, he has worked up from a clerkship to be general manager of the Metropolitan Street Railway system. He has 4,000 miles of road to oversee and 14,000 men to direct. Mr. Root, a Hamilton college graduate, without any sort of technical experience, began as a clerk in the company's auditing department. His quality, H. H. Vreeland, then vice president of the road, determined to advance him. At his suggestion, Mr. Root worked as a cable-car gripman, then as a motorman, and then as a conductor. Thus he gained an insight into the operation of the roads. Graduating from this hard school, Mr. Root became an inspector, starter and general utility man about the barns of the company. After that he was made assistant general manager, and finally general manager. Mr. Root does not even look 29 years old. He is smoothly shaven, has light hair and blue eyes. His has stalwart shoulders, and untiring energy. In all the time he has been employed by the Metropolitan street railway he has been out of New York only seven days, and that was when, at the request of a syndicate, he went to Chicago to examine the street railway system there. Upon his report the syndicate bought control of it in that city.

DEFENDS MINERS' CHIEFS

Clarence S. Darrow, the Chicago attorney who is defending William D. Haywood, the secretary of the Western Miners' Federation, accused of conspiring to murder former Gov. Steunenberg of Idaho, is noted for his successes in the cause of workingmen. Darrow began his career as a railroad attorney, but found his real forte lay in legal assaults upon monopolies and great corporations. In the great coal strike of 1903 Darrow made a brilliant appeal for the men before the Roosevelt arbitration committee. The award of this body, which workingmen live and his sympathy with their aspirations have developed marked socialistic tendencies. He is a great admirer of Tolstoi and has written a book. "Resist Not Evil," which is admittedly inspired by the Russian philosopher. Darrow calls himself an independent Democrat and is an ardent advocate of public ownership.

A characteristic utterance of Darrow, delivered at the time of the anthracite strike, was:

"The whole system of jurisprudence is a fraud.

"It is unlawful to get a pistol, even though it has no powder and ball in it, and say to a man you must give me ten cents to buy my dinner or I will blow the top of your head off. But it is lawful to get all of the coal in the world and say we will let you freeze unless you pay us $15 a ton for it.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

NEW YORK.—The marital troubles of various members of the Gould family continue to interest a great many people in this town. Out of the five married children of the late Jay Gould, who left to each of his offspring a large fortune, but two, George and Howard, seem to have been able to avoid notoriety in connection with their domestic affairs. The story of the Countess of Castellane is known to all the world, how her ambition to shine socially led her to marry a French scamp with a title and a great longing to spend the millions her father had left to her. Now the troubles of Howard and Frank are being aired in the public press.

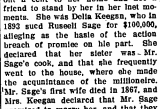
Only a few days ago it became known publicly that Frank Gould, who married the granddaughter of Eugene Kelly, the banker and philanthropist, who left a huge fortune, was on the verge of separating from his wife. The trouble, it seems, originally arose over a difficulty concerning the religious training of the children. Before her marriage Mrs. Gould was ostensibly a Roman Catholic, although she did not conform to the ceremonies of that institution when she wedded Mr. Gould.

The husband says that the trouble was due to a case of too much mother-in-law; that Mrs. Kelly interfered in the affairs of his household and that he would not put up with it. The friction is supposed to have been caused by disputes over the manner in which the children should be educated. In order to get a dispensation for one of these mixed marriages the Catholic church requires that both parties to the marriage shall sign an agreement that any issue of the marriage shall be brought up in the Catholic faith.

When Miss Kelly married Mr. Gould no such dispensation was sought and the ceremony was performed by a Protestant minister. By this act alone, according to the rules regarding matrimony, promulgated at the Council of Trent, Mrs. Gould excommunicated herself from the church and could no longer approach the sacraments until she had admitted the sin in confession and performed the penance imposed by the priests.

There is nothing to show that Mrs. Gould ever applied to be restored to membership in the church, which carries with it the right to the sacraments and burial in consecrated ground. Whether the children should be brought up as Catholics seemed to be the point at issue.

ACTRESS WIFE OF HOWARD GOULD SEEKS A DIVORCE

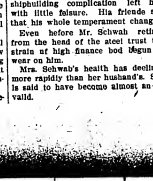


FOLLOWING thie story comes the report that Mrs. Howard Gould, who was Katherine Clemmons, an actress, has filed a petition for divorce. The causes of the disputes of the Howard Goulds have been many, but the one which probably attracted greatest attention was the alleged discourtesy of Mrs. Gould to the architect who designed the Castle Gould in Yorkshire. It was said she deliberately insulted him. He demanded payment of his fee and release from his contract. This was refused, and he sued Howard Gould, obtaining judgment for $60,000.

Mrs. Gould has been in frequent consultation with her attorney regarding the best course for her to pursue since the separation. The final determination to bring matters to a head a short time ago, when William Hawley throatened to sue Howard for $250,000 which Hawley alleged was due him in payment for the work of having Mrs. Gould shadowed by detectives and in other ways trying to get together material on which Mr. Gould could sue for divorce.

The Goulds were married in London, 1895, in the Holland House, where Miss Clemmons had been residing. Under the provisions of the will of Jay Gould a son or daughter whose marriage was displeasing to the other members of the family might be deprived of his or her share in the estate; but, although his marriage did not meet their approval, the heirs of Howard Gould did not enforce the clause against him.

Mrs. Gould's sister, Miss Ella Clemmons, married a Chinaman named Sun Yue in accordance with celestial rites.



A WOMAN who caused a great sensation in this city 14 years ago, and whose name decorated the headlines of the newspapers for many days, died the other day in the city hospital, a charitable institution, without a cent to her name and not a friend to stand by her in her last moments. She was Delia Keegan, who in 1893 sued Russell Sage for $100,000, alleging as the basis of the action breach of promise on his part. She declared that her sister was Mr. Sage's cook, and that she frequently went to the house, where she made the acquaintance of the millionaire. Mr. Sage's first wife died in 1887, and Mrs. Keegan declared that Mr. Sage promised to marry her, and that they had one son, who was named Joseph Christopher Sage.

She said she had sent the child to Ireland and did not know whether he was living or not. The suit was not begun until 25 years after. Mr. Sage's defense was that the suit was purely blackmail, and it was dismissed by the supreme court. After that the woman used frequently to go to his office in Broadway to annoy him, and once she threatened to kill him with a knife.

Three years after the trial a body found in the cellar of a tenement house was identified as that of Delia Keegan. When all preparations for the interment had been made, Delia bobbed up in the police court and was sent to the island for drunkenness. After she was frequently arrested for vagrancy, and finally disappeared from the public. Nothing was heard of her for years, until her death was announced at the hospital.

WOMAN WHO ONCE CAUSED GREAT SENSATION DEAD

STEEL MAGNATE SCHWAB WOULD SELL MANSION

FOR reasons not explained Charles M. Schwab is said to be offering his magnificent mansion in Riverside drive for sale. It cost him $3,500,000, but it can be bought for less than that sum. Mr. Schwab did not find supreme happiness in his costly home which he expected. He set out to build a palace that would let New York in its furious pace and make it marvel. It was his ambition to have a roof tree worthy of the fortune he possessed. Now, it is rumored, an offer less by a million than it cost will take it.

In a moment of confidence several months ago Mr. Schwab told Andrew Carnegie that he was tired of living in a palace; that he wished he might escape from the burdens the life entailed.

Before the palace was finised it began to wear on Mr. Schwabs' nerves. There were strikes and disputes about decorators' bills and endless delays. After the Schwabs had moved in business troubles began to harass the owner. The stormy events that followed his ventures in the shipbuilding trust, his retirement from the presidency of the United States Steel corporation and his organization of the Bethlehem Steel company form the debris of the shipbuilding complication left him with little leisure. His friends say that his whole temperament changed.

Even before Mr. Schwab retired from the head of the steel trust the strain at high finance had begun to wear on him.

Mrs. Schwab's health has declined more rapidly than her husband's. She is said to have become almost an invalid.

PRESBYTERIANS END TEMPERANCE FIGHT

THEY ADOPT RESOLUTIONS APPROVING WORK OF THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

Call It Safe and Sound—The Final Vote Came After Two Hours of Exciting Debate—Text of the Resolutions Adopted.

Columbus, O., May 23.—Following two hours of exciting debate, which, at times, became acrimonious and severed upon personalities, the Presbyterian general assembly Wednesday at the close of one of the liveliest sessions in its history adopted without a dissenting vote resolutions declaring as its policy that the permanent committee on temperance shall not embark upon or interfere in political work and endorsing the American Anti-Saloon league as a "safe, sane and effective organization in the advancement of the great cause of temperance," and pledging to it the fullest cooperation "consistent with the constitution of the church."

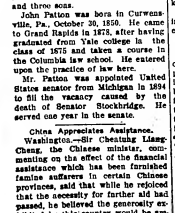
The Resolutions.

"Whereas, The Presbyterian church has always stood for the separation of the church and state and the assembly believes that the church in its organized capacity should not, through any of its agencies, be entangled with the political organizations of the state, while urging upon its members as Christian voters to take active interest in political affairs, hringing to the service of the state a conscientious performance of civic duties; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the assembly declares as its policy that the permanent committee on temperance shall not interfere in political primaries, either in the election or defeat of candidates for political office, enter into the organization of campaigns, frame bills for presentation to the legislatures, lobby before legislatures, or otherwise entangle the church with the political activities of the state, provided that nothing herein may be construed as limiting the constitutional right of petition as granted to our standards.

"Whereas, We contend that the church as an organization must continue to do its own temperance work.

"Resolved, That the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, U. S. A., most heartily commends the American Anti-Saloon league as a sane, safe and effective organization in the advancement of the great cause of temperance and pledges itself thereto the fullest cooperation consistent with the constitution of the church.



Columbus, O., May 25.—The finance committee reported that during the past year $4,609,852 had been received for the use of the various boards of the church. The trustees of the general assembly have invested in securities $968,963, a balance of $17,800 remaining in their hands uninvested.

Kansas City, Mo., was unanimously selected as the place for the next assembly. The report of the standing committee on temperance was accepted without acrimonious debate.

EX-SENATOR PATTON DEAD.

Michigan Statesman Succumbs to Attack of Typhoid Fever.

Grand Rapids, Mich., May 25.—Former United States Senator John Patton died Friday of typhoid fever. He returned last Thursday from Aiken, S.

Ex-Senator John Pattnn.

C., where he had been in search of health. He is survived by a widow and three sons.

John Patton was born in Curwensville, Pa., October 30, 1850. He came to Grand Rapids in 1873, studied law, graduated from Yale college in the class of 1875 and taken a course in the Columbia law school. He entered upon the practice of law here.

Mr. Patton was appointed United States senator from Michigan in 1894 to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Stockbridge. He served one year in the senate.

China Appreciates Assistance.

Washington.—Sir Chentung Liang-Cheng, the Chinese minister, commenting on the effect of the financial assistance which has been furnished famine sufferers in certain Chinese provinces, said that while he rejoiced that the necessity for further aid had passed, he believed the generosity exhibited by this country would be amply repaid by the entire elimination of any further irritation between the two countries.

Erie Railroad Machinists Strike.

Huntington, Ind., May 25.—All the machinists, about 75 in number, employed in the Erie railroad shops in this city, went on strike Friday. The strike is a final protest against piece work which the company, it is said, has been looking for the past two years to enforce on the machinists.

VETERANS HOLD REUNION

GRAND ARMY OF ILLINOIS MEETS AT DECATUR.

Thousands March in Parade—Hear Reports and Elect New Officers for Ensuing Year.

Decatur, Ill., May 23.—Six thousand visitors are in Decatur on account of the meeting of the department of Illinois Grand Army of the Republic and six affiliated organizations. The business sessions Wednesday were chiefly occupied with reports of officers. In the afternoon a parade was held, with 18 visiting posts and many bands and drum corps in line, 4,000 men in all.

The report of Assistant Adjt. Gen. Partridge gives the total membership of the department of Illinois December 31, 1906, as 18,211, showing a loss of 945 members during the year. One new post, Old Glory No. 798, has been organized since January 1, 1907. It meets in Memorial hall, Chicago.

Col. A. C. Matthews, of Pittsfield, was elected department commander without opposition. Quincy was chosen as the next meeting place. Mrs. Asca H. Trail, of Plymouth, was elected department commander of the Woman's Relief Corps, and W. C. Creighton, of Champaign, was elected commander of the Sons of Veterans.

BIG LEGAL BATTLE BEGUN.

Contest Over Estate of Mrs. Eddy Is in Court.

Concord, N. H., May 24.—Following several skirmishes, the first legal battle fought about the person of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, leader of the Christian Science denomination, in connection with the suit in equity seeking an accounting of her property, was opened in the Merrimack county superior court here Thursday. The original suit, brought by Mrs. Eddy's son, George W. Glover, of Lead, S. D., his daughter, Mary Baker Glover, and George W. Baker, of Bangor, Me., a nephew of Mrs. Eddy, was brought in the name of the Christian Science leader by her three relatives, acting as "next friends," and was directed against Calvin A. Frye, Mrs. Eddy's secretary, and several other leaders of the Christian Science church, asking for an accounting of Mrs. Eddy's property, which the "next friends" alleged was being misapplied by the defendants.

Judge Chamberlain announced at the outset of the hearing that the proceedings should be confined strictly to the question of the intervention of the trustees as plaintiffs. He said that he would not consider Mrs. Eddy's competency at this time.

DESK TRUST HEAVILY FINED.

Must Pay a Total of $42,750 for Violation of Law.

Chicago, May 22.—Fines aggregating $42,750 as a means of smashing a trust were used by Judge K. M. Landis in the United States district court Monday, when Frederick A. Holbrook and 12 church and school furniture companies were punished for stifling competition. The court action was a bomb in the government anti-trust crusade and brought consternation to the trust officials. It is believed to forecast similar vigorous methods upon the part of the government toward other trusts and trade combinations.

Holbrook, who was indicted as the moving spirit of the furniture trust, was fined $5,000, the maximum penalty. The American Seating company and the A. H. Andrews company, which were the principal corporations in the combine, were fined $5,000 each, while the other nine companies were given fines of from $500 to $2,000.

Five Die When Steamer Burns.

Grand Rapids, Mich., May 22.—Four coal passers perished and one passenger, Mr. M. Rhondes of Detroit, was burned fatally when the Crosby line steamer Shenandoah, formerly the Wisconsin, was destroyed by fire early Tuesday in the middle of Lake Michigan. Rhondes died in a hospital here. Fifty passengers and all the crew except the four coal passers were taken off in small boats by the freighter Kerr, the steamer Stratford and the Naomi's sister ship, the Kansas, which was en route from Milwaukee to Grand Haven.

The loss on the Naomi, which is in command of Capt. Thomas Traill, is estimated at $225,000.

Reject Irish Council Bill.

Dublin, May 22.—The Nationalist convention, called by leaders of the party to act on the Irish council bill introduced in the house of commons by Augustine Birrell, chief secretary for Ireland, Tuesday decided to reject the measure. Resolutions to reject the bill and calling upon the Nationalist members to do all in their power in the house to defeat it, were passed. The resolutions were introduced by John E. Redmond, chairman of the Irish parliamentary party. The meeting was held in the round room of the historic Mansion house.

Wheat Passes $1.05.

Chicago, May 23.—Amid the wildest excitement on the Chicago Board of Trade at its opening Wednesday December wheat took the biggest jump in the present campaign. It soared 5¼ cents over the dollar mark at the very opening of the pit. The parade in the pit was almost terrifying to witness. The buying orders from all over the country were pouring in by the thousands and the prices of wheat for July and September, as well as for December, kept above the one dollar mark. No May wheat was sold.

TRAIN HURLED OFF TRESTLE BY FIENDS

PACIFIC COAST FLYER WRECKED AS RESULT OF A DASTARDLY PLOT.

Fishplates Connecting Rails Are Removed and Tracks Pulled Apart with Wires—$10,000 Reward for Perpetrators of Deed.

Los Angeles, Cal., May 22.—A fatal train wrecking plot was perpetrated near here Wednesday that resulted in the death of one man and the injury of 22 persons, four of whom are dying.

Train No. 29, one of the Southern Pacific's coast line flyers, due here at 9 o'clock Tuesday night, was hurled from the tracks on a trestle at West Glendale, ten miles north of here, at 12:30 a. m. Wednesday by the deliberate work of murderous train wreckers. Seven cars plunged off the trestle, while the train was making 40 miles an hour, falling 16 feet to the bottom of a gulch.

At the Southern Pacific general offices in this city notices were posted offering $10,000 for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for the wreck. The officials announced that they had no clew whatever.

Fishplates and Bolts Removed.

In accomplishing the wreck of the train, which was the "Coast Line Limited," a devilish ingenuity was exercised. At a point on a curve near the closed. At a point on a curve near the Arroyo Seco the fishplates and bolts of two connecting rails on the southward track had been removed, and in the apertures whence the bolts were taken strands of heavy wire were fastened at the end of each rail.

From the appearance of the track after the wreck it was evident that some person hidden on a hillside close to the trestle had pulled the wire as the train approached and spread the rails outward toward the edge of the trestle.

Injured in Wreck.

Cincinnati, May 22.—Two persons were dangerously injured and 20 others slightly hurt Wednesday afternoon when the Chesapeake & Ohio flyer was wrecked at Lawrence creek, the engine being thrown into the ditch and the buckling of the track under it. The accident occurred between Brooksburg and South Hipley, Ky., and help was at once sent from these and other nearby towns and within two hours all the injured had been removed from the scene of the wreck and were on their way to Maysville and Cincinnati.

Sherman Declines Position.

Washington, May 24.—Lieut. Gov. Lawrence Y. Sherman, of Illinois, Thursday declined to accept his appointment by President Roosevelt as a member of the Spanish treaty claim commission. The reason assigned by Senator Cullom, who took Mr. Sherman's declination to the White House, was that Mr. Sherman did not feel like leaving his present position when the legislature of Illinois had not yet formally adjourned its session of this year.

President's Itinerary Laid Out.

Washington, May 24.—The president, it is said at the White House, will not make more than one stop in any one place on his way down the Mississippi river after he leaves Canton on the thirtieth of September. Unless present plans are changed, only three stops are to be made in all, St. Louis, Mo.; Cairo, Ill., and Memphis, Tenn. He will embark at some point in Iowa.

Two River Steamers Burned.

Gallipolis, O., May 23.—The Ohio river packet Chevalier and the transfer steamer City of Huntington were burned to the water's edge near Hesler station early Wednesday. The loss is $13,000. The crews narrowly escaped

ELECTION IS HELD VOID

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS DECIDES CONTEST.

Louisville and Jefferson County Officials Ousted and Governor Given Power to Fill Vacancies.

Frankfort, Ky., May 23.—The court of appeals Wednesday handed down its opinion in the contested election cases from the city of Louisville and Jefferson county, upholding the contentions of the fusionists and declaring the election void, thus reversing the decision of Judges Miller and Kirby of the Jefferson circuit court. The court rules that the Republicans has the power to fill the vacancies by appointment and an election for all city and county officials is ordered for next November.

The Democratic officials have 30 judicial days in which to enter a motion for a rehearing.

WOMEN ELECT OFFICERS.

Leaders of Home Missions of Presbyterian Church.

Columbus, O., May 22.—The Women's Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian church elected the following officers:

President, Mrs. Darwin R. James, now on a tour around the world.

Vice presidents, Mrs. W. J. Darby, Indiana; Mrs. C. W. Welker, New York; Mrs. J. B. Kendall, Indiana; Mrs. M. E. Boyd, New York; Mrs. E. E. Pomeroy, Minnesota, and Mrs. S. Pingry, New Jersey.

Secretary of the board, Mrs. Ella Alexander Boole.

Treasurer, Mrs. S. T. Lincoln.

Field secretaries, Mrs. Flora D. Palmer, Miss Julie Frezer and Miss Edith Hughes.

Reports submitted showed an advance in every department of the work during the last year.

Move to Reduce Pullman Rates.

Washington, May 25.—A definite effort was begun Friday before the interstate commerce commission to secure to the public a reduction in the rate of fare charged by the Pullman company for its sleeping car accommodations. This is the first time in the history of the commission that a proceeding has been brought against the Pullman company, and it promises to be an action of more than ordinary interest and importance in that it will open up the whole question of sleeping car rates, not only on the lines of the road mentioned specifically in the complaint, but throughout the country.

Machinists Leave Their Jobs.

Jersey City, N. J., May 25.—More than 3,000 machinists and helpers along the Erie railroad between New York and Chicago were called out on strike Friday, demanding an increase of pay and the abolition of the piece work system. The machinists were receiving 25 and 27½ cents an hour for a ten-hour day, and the helpers 15 and 18 cents an hour. They demand a 10 per cent increase, which would give the machinists who are receiving 25 cents an hour 27½ cents and those getting 27½, 30 cents.

Will Not Abandon Steel Plant.

New York, May 25.—E. H. Harriman, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation, said Friday that there is no foundation for the report that the plant of the Illinois Steel company is to be removed from South Chicago to Gary, Ind., or that the South Chicago plant is to be abandoned.

Ex-Judge Hargis Acquitted.

Lexington, Ky., May 24.—Almost exactly three years after the shooting of Town Marshal Thomas Cockrill at Jackson a verdict of not guilty was returned here Thursday in the case of ex-Judge James Hargis, the first of those who were jointly charged with that murder, and another chapter in the famous Breathitt county feud annals was concluded.

MRS. M'KINLEY PASSES AWAY

WIDOW OF MARTYRED PRESIDENT SINKS PEACFFULLY INTO ETERNAL SLEEP.

Her Beautiful Life—Though an Invalid for Thirty Years She Was a Constant Help and Inspiration to Her Husband.

Canton, Ohio, May 27.—Mrs. William McKinley died at 1:35 o'clock Monday afternoon. The transition from life to death was so peaceful and gradual that it was with difficulty that the attending doctors noted when dissolution came.

There was no struggle, no pain. Mrs. McKinley never knew of the efforts made for days to prolong her life, nor of the solicitous hopes and fears of her sister and other relatives for her recovery.

At the McKinley home when death came there were present Secretary Cortelyon, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Barber, Mrs. Sarah Duncan, Mrs. Luther Day, Justice and Mrs. William R. Day, Doctors Portmann and Rixey and the nurses.

"Mrs. McKinley lived hours longer than we expected," said the secretary.

"Her vitality was wonderful," said Dr. Portmann.

In National Mausoleum.

The body of Mrs. McKinley will be placed in the vault in West Lawn cemetery which holds the body of her husband, until the completion of the national mausoleum on Monument hill, when both caskets will be transferred to receptacles in that tomb.

From numerous friends of the deceased Mrs. Barber this evening received telegrams of condolence on the death of Mrs. McKinley. Among them were telegrams from Presidents Roosevelt and Vice President Fairbanks.

Ill Many Years.

Mrs. McKinley's life of almost sixty years had been made familiar to the nation by the fact that for over thirty years she was an invalid. Through all this she showed an unwavering faith in the power of her husband and constantly encouraged and helped him. She believed that his star of destiny would never set until he had become president and for more than a quarter of a century cherished that belief.

After President McKinley's death, she expressed a desire to join him and prayed day by day that she might die. Later, however, she frequently told friends that she desired to live until the completion of the McKinley mausoleum, which is the gift of the nation, and which is to be dedicated on Monument Hill Sept. 30 next.

Her Life.

Ida Saxton McKinley was born in Canton June 8, 1847. James A. Saxton, her father, was a progressive banker and his wife a woman of extraordinary culture. Ida Saxton was reared in a home of comfort and ease. After attending the Canton schools she was a pupil at a private school at Delhi, New York. Later she went to a Cleveland academy and finished her education at Brook Hall seminary, Media, Pa., where she spent three years. Part of the years of her young womanhood were spent in the Stark County bank which belonged to her father. On several occasions she had charge of the institution.

On Jan. 25, 1871, William McKinley and Ida Saxton were united in marriage. After an Eastern trip, the McKinleys purchased the home on North Market street, which in later years became famous as the McKinley cottage.

It was during the short sojourn in this home that Mrs. McKinley's health broke down under the burden of grief. There were born to them two daughters, Kate, on Christmas day, 1871, and Ida, on April 1, 1873. But the mother's heart was broken when Ida passed away in August, 1873. Mrs. McKinley's mother having died the week before the child was born. Kate, the first born, lived for three and one-half years. Then in Chelsea, Mass., says: "I was sick for a year that almost heart-broken wife became an invalid.

A Devoted Wife.

Her life as the wife of William McKinley was a most happy and devoted one. They never "kept house" while in congress, because of her invalid state. She, however, desired to be with him as much as possible and spent much time in Washington. On his tours when he was congressman, governor and president she traveled with him as much as practicable.

After the crushing blow which came to her when the assassin's bullet struck down her husband, friends despaired of her life for a month or more. However she rallied and for several years enjoyed better health than usual. She would not consent to leave her Canton home.

During the five years of the incumbency of Mr. McKinley in the White House, Mrs. McKinley was in very poor health and did not take a very active part in the social life of the capital. On important state occasions she would take her place in receiving line, but on other occasions the president's niece.

President at Funeral.

Washington, May 27.—President Roosevelt learned of Mrs. McKinley's death shortly after 2 o'clock. He immediately announced that he will leave for Canton Tuesday night to attend the funeral which will take place Wednesday.

Nothing I Ate Agreed With Me.

MRS. LENORA BODENHAMER

Mrs. Leonora Bodenhamer, R. F. D. 1, Box 99, Kernersville, N. C., writes:

"I suffered with stomach trouble and indigestion for some time, and nothing that I ate agreed with me. I was very nervous and experienced a continual feeling of unrest and fear. I took medicine from the doctor, but it did me no good.

"I found in one of your Peruna books a description of my symptoms. Then I wrote to Dr. Hartman for advice. He said I had catarrh of the stomach. I took Peruna and Manalin and followed his directions and can now say that I feel as well as I ever did.

"I hope that all who are afflicted with the same symptoms will take Peruna, as it has certainly cured me."

The above is only one of hundreds who have written similar letters to Dr. Hartman. Just one such case as this entitles Peruna to the candid consideration of every one similarly afflicted. If this be true of the testimony of one person what ought to be the testimony of hundreds, yea thousands, of honest, sincere people. We have in our files a great many other testimonials.

"Whiskers."

"Whiskere" was a word formerly used to designate the hair on the upper lip. Scott more than once speaks of "whiskers on the upper lip" and so does Defoe in "Robinson Crusoe." Johnson defined a "whisker" as the hair growing on the upper lip or cheek when it has become of a length to be whiskers; a mustachio." It seems to have taken its name from a fancied resemblance to a small brush, to "whisk" properly meaning to sweep, and a "whisker" having been a particular kind of feather brush—also, in the slang of a former time, a switch or cat. In the seventeenth century a "whisker" signified among other things a brazen lie, a "whopper."

A Benefactor.

"Why don't you do something for the unfortunate and art?" "Have done something for them," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "My corporations have helped scores of writers and illustrators more than anything else that ever happened."

Supplied.

"Don't you want to get a talking machine for your phonograph?" "Thanks; I have a wife at home now."—N. Y. Herald.

PALE, WEAK PEOPLE

MADE STRONG AND ENERGETIC BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

General Breakdown Caused by Deficient Blood Supply Corrected by This Tonic Remedy.

A feeling of general weakness, poor appetite, loss of breath after the slightest exercise and broken sleep are some of the symptoms of general debility. You may think that these are a contradiction to each other and that you will worry along, hoping all the time to feel better soon. But this is a mistake, for every one of the symptoms is caused by bad blood, which will grow more pale and weak before health will be restored again. A tonic treatment is necessary and for this purpose Pink Pills are a better remedy than Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Mr. J. G. Harvey, of 95 Willow St., Chelsea, Mass., says: "I was sick for a number of years from general debility and indigestion. I was never free from stomach trouble and my nerves were so shattered that the least exertion benefitted me for any serious work. My health completely exhausted me and terrible pains in the small of my back. Those pains would sometimes last for a month or two. My sight grew weak; there seeming to be a blur constantly before my eyes. I had to consult a doctor and plan on my work, and the attempt to do so completely exhausted me.

"I was finally forced to give up a position I had held for two years and more. After trying several medicines without help, I read of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and got them at once. They made me feel so much better and so much stronger that I started in business with a grocery here in Chelsea. I have kept well here in Chelsea. I have never had a return of former sickness and cheerfully recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as an excellent nerve and blood tonic."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have long been recognized as an excellent tonic remedy in cases of indigestion and general debility, where the stomach and other organs of the body are weakened and disordered simply through lack of vitalizing elements. They have also been especially successful in curing anaemia, rheumatism, after-effects of the grip and fevers.

A pamphlet on "Diseases of the Blood" and a copy of our diet book will be sent free on request to anyone interested.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

State Fair Attractions.

Hamlino.—Dan Patch, the king of pacers; Sweet Marie, the queen of trotters, and an airship that will astonish the natives are some of the attractions assured for the state fair this fall. A new feature of the Dan Patch exhibition will be a moving picture machine carried in an automobile in front of the horse. If Dan keeps up his past record of breaking his previous record on the local track those who fail to see this exhibition will be given an opportunity later of seeing the wonderful horse make his mile on the canvas.

The race program for this fall will be the best in the history of the state. A new feature this year will be the Northwestern futurity with a guaranteed stake of $5,000, of which $3,000 will be for three-year-old trotters and $2,000 for three-year-old pacers. The futurity will be open for foals of 1907 to race as three-year-old in 1910, that are foaled, owned, raised and trained in Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, North or South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Nebraska, Wyoming, Oregon and Washington, Manitoba and the Canadian provinces west of Manitoba.

Arrangements also have been made for the appearance of a noted French aeronaut who will give exhibitions with his airship.

Insurance Figures.

Minneapolis.—A total of nearly $9,000,000 was spent by Minnesota residents for life insurance during 1906, according to the preliminary life report of the insurance department.

The report shows that during the year the level premium or old line companies wrote 36,842 policies aggregating $27,371,455. The number of policies in force at the end of the year were 171,269, with an aggregate value of $159,187,840. The losses incurred in the state were $1,828,709 and the premiums received amounted to $7,292,656.

The report shows that during the year the net mortality was only 77 per cent of the expected mortality.

For these same companies a "normal expense portion of premiums" is given as $129,017,751 and actual expenses paid $109,785,300. These figures are for business in all the states of companies doing business in this state.

The report on the assessment life and accident associations shows 19,424 policies written in the state during the year, aggregating $8,130,300, and 20,983 in force at the end of the year aggregating $1,136,300, and policies in force at the end of the year aggregating $10,493,378. These companies received in premiums $45,189 and paid losses amounting to $61,987.

P. O. Burglary.

Mendota.—The vault and the safe doors of the postoffice were shattered with nitroglycerin by burglars at 4 o'clock in the morning and $750 in cash and stamps were stolen.

The postoffice forms part of the general store of E. Bernier & Sons. The safe blower got into the building through a rear window. The safe in which the money was deposited is inclosed in a large vault capable of use for the purpose of securing the funds of Uncle Sam. The thieves lined the door of the vault with nitroglycerin and blew it off the door. They nvidently thought the plunder was within, but they were confronted with a safe inside the vault. This also was charged and blown open.

Mr. Bernier says that the total amount taken was about $750 to $780. He says that about $80 in money and stamps belong to the government.

Murder at Tenstrike.

Tenstrike.—What later may prove to have been a cold-blooded murder has been unearthed at Tenstrike in the finding of the body of Gilbert Johnson, son of Gull Lake.

Early in February John Johnson and Peter Matilhson hired out to William Fellows to cut timber and they established their camp near the lake. The men were busily engaged for five or six weeks cutting logs on the Fellows claim, two miles from town.

At the time of the disappearance of Johnson, Matilhson ate breakfast, but two weeks later he returned for his clothes and money. He said that he had been sick in the hospital; that he and his partner were going to locate in the West, and that his partner had gone. Matilhson has not been seen in this vicinity since.

NEWS NOTES.

Lewiston.—Ora Gibbs, thirty-eight years old, committed suicide by hanging himself in a shed on his farm. Coroner Steinbach found the deed to be due to mental derangement.

Mankato.—Christian Larson of North Mankato has failed in two lawsuits to recover an acre and a half of land that ought to be his, but which Damo Nature has appropriated through the waywardness of her agent, the Minnesota river.

Luverne.—At a meeting of the board of education a resolution was adopted suspending for the balance of the school year, eleven of the high school boys who are charged with "having pushed Supt. Hayward's anatomy in the process of initiating that gentleman into the Society of Red Owls."

Plenty of Fish Eggs.

St. Paul.—The Minnesota game and fish commission has this spring stocked the waters of any game and fish department in the United States for the number of pike eggs collected in any one season, and expects to be able a little later to claim the nation's record for the largest number of pike fry ever raised in any one state during a season.

Samuel F. Fullerton, superintendent of fisheries, says the work of collecting pike eggs is now over; that the pike eggs collected at a conservative estimate number 280,000,000, and that estimating that only half of these will hatch, the game and fish commission will later have 140,150,000 pike fry for free distribution for restocking waters thruout the state.

Hanged Himself

Thief River Falls.—J. H. Werntlein, a cattle buyer of this city, hanged himself in his barn. He is believed to have been mentally deranged. He came into the house late in the afternoon, washed himself, and, putting on his coat and hat, stepped out of the door, as his wife supposed, to go down town. This was the last seen of him alive. After the family had finished supper the wife sent one of the sons to look for his father. Going to the barn the son discovered his father's body hanging from a rafter in the hayloft. Werntlein was forty-seven years old and is survived by a widow and seven children, the youngest of whom is a baby of ten months.

Accidentally Shot.

Keillhor.—While out hunting in the woods near here, John A. Aamodt sat down on a log to read a letter. He rested his gun muzzle on the log, the muzzle pointing toward his stomach. While absorbed in the contents of the letter Aamodt came in contact with the trigger of the gun and it was discharged, the load of heavy shot tearing a gaping wound in the body. A passerby heard the report of the gun, came over and found him writhing in agony on the ground. He died before assistance could be reached.

Killed by Steam Shovel.

Moorhead.—Sivert Siverson, twenty-eight years old, was killed by a steam shovel on the line which was running near Muskoda. The accident happened about midnight and owing to the darkness is not exactly known how it occurred In some manner the man was caught between the big scoop of the shovel and the end of the machinery and as the scoop rose he was caught and crushed to death.

Homesteader Missing.

Spooner.—Henry Hunke, a young settler, formerly of Duluth, who has been living on his claim on the Rapid river near the Clementson postoffice, has disappeared. His brother, William Hunke, who was his neighbor, believes that the missing man was murdered. Henry Hunke has been a sufferer from tuberculosis and two years ago came to this part of the state from Duluth to take the outdoor cure.

Silver Fox Trapped.

Fosston.—The first silver fox trapped in Minnesota for many years was captured recently on the Red Lake reservation. The skin has been sent to Knute Rose of this place, who will dispose of it. The skin is of good size and quality and at the current rate of quotations probably will bring $200.

NEWS NOTES.

Minneapolis.—Bandits scarcely 16 years old and well versed in the art of robbery from reading dime novels, held up Charles Haugen in an alley back of the Tribune building, robbing him of $5, his entire cash supply.

Duluth.—At a distance of two and a half miles southeast of Hibbing, A. B. Coates of Virginia and A. M. Miller, Jr., of Duluth have shown up what is described as the largest bonanza ore body that has been found in several years on the Mesaba range. The deposit is estimated at 500,000 tons.

Red Lake Indian Agency.—John Morrison, Jr., has tendered his resignation as superintendent of the Cross Lake Indian school, which was established three years ago. Mr. Morrison leaves the service to engage in private business. His successor is Mr. Davis, an employe in the Indian service.

Rochester.—The dead body of an infant was found floating near a dam in the Zumbro river in North Rochester by two boys who were fishing. The body evidently had been in the water for several months, as it was in an advanced state of decomposition. No clue has been found as to the identity of the baby.

Belle Plaine.—The little neighbor girl who sang to him as his life was ebbing away, and who devoted the rest of her time to making him comfortable in his last days, James O. White has willed his entire estate, amounting to $10,000, to the beneficiary, and the estate is valued at upwards of $10,000.

Washington.—A certificate to begin business with a capital of $25,000 was issued to the First National Bank of Brandon.

Slayton.—By a vote of 109 to 18 Slayton voted $10,000 to build an addition to its schoolhouse.

Do Not Ask Disarmament.

Lake Mohonk, N. Y., May 24.—The recommendations, which the Lake Mohonk conference on international arbitration will send to the international peace conference soon to convene at The Hague, will contain no word on the subject of disarmament or limitation of armaments. The principal recommendations are a general arbitration treaty for the settlement of international disputes, and the establishment of the principle of the inviolability of innocent private property at sea in time of war.

Refuse to Negotiate with Man.

Hamburg, May 24.—The Shipowners' association has declined to negotiate with the German Seamen's union, the members of which went on strike for more pay and better treatment, unless the man return to work.

"SPARTA OF JAPAN"

GEN. KUROKI, MILITARY GENIUS OF MIKADO'S COUNTRY.

Something of Representative of Island Empire Who is Now Visiting This Country—Descendant of Polish Noblemen.

New York.—In was in 1864 that a prince of Japan whose name history does not reveal, visited Japan as a guest of the nation. A graduate of the military schools of Europe, the visitor was reputed to be one of the leading princes of his time in skill as a military strategist and tactician. There was detailed as his escort a quiet-spoken staff officer of the mikado's army, a man with the testimony of a Grant and the face of a Sheridan. As he was completing his visit the prince turned to his escort and said:

"I thought I had learned all that there was to know of tactics and strategy, but you have shown me that there was much more knowledge to be obtained on military matters than can be had in the schools of Europe. Taking your schooling from us you have greatly improved on everything that we taught."

The staff officer to whom the prince paid his high compliment was Gen. Itei Kuroki, the now celebrated warrior who commanded the first army corps in the war with Russia, and who rendered such conspicuous service at the Polish Memorial Opera referred to him as his "strong right arm." Gen. Kuroki is now in this country on a mission to the Jamestown exposition.

Born 62 years ago in Satsuma, the "Sparta of Japan," Kuroki at an early age entered the military service of the mikado, and rose grade by grade from the lower ranks, attaining in 1894 the rank of lieutenant general. That was the year of Japan's war with China, and in that conflict Kuroki commanded the Sixth division of the invading army. It is related that his division had been scheduled to be the last one to be landed for the main invasion of Chike, and that Kuroki chafed so much over the inaction that he fretted himself into a state of illness. But immediately the troops were landed and the smoke of battle began to roll from the front all of Kuroki's illness vanished and he joyously exclaimed: "Ah, this makes me well again."

From the very beginning of the war with Russia, Kuroki hated the world's attention by the display of his military skill. Then he set to work to people began to inquire more closely about this warrior whose military genius seemed so resplendent. Efforts were made to trace his origin, and although the inquirers found little assistance from the silent soldier, it was finaly ascertained that he was of Polish origin. A nephew of the general, who was also pursuing his studies in Europe, wrote a letter in which he said that Kuroki's father was a polish nobleman who had fled from Russia after the revolution of 1831. His nobleman, whose name was Kourowski, first went to Paris, afterward to Turkey, later joining the Holland troops in Borneo. From Borneo he went to Japan and there married a Japanese. From the union was born Kuroki, who, because of the nobleness of his father, was nicknamed "The Pole."

It is said that the general is very proud of his Polish origin, and that he has always cherished the dying wish of his father that his son would some day be able to take vengeance on the nations for their cruel treatment of unhappy Poland.

GEN. KUROKI,
(Japan's "Pole" Who is Now Visiting This Country.)

Kuroki's genius for war was never more conspicuous than in the great turning movement at Liao-yang. When Kuropatkin threw the whole weight of his army upon the angle held by Kuroki, he should, according to all military precedent, have destroyed his foe. But Kuroki not only held the enemy at bay, but held them long enough for a supporting column to turn their flank.

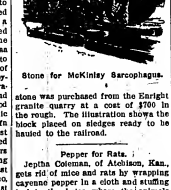
Kuroki's part in the last great battle, that of Mukden, was that of a fierce and vigorous attack upon the very strong position that was held by the Russian center, and with any hope of carrying it, but in order to force Kuropatkin to carry out the movement which ultimately led to his destruction.

MINERS' OFFICIAL ON TRIAL.

William D. Haywood Charged With Conspiracy to Commit Murder.

Boise, Idaho.—William D. Haywood, who has been placed on trial in this city for the alleged murder of former

WILLIAM D. HAYWOOD.
(On Trial for Complicity in Steunenberg Murder.)



Governor Steunenberg of Idaho, was secretary-treasurer of the Western Federation of Miners, and was in Denver, Col., at the time (December 30, 1905,) that Steunenberg was blown to pieces by a bomb that had been placed at the gate of his home in Caldwell, a suburb of Boise. Haywood is reputed to have been the virtual head of the miners' organization. That he was instrumental in the assassination seems to be indisputable; and the enemies of Haywood declare that Charles H. Moyer, president of the Western Federation of Miners, was but a figurehead in the conduct of affairs. Haywood has long been known as an energetic official and a man of radical views. In recent years he has been a Socialist in politics, and in 1904 openly avowed that the Western Federation of Miners stood for Socialism and was working for the triumph of that doctrine. Lemmitzman, though a prisoner in Idaho, he was the nominee of the Socialist party for governor of Colorado.

Frank Steunenberg was a remarkable man, mentally and physically—a big man, strong in his convictions and courage. He stood seven feet in his stockings and was built in proportion. Born in Iowa in 1861, he spent his boyhood in that state, and in 1887 he went to Idaho, then a territory, where with his brother he started a newspaper. He took to politics naturally, and was chosen a member of the convention that framed the Idaho state constitution. He was next elected to the legislature, and speedily became so popular that he was boomed for governor. To this office Steunenberg was twice elected, his last term expiring in 1901. Until December, 1899, he had never been cast of the Mississippi. He was a defender of Mormonism on the principle that it had as much right to religious as any other religious denomination, and he was also an advocate of woman suffrage. Steunenberg frequently used to say that he was certain he was a marked man.

TO HOLD M'KINLEY'S BODY.

Stone from Which Sarcophagus Will Be Carved.

Boston.—The body of William McKinley will rest in a green granite sarcophagus in the tomb at Canton, O., that of his wife beside it in a similar stone receptacle. The accompanying picture shows the stone from which the sarcophagus for the martyred president's body is to be made, as it appeared when hoisted recently from the quarry in Windsor, Vt. The stone is nine by five feet and weighs 17 tons. A cap weighing one ton is to be made from a smaller block. The stone was purchased from the Enright granite quarry at a cost of $700 in the rough. The illustration shows the block placed on sledges ready to be hauled to the railroad.

Pepper for Rats.

Jeptha Coleman, of Atchison, Kan., gets rid of mice and rats by wrapping cayenne pepper in a cloth and stuffing it into the holes where the animals pass in and out. They gnaw at the rags, and the first thing they know they have a dose of the pepper that makes them wish they had not been so industrious. Mr. Coleman does not know whether they sneeze themselves to pieces or simply hike to the neighborn. Anyhow, thy disappear.

No matter what the poetry books say about One Love, it is a fact that it is easier to transfer a heart than it is to transfer a piece of real estate.

BEAUTY HINTS FOR THE GIRLS.

Above all, girls, if you would be beautiful, make it a point to always wear a smile on the face, wear it wherever you can. No matter if your feet are wet and your shoes squash water every time you take a step, smile anyway. Remember the old saying, "Smiles are worth more than face powder."

The complexion should be thoroughly carried before it attains a height. A good plan is to take a mixture of oat meal and mucilego and plaster it on the face. When you remove it in the morning a nice, rosy, healthful complexion will be the result.

With the coming of summer freckles may be looked for as usual. These may easily be avoided by wearing a baseball mask when you go out of doors.

Some people find hinckheads very annoying. The best way to remove them is to pry them out with a hat pin or sharp file.

There is nothing so fatal to facial beauty as a bad carriage. See that your conchman keeps it in good condition.

The eyebrows may be made heavier and derker by shoveling coal three hours every day in the backyard.

Keep the nails clean and well polished. A little stove polish and a brush will do it nicely. Remember the words of a celebrated French beauty: "Well kept nails is a source of great gratification."

Keep the hands soft and white. If the knuckles are too prominent run them through a clothes wringer twice a day for a few weeks. This will also make the hands longer and more graceful.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

His First Operation.

The visitor found little Bessie crying as though her heart would break.

"What is the trouble, little girl?" asked the visitor, sympathetically.

"Boo-hoo!" sobbed Bessie. "Bobby wants to be a surgeon when he gets big."

"And does that worry you, my dear?"

"Yes; he has cut all the sawdust out of my dolly to see if sho has appendicitis."

Too Rare.

Guest—Can you tell me what thet chap with the long hair is doing over there?

Proprietor—Is musicnir deaf? Znt is one great musicinn imported from Europe.

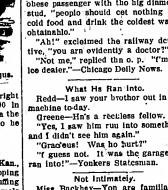
Guest—Is, eh? Well, he is like this beef you just served me.

Proprietor—How is zat, monsieur?

Guest—Why, he is raw and needs plenty, of roasting.—Chicago Daily News.

Revenge.

"That young student upstairs must have a tremendous correspondence, postman; you always have letters for him."



"Yes, I quarreled with him once, and ever since he sends himself a postcard every day, so I have to mount five flights of stairs to deliver it."

A Hard Language to Understand.

Bacon—I see that Jeremiah Curtin, a prominent philologist in Boston, has said to be the master of seventy languages.

Egbert—And yet he might go to London and ask a bus-man a question and have to give it up after the busman had repeated his answer a dozen times.—Yonkers Statesman.

A HINT FROM CUPID.

Give a girl a good dinner and meko love to her afterwards—much better than before.

Campaign of Education.

"In the summer," remarked the obese passenger with the big diamond stud, "people should eat nothing but cold food and drink the coldest water obtainable."

"Ah!" exclaimed the railway detective, "you are evidently a doctor?"

"Not at all," replied the o. p. "I'm an ice dealer."—Chicago Daily News.

What He Ran Into.

Redd—I saw your brother out in his machine to-day.

Greene—He's a reckless fellow.

"Yes, I saw him run into something and I didn't see him again."

"Graceful! spilled on it, hey?"

"I guess not. It was the garage he ran into!"—Yonkers Statesman.

Not Intimately.

Miss Backbay—You are familiar, I presume, with "Sartor Resartus?"

Mr. Carondelpt—Er—only slightly. In our part of the country we don't take much stock in that. They say he sneaks out of paying his election bets. —Chicago Tribune.

Getting a Rest.

Bacon—Do you enjoy walking?

Egbert—Oh, immensely! You see, I can't get my wife to walk at all, and when I'm walking I'm where I can't hear her talking!—Yonkers Statesman.

Pretty Bad Roads.

A man came up from Kratka the other day and told the following story which seems to be to good not to go in print.

There was a stranger stoped and inquired the road to Thief River Falls, and a man who had just come over the road started to give him directions. Stranger; "How far is it from here to Thief River Falls?

Native; "About 16 or 18 miles depends on which roden you take."

Stranger; "Which road should I take?"

Native; "Ay don't know but which ever one you take you will wish you had taken the other one."

Stranger; "The roads are pretty bad up here."

Native; "Y[illegible]h pretty bad, but when you kome down to Thief River Falls they get worst."

Stranger; "Which is the best road?"

Native; "Ay tink you better go south road but ay don't know. better go all over ay tell you. When you come daw a few miles you come to a little swamp, looks like a creek, don,t go dare, go little farder up, if dare can cross all right, there is an oder swamp little farder on. The First Man Dressmaker.

As far back as 1730 there was in Paris a man dressmaker, probably the first of his kind. His name was Rhomberg, and he was the son of a Bavarian peasant from the neighborhood of Munich. He owed his success to his genius for concealing and remedying defects of figure. He drove a beautiful carriage on the boulevard and had an escutcheon in the shape of a pair of corsets and an open pair of scissors painted on the panel of each door. He left a large fortune to his heirs.

Doctors and Solemnity.

The days are past when every self respecting doctor was expected to dress in a style tastefully blending the divine with the undertaker. But a "sustained and impenetrable solemnity" is still a priceless possession for those who would achieve success in medicine. If this is a natural gift, so much the better; if not, it should be acquired at any cost.—British Medical Journal.

Chotohazree at the Gymkhana.

In "Modern India" the author, William Eleroy Curtis, records his meeting with the word gymkhana and "ventures to say that nobody who has not been in India can guess what that means."

And if you want another conundrum, what is a chotohazree? It is customary for smart people to have their chotohazree at the gymkhana, and I think you would be pleased to join them after taking the beautiful drive which leads to the place. Nobody knows where the word was derived from, but it is used to describe a country club—a bungalow hidden under a beautiful grove on the brow of a cliff that overhangs the bay—with all of the appurtenances, golf links, cricket grounds, racket courts and indoor gymnasium, and everybody stops there on an afternoon drive to have chotohazree, which is the local term for afternoon tea and for early morning coffee.

The Hindoo Strong Man.

The Hindoos tell wonderful stories of the feats of Bhima, who was their strong man. Among the wonders credited to Bhima are the following: Pursued by a tiger, his mother when nursing Bhima let him drop. The force of the impact shattered in a thousand pieces the rock on which he had fallen but the boy was none the worse. When he quarreled with other boys he gathered them up, ten or fifteen at a time, and plumped them into the nearest pond. His cousins hid themselves in a tall banyan to jeer at him, but he tore it from the ground without effort. He snapped his bonds like Samson, and a hungry cobra's fangs could not penetrate his skin. His triumph, however, was the defeat of Bakasura, who [illegible] a [illegible] of food at a [illegible] and [illegible] trees for [illegible]

It's Results That Count

In cooking it's the results that count. So when a housewife starts to make Bread or Rools or Pies, naturally she wants her cooking to have that rich crisp, pleasing odor. But it must also have that whiteness, lightness and wholesomeness which is so essential to good cooking.

Much of this depends upon the flour—and thousands depend upon,

A Case For Sympathy.

"I have three children, who are the very image of myself," said Jones enthusiastically.

"I pity the youngest," returned Brown quietly.

"Why?" asked Jones.

"Because he is the one who will have to resemble you the longest," said Brown.—Tit-Bits.

His Constancy.

A story is told of General Sir Alfred Horsford, who believed in a celibate army. A soldier once sought his permission to marry, saying he had two good conduct badges and $25 in the savings bank. "Well, go away," said Sir Alfred, "and if you come back this day year in the same mind you shall marry. I'll keep the vacancy." On the anniversary the soldier repeated his request. "But do you really, after a year, want to marry?" "Yes, sir, very much." "Sergeant major, take his name down. Yes, you may marry. I never believed there was so much constancy in man or woman. Right face. Quick march!" As the man left the room, turning his head, he said: "Thank you, sir. It isn't the same woman."

"Slinky Bill's" Revenge

By Hugh Pendexter

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Mr. William Bilks silas "Slinky Bill," worthy of countenance and complaint of face, passed at the corner and baked back after the slouching figure of a man in a red sweater. He knew it was "Hunch" Bugan, and yet it puzzled him that "Hunch" should be about. He even forgot for the moment that he ought to be angry with his former pal, when he remembered the scrape up in Monroe county, where "Hunch" turned state's evidence, and only escaped Auburn prison by sending his mates there for long terms. Mr. Bilks had always treasured the remembrance in his mind and had sworn that once free, and when enough to keep away from the banks that are under the protection of the American Bankers' Protective association and policed by the Pinkertons, he would find time to locate "Hunch" and even up the score. But the spectacle of "Hunch" sober and evidently intent on business eliminated all thoughts of vengeance for the moment, and it was soon as the sweater threatened to be lost in turning a corner that Mr. Bilks remembered and quickly dogged the self-foisted rescendo until the chase ended in a tall tenement house.

"Hich! my here, eh?" growled Mr. Bilks, as he passed the building and noted the number. "It's a long time since I done that dip, but 'Hunch' has a long mem'ry fa'nk heavens! An' we-goin' ter settle dat little account afore some leave old New York. Now, what has that bloke under his hat? So-ber! An' in de mornin'? He must have a fat lay, an' I reckon he'll stand fer a pipe."

A casual mingling in Steinbelmer's saloon on the corner brought him the information that "Hunch" had been hiding up in that vicinity for several days and incidentally ordering the strong waters. This settled Slinky Bill's determination, and as he had no immediate job in sight he engaged a room in a nearby lodging house and allowed his beard to grow until he looked like a cross between an anarchist and a hedge fence. In this way he came to learn of all the exits and entrances of his quondam pal, and from several trips in his wake, to a certain section of the Long Island shore, he decided some game was on, whereby a summer home was scheduled to wake up and find the larger portion of his furnishings missing. One day "Hunch" drove out among the back alleys and kitchen approaches on a meat cart, after consoling the driver into an acute state of insensibility, and it needed no second sight to tell Mr. Bilks that the land was being spied out in the old approved style.

Once "Hunch's" hunting grounds had been located Slinky Bill was content to remain unseen but where he could observe his enemy's movements and goings, knowing instinctively the hour of the killing had not yet arrived. The long, spring-sight visits reminded Slinky of his youth and his trust in "Hunch;" of the time when he thought it the keenest thing to hunt in pairs and have abiding trust in his mate. The belief of those days had been destroyed by the non-set of the crime, one up in Monroe county, and now Slinky followed the moonlit trails alone, with no one to call on that was a sharer of the loot, with none to play him double. If the memories saddened the old cracksman it in no way weakened his purpose to have an account with his false comrade. If anything, it intensified his desire to settle, he had grace to regret that the honorable calling in which he was numbered a light should be disrupted by private hate. He appreciated that "Hunch" was playing an eminently legitimate game in warring upon organized society, yet those four years in Auburn prison could not be cried down to the good of the order.

So he watched, and one night he knew "Hunch" was to make his strike. No sooner had the prattler left his hiding place and made for Long Island than Slinky Bill was at his heels, winning his sobriquet anew by the silent manner in which he kept pace and dogged his quarry.

First "Hunch" entered a summer house, occupied by a few domestics, and after rambling over the structure at his leisure, reappeared, carrying something in a small canvas bag that occasionally gave forth a mellow clink. Then another house was entered and the same fruitful exit was observed by the lone watcher.

"Per de love of—day," he bore, but yonse certainly makin' a real clean up dis time," muttered Slinky Bill under his breath, forced to admire the remarkable way in which "Hunch" was covering the circuit.

At last even "Hunch" grew weary of well doing and paused undecided whether to take in the big house with the gable roof, or to go home, after thinking it over under a shade tree for some minutes he evidently compromised with himself by stealing away to a less pretentious section of the town and halting back of a neat frame house.

"Why, say," gasped Slinky, "dis is jest cigarette an' beer money. He can't be down as low as ter tap dat humble joint."

But "Hunch" evidently possessed the bread philosophy of not stealing until fish as good for something, for after a quick survey of the moonlit premises he sneaked to the kitchen window and was soon inside the house. Mr. Bilks felt a wave of righteous indignation sweep over him as he swung his gum shoes over the sill and carefully kept a few paces behind the commercialized burglar. There was more risk in a small home like this, he well knew, than in one of those big barn-like places he had already entered; but as far as any commotion was concerned the two crooks might have been moonbeams, or falling leaves, so easily did they move from room to room. Then "Hunch" deftly weighed the silverware in the dining room, and would have grunted in disgust if he had been an amateur, for the stuff was all plated. He had not need to turn on his lantern to ascertain this. But as he was preparing to softly retrace his small eyes caught a glimpse of a toy bank, the property of some youngster, and rather than leave entirely without compensation he gingerly turned a handful of pennies and silver into his great coat pocket.

"Per de love of—Why, say, dat four flush is breakin' do kiddy's bank," moaned Slinky Bill, overcome to find even an enemy in his profession playing so low and onery a game.

Then as the hunted one turned to drift as silently as a shadow to the window Mr. Bilks anticipated him, and as the robber of tots reached the ground he was met with a stunning blow from a chunk of lead, fastened to a strip of leather.

"If yonse had been a true blue ter de callin' youse would have got off wid jest a touch fer de stuff. But I can't stand ter see a man sneak t'ings on a baby," commented Mr. Bilks, standing over the prostrate form and listening to learn if any alarm had been given.

All was as still within as the blackness of the garden wall, and after removing the bulky canvas bags from his old betrayer's pockets Mr. Bilks again entered the kitchen window and made for the dining room. There producing his lantern, he carefully counted the pennies and nickels, abstracted so short a time ago from the little bank, and silently replaced them piece by piece.

"Jest a dollar an' forty-tree cents," he growled. "An' ter t'ink dat one of us would sink his manhood, as de misdoubt say says, for dat!"

Then he fumbled in his pockets and at last produced three shining silver dollars. How de warden frisked it from some poor devil afore deatin' it out ter me, but so far as I'se concerned it's dead honest an' I reckon de bank needs it more'n I does." And the broad face went to join their humble brethren.

With this charitable errand done, Mr. Bilks noiselessly retraced his soft steps and emerged in the moonlight just as "Hunch" began to show signs of returning to reason. "Come along," he growled, catching the prostrate form by the collar and dragging him out to the road. "Come along, yonse baby's bigger. It goes again de grain ter leave youse where de cops can pinch yonse. But when yonse wakes up an' misses dat bit of stuff from de big bug's house I hopes yonse will swear off dis Christmas tree work an' reform. Gawd knows when a big live man sinks ter dis dat room fer a reform is open."

And as the moon watched Mr. Bilks wend his carefree way homeward to wet the big city, laboriously carrying several bags of clinking stuff, the five-year-old in the home of the ribbon-counter clerk dreamed on of saving up pennies until he could buy a pony.

Hids Warship Designs.

That strict secrecy which was observed in the construction at Fairfield, Glasgow, of the cruiser Indomitable will henceforth be enforced in the case of all ships built for the British navy. The staff will be sworn before being intrusted with the carrying out of minute details and no one in the yard will be able to learn anything like complete details of warship designs.

New Models in Costumes of Coat and Skirt Order

The new models in street and other outdoor costumes of the coat and skirt order are especially attractive, and among the newest ones some distinct novelties are shown. The coat of both the cloth and linen suits is generally of the plain tailored order, although for dress occasions some charming trimmed suits are shown.

A new skirt which has been brought out recently by several leading tailors is the side or box-plaited model, with crosswise tucks running around the lower part. One especially favored style shows three crosswise tucks, each two inches in width, the lower tuck being about four inches from the bottom, the second about six inches above, with the same distance between it and the third tuck. This style is varied by having small tucks in groups at the head of each large tuck, the model being especially good in thin wool and voile materials.

Most of the linen and cloth coats are made plain and semifitting and are cut from six to 12 inches below the waistline.

The first design shown in the cut illustrates such a suit, this model being in brown and white check linen. The fronts of the coat were cut on the bias and the center gore of the wide circular gored skirt was also cut bias.

The second figure shows a more elaborate suit. This model was in voile over silk, but the same design is practical for linen materials. Braid was used for the ornaments down the front, and inset pieces, braided, were set into the coat and skirt, as pictured.

STYLES FOR THE HAIR

High Dressing Still the Favorite Vogue—Tortoiseshell Pins and Combs Used Very Frequently.

A high dressing is still accounted the essence of smartness, and the favorite disposal of the moment takes the form of curls and loosely disposed coils with soft tendrils about the forehead, while a parting is usually indicated, a little to the left side of front. Large ondules are the order of the day, and the pompadour is also very much in considerably over the brow, while the back is taken up with a sharp sweep, and the sides rolled back in graceful and becoming fashion.

The bagone is faithful to her top dressing, but in lieu of that atrocious all-round pompadour, held in subjection by three combs, the hair is parted in the center, or a little to the left, and puffed out and rolled back at the sides, when a pair of fancy combs come into prominent requisition. The remainder of the hair is then twisted into a figure-of-eight coil low down in the nape of the neck. The inevitable fine hair net keeping all in order, sided by two large, round-headed pins; or some girls dispense with these, and elect to don a large black silk bow placed at the top of the coil.

Tortoiseshell pins and combs form invaluable adjuncts to the modern coiffure. In fact, it is quite unusual to see a head unadorned with these useful and ornamental details. Frequently for evening wear, these are surmounted by sprays of sequin leaves, birds and wings, while flowers and maidenhair fern are still permitted a place, though tinsel fancies strike the more advanced note.

A Little Hat Hint.

The hats being worn at present are simply chefs d'oeuvres. Independence, imagination, and art reign supreme, both in the choice of colors and the evocation of styles. What a lot of exquisite models! The hat to-day has a little conquering air. But what plays a very important role, though in a discreet one is the barrette. It has the appearance of being of no importance, this little bit of velvet or tulle, lined with buckram. Well, it is often on this simple accessory that the whole style of a hat depends. The barrette is the base, on which the hat is placed; on it depends, in a great degree, whether it will look well or not.

To Keep Dresses Fresh.

One of the nicest ways of keeping dresses, especially evening ones, fresh is to sew throughout the lining (neck which is rather hard to obtain bit of silk does for this purpose. Make the sachet about one inch square. Put in a layer of soft white wadding, into which has been sprinkled some sachet powder, sew up and tack firmly to various places in skirt and bodice. This gives the delicate elusive fragrance to your frock which is rather hard to obtain when liquid perfume is used. It also has the additional benefit of keeping destructive moths at bay, which are so fond of

CHOOSING THE HAT

Rules Women Should Observe When Buying Their Headgear—Individual Characteristics to Study.

If a woman has a thin face and is inclined to be sharp featured let her beware of hats that go up off her face.

This kind of hat only tends to outline her defects and she should choose a hat that is brought well forward.

Her hair, too, should be loosely arranged and never drawn back in a plain fashion. Sharp or smart hats should be almost avoided and fancy edges adopted.

If one has features that look good at a casual glance but will not bear inspection a hat should be selected that is not with many corners and angles will be her most becoming design.

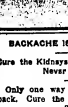
This tends to mystify and one finds herself unwilling to investigate—the effect is too good to unbalance.

A well-cut face should dwell warily with the picture hat. It is very liable to have its saving graces drowned in the depths of the enormity and should never be attempted by anyone who has not the height sufficient to carry it off. A well-formed face can show off most any model and it is with this sort of face in view that most designs are created.

OF DOTTED FOULARD.

Pretty blouse of lime foulard with white spots. It is shirred at the top and bottom and over the shoulders are ruffles of the material, headed by tiny ruffles of plain silk to match, which are fagoted to the blouse.

The collar and cuffs are of guipure, edged with the plain silk and finished at the points with tassels. The knot and girdle are also of plain taffeta.



Frock Trimmings.

Tulle combined with lace is popular for the yoke and sleeves of the silk voile gown. Liberty satin, also trims these frocks; a favorite method is to have a broad band of it around the bottom of the skirt.

SAHARA GROWING DRYER.

French Observer Says the Oases Are Shrinking and Will Disappear.

C. F. Gautier, a French explorer, is authority for the statement that the Sahara is continuously becoming drier to such an extent that the oases are perceptibly drying up and will disappear altogether in a relatively short time. He quotes historic records and physical signs to show that springs were at one time more plentiful than now, and that the extent of the patches where vegetation flourishes were much greater even 50 to 100 years ago.

As the climate of the region has undergone no change in perhaps thousands of years, he believes that the disappearance of the water must be due to purely mechanical causes. He considers that it is due to the continual advance of the great sand masses to the north, thus forming an impenetrable barrier against the watershed of the Atlas mountains.—N. Y. Sun.

BABY ITCHED TERRIBLY.

Face and Neck Covered with Inflamed Skin—Doctors No Avail—Cured by Cuticura Remedies.

"My baby's face and neck were covered with itching skin eruptions of a pustular nature, and she suffered terribly for over a year. I took her to a number of doctors, and also to different colleges, to no avail. Then Cuticura Remedies were recommended to me by Miss G—. I did not use them at first, as I had tried so many other remedies without any favorable results. At last I tried Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Resolvent Pills, and to my surprise noticed an improvement. After using three boxes of the Cuticura Ointment, together with the Soap and Pills, I am pleased to say she is altogether a different child and the picture of health. Mrs. A. C. Breslin, 171 N. Lincoln St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 20 and 30, 1906."

Ghosts of Dead Lakes.

In the great basin between the Rockies and the Sierra Nevadas lie the ghosts of many dead lakes. Rivers still flow down to the coast, but these one-time great reservoirs and are licked up by evaporation and the sunbeats back. Of all the lakes that once lay there, only Great Salt Lake, Lake Tahoe and Bear Lake are left. Utah's Southern Pacific rolls for 165 miles across the bed of what was once Lake Lahontan, and the passenger gazing idly from the window may see the terraces and wrinkles in the crust of the fossil lake which nature robbed and hoarded of its crystal treasures ages ago.—Exchange.

All Misfortune.

"Pop," said Farmer Kornstop's little boy, "what does it mean when you say 'misfortunes never come singly?'" "Wal," replied Farmer Kornstop, "that's just about the truth. First comes a wet spell that'll spile the tomatoes an' then comes a dry spell that spiles everything else."

A Counter Irritant.

"Have you made arrangements to prevent fraud in the election?" "No," answered Senator Sorghum; "I couldn't quite manage that. But I've done the next best thing to defeat the opposition's iniquity. I've made arrangements that'll make their fraud so insignificant by comparison that it won't be noticed."

THE DAIRY

THE SQUARE SILO.

How It Can Be Built and Made Sufficiently Strong.

The square or octagon silo is not as strong as the round form, but it can be made sufficiently strong to be a successful silo, but all things considered, a round silo is much to be preferred, both for strength of construction and ease of building and repair, says Hoard's Dairyman. If a square silo is desired, our illustration will show the method of building and especially the method of cutting the corners, which must be done to keep the silage from hanging in the corners and so spoiling. The frame is made of 2x6, laid horizontally a foot apart so as to obtain the utmost strength. The lining and outside is put on as in other forms of silo.

Showing Method of Constructing a Square Silo and Method of Cutting the Corners.

CONCERNING THE COWS.

A Series of Don'ts Which the Farmer Should Remember.

Don't be unkind to the milk cow.

Don't use a club but kind words instead.

Don't torment a cow by teasing her young.

Don't allow cows to sleep in a muddy shed.

Don't permit the cow to drink impure water.

Do not feed the milk cow "rotten" or decayed corn.

Don't allow your fingers nails to grow long if you are a daily milker.

Don't allow any loafers around when milking, such as dogs, children or cats.

Don't yell at the cow, and beware of profane language, it leaves a bad impression.

Don't fail to keep some sort of salt handy so the cow may have free access to it.

Don't expect a cow to give as much milk when half fed as when properly cared for.

Don't, when milking, beat the cow for stepping backward when flies are numerous.

Don't allow your cows to be chased by dogs, or be hurried when going to or from pasture.

Don't expect the cows to come from pasture by mere calling them but drive them up slowly.

Don't forget to allow the cow civil treatment and she will return the same in good measure.

Don't milk until dusk during the hot months so as to avoid the presence of the flies which so vigorously attack the cow just before sundown.

DAIRY NOTES.

Do not change the feed suddenly.

Keep the separator clean by washing after each separating.

Stir each of the separate lots of cream every day to keep them uniform.

It takes capital to run any business, but the best capital a creamery can have is plenty of raw material.

Feed the farm by the way of a good cow. Give her the right feed and she will give your land the right fertilizers.

Observe and enforce the utmost cleanliness about the cattle, their attendants, the stable, the dairy and all utensils.

Instead of buying more cows the average farmer could make more money by spending the money on better care of the cows he already possesses.

Buttermakers, don't quarrel with a patron; patrons, don't quarrel with your buttermaker. Children quarrel; business men state their case, and then it is a case of "take it or leave it alone."

Dairying.

Dairying is not a frontier business. It follows after the pioneers and is a more finished type of farming, requiring more skill and knowledge than ordinary crop production.

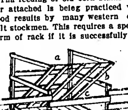
SECRET OF GOOD CREAM.

Suggestions Which if Followed Will Give Good Results.

The following suggestions are given as a guide for the production of cream of good quality:

1. Clean cream, cold cream, and rich cream are the three words which tell the secret of producing sweet cream.
2. Be clean and sanitary in milking.
3. Have all pails, crocks, cans, and dairy utensils scalded and clean.
4. Keep the separator clean by washing after each separating.
5. Cool each lot of cream in cold water before setting it away and have it thoroughly cooled before adding to the general lot of cream. (A good way is never to mix a fresh batch of cream with older cream, but keep each lot from the different separatings, separate and in one-gallon crocks.)
6. Have a well-ventilated cave or cool cellar in which to keep the cream.
7. Stir each of the separate lots of cream every day to keep them uniform.
8. Have a wire screen for each crock so as to "air the cream" and keep out flies and insects.
9. Skim a rich cream—35 to 45 per cent—and it will keep sweet longer.
10. Deliver the cream to the creamery or receiving station three times a week in summer and twice a week in winter.
11. Insist upon the creameryman weighing out the sample of cream for a test instead of measuring in a pipette. The scales are more accurate.
12. Have the cows come fresh in September and October and receive 25 to 30 cents a pound for the butter fat in winter instead of 15 to 20 cents a pound in summer.
13. Make a study of the herd of cows, select the best ones, sell the poor ones, buy or raise more good ones, grow more cowpea and alfalfa hay for winter feeding, and make the cows keep you instead of you keeping the cows.

A BAD PRACTICE.



Don't Let the Milk Remain in the Barn After Milking.

A good many keepers of cows have in the cow stable and behind the cows, pegs on which to hang the milk pails that are too full of milk to prevent their being further used at that milking. A man fills the pail, hangs it on the hook and proceeds to milk another cow. By the time the milking is completed several pails have been hanging on the pegs for 15 minutes to half an hour. In addition the empty pails hung on the same pegs before they were taken for milking purposes and just as readily gathered germs as when they had the milk in them. So far as the milker can see, there is no reason why this practice should not be continued. The pails look clean when they are taken down to be used for milking purposes and the milk in the pails that have been hanging there looks as clean as any other milk. The pails are hung too high to catch any visible dirt. The custom is bad, says the Northwestern Agriculturist, but its badness is hard to prove because the student and the scientist know that the air is full of odors and germs that are constantly settling in the pails to become manifest later in bad flavored butter or quickly souring milk. The milk should be removed from the stable as fast as milked, that the time exposure to bad odors may be as short as possible.

FEEDING CORN AND FODDER.

Special Form of Rack Which Makes the Practice Easy.

The feeding of old corn stalks with ear attached is being practiced with good results by many western corn belt stockmen. This requires a special form of rack if it is successfully followed.

Rack for Feeding Corn.

One such as shown in the sketch is a good one. The corn is put into the rack at a, and the cattle reach over the bar, c, and eat it through the slanting slats, b. Corn that falls off drops down upon the platform, e, where it is reached by the stock.

There is no loss in this method of feeding, says Farm and Home, and tests at the Nebraska experiment station show that in many cases a greater net profit can be secured from the feeding of corn to the stock with the fodder in this method than can be had by feeding shucked or shelled corn.

Never, No, Never.

Never milk with wet hands. Never mix warm with cold milk. Never close a can containing warm milk. Never try to break a kicker with a club. Try kindness. Never form the habit of feeding and milking at irregular hours. Never allow the cans to stay in the dairy stable while being filled with milk. Never add an animal to the dairy herd before being sure it is free from disease. Never buy a cow on her pedigree alone. It's her performance at the pail that counts most. Never allow cows to become excited by hard driving, unkind words, or unnecessary disturbance.

THE NEW INSURANCE AGENT.

He Comes in With the New Law—Paul Morton on His Opportunity.

The new insurance law of the State of New York has opened up a promising field for both men and women with brains and energy in the sale of life insurance. The law now provides standard forms of policies, each of which practically bears the hall mark of the State of New York, and this new order of things has established the sale of life insurance on a correct basis.

The prohibition against rebating and extravagant allowances to agents has driven out of the business the old type of insurance agent, who in many cases virtually bought business, with large rebates, instead of selling it. His place is being taken by professors, lawyers, school teachers of both sexes, and others, who find that being a life insurance agent under the new system offers greater reward than their previous vocations. The law has reduced commissions but all of the commission now goes to the agent. Life insurance is something that everyone needs and under the present system its sale is being conducted with becoming dignity and propriety.

Paul Morton, president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, has taken the lead in building up an agency organization that is in keeping with the demands of public sentiment, and the standard he has set for his company. He says: "We want new agents, both men and women, but none except energetic, able and truthful people need apply. For such there is a splendid opportunity."

Mr. Morton's policy of injecting new and vigorous blood into the agency force of the Society is meeting with success in all parts of the country.

WORK OF TRUE GENIUS.

Rivers' Ingeniously Baited Trap Was Worthy of Success.

Rivers was sitting at his desk, with an unfinished page of manuscript before him, deeply absorbed in thought.

Brooks entered the room.

"What's the matter, old chap?" asked Brooks.

Rivers looked up with a heavy smile.

"I am struggling with a conundrum," he said.

"Let's have it."

"It isn't finished yet."

"How far have you got?"

"All I've written is the answer: 'One is a planked shad, and the other is a plaided shank.' I've got to have a question for it."

"That's easy. All you need is something Scotch, isn't it?"

"By George!" exclaimed Rivers, grabbing his hat. "I believe you're right. Thanks, dear boy! I'll make it a hot scotch."

Brooks glared at him, but he took him out.—Chicago Tribune.

One Hundred Years Ago.

Gen. Zebulon Pike was discovering the peak that bears his name. "The reason why I know I'm the first white man that ever saw it," he said, "is that it hasn't got any patent medicine signs on it." Regretting that he couldn't spare the time to stop and discover the gold that lay hidden all around him, he took a parting look at the snowy summit of the peak and resumed his toilsome march.

Squaring Accounts.

The man was near starving to death. The world owed him a living and he was trying to collect. He accosted the world thus: "You see, nature is pressing me for what I owe her and so I ask you to square up what you owe me." The world laughed: "You pay the debt of nature first and then I'll come across."—Kansas City Times.

Afraid.

"Don't you want to hold the baby?" asked the fond young mother. "No, thank you," promptly replied the old sea captain, backing off. "Don't you like babies?" "Not much, ma'am. The last time I held one it got—er—seasick."

"Pshaw!" exclaimed May Pechis, "I wonder what makes these gloves of mine so tight. "Ah!" sighed the lovelorn youth, "I, too, would be intoxicated were I a glove upon that hand."

DR. TALKS OF FOOD

Pres. of Board of Health.

"What shall I eat?" is the daily inquiry the physician is met with. I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment, a large percentage of disease is caused by poorly selected and improperly prepared food. My personal experience with the fully-cooked food, known as Grape-Nuts, enables me to speak freely of its merits.

"From overwork, I suffered several years with malnutrition, palpitation of the heart, and loss of sleep. Last summer I was led to experiment personally with the new food, which I used in conjunction with good rich cow's milk. In a short time after I commenced its use, the disagreeable symptoms disappeared, my heart's action became steady and normal, the functions of the stomach were properly carried out and I again slept as soundly and as well as in my youth.

"I look upon Grape-Nuts as a perfect food, and no one can gainsay but that it has a most prominent place in a rational, scientific system of feeding. Any one who uses this food will soon be convinced of the soundness of the principle upon which it is manufactured and may thereby know the facts as to its true worth." Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

One Redeeming Feature.

A youthful New York artist recently invited a friend to dinner in her studio. As the bachelor maid's skill was greater in mixing colors than in catering to grosser tastes, the dinner was something to gnash one's teeth at and upon. The roast chicken was tough, the potatoes were underdone, the pineapple salad was pithy. In anguish of mind, the young hostess sank to the depths of apologizing.

"The dinner was delightful, I assure you," said her guest, a charming woman who would cheerfully have perished at the stake rather than utter a tactless word: "I have rarely tasted such tender gravy."

Not So Long.

There was so much ceremony connected with a church cornerstone laying in New York city a few weeks ago that the moving picture machine man felt warranted to take a couple of miles of photographs.

These pictures proved to be very good, and large crowds were delighted with the exact reproduction of the dedicatory exercises.

"I like the moving pictures better than I did the original service," confessed a prominent member of the congregation.

"You do," gasped a devout elder. "I'm surely pained to hear you say so. Why should you prefer the pictures?"

"Because the picture man," answered the prominent member, pleasantly, "cut out all the sermons."

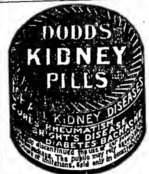
Her Answer.



"Now, children," said the kindergarten teacher, "I have explained to you how many trees give us food, in the way of fruit, and in other ways. WOMEN SUFFER

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance.

How many women do you know who are perfectly well and strong?

The cause may be easily traced to some feminine derangement which manifests itself in depression of spirits, reluctance to go anywhere or do anything, backache, dragging sensations, flatulency, nervousness, and sleeplessness.

These symptoms are but warnings that there is danger ahead, and unless heeded, a life of suffering or a serious operation is the inevitable result. The best remedy for all these symptoms is made from native roots and herbs. No other medicine in the country has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of cures of female ills.

Miss J. F. Walsh, of 328 W. 36th St., New York City, writes:—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been of inestimable value in restoring my health. I suffered from female illness which caused dreadful headaches, dizziness, and dull pains in my back, but your medicine soon brought about a change in my general condition, built me up and made me perfectly well."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints, such as Backache, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation and Ulceration, and organic diseases. It is invaluable in preparing for child-birth and during the Change of Life. It cures Nervous Prostration, Headache, General Debility, and invigorates the whole system.

ON THE TRAIL OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

This Distinguished American Journalist is Traveling Around the World for the Purpose of Investigating the American Foreign Missionary from a Purely Disinterested, Secular and Non-Sectarian Standpoint. Illustrated with Drawings and from Photographs.

HOW THE COLLEGE MAN REACHES THE HEATHEN

(Copyright, 1906, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Karuizawa, Japan.—Exactly how a missionary goes about introducing his teachings to a "heathen" community which knows absolutely nothing about Christianity is an interesting point seldom made plain; now I have seen it done, and the procedure is worth describing. This trip to a large interior town, where missionaries and Christianity are unknown, with the incidents which befell by the way, was the most interesting experience thus far encountered in Japan.

In several features this particular preaching expedition was abnormal. It was made in connection with an excursion to the famous hot springs of Kusatsu by a party of missionaries who are accustomed to their vacation in Karuizawa, the largest summer resort for foreigners in Japan. There were eight young American missionaries, two Japanese teachers or evangelists, and myself, in the party which started early one morning for the 20-mile walk over the mountains to Kusatsu. It was worth while to get this intimate view of missionaries for three days of hard travel under these conditions was enough to reveal the inwardness of a man's nature.

Escaping from the five russors from the one scrolled European hotel, who lodged or at various points along the latter half of the journey, and despite assurances from apparently disinterested persons that all the necessities were full, the party, by an exercise of its Japanese speech and western persistence, found on eminently satisfactory Japanese hotel, where all the missionaries were at once at home, being quite accustomed to eating and sleeping on the floor. At once the native teachers set out to arrange for a religious service by the foreigners.

The Preachers and the Police.

Soon the kindly paternalism of the Japanese police was encountered. Immediately upon reaching their inn, the foreigners had been obliged to register their names and ages and occupations, where they came from, whither they were going and how long they intended to stay. This is part of the marvelously complete system whereby the police department keeps a record of every foreigner within the borders of the empire. Soon the Japanese teacher returned to say that the police, while quite willing that the visitors should hold a preaching service in the public square, insisted that it be very short and simple, lest there be trouble with the rough element in town. Later there came a second message, couched in politest terms, suggesting that the meeting be held in the hotel, where the honorable gentlemen lodged, at the upper end of the village.

So it was arranged. Shortly after eight o'clock, lighted by the conventional paper lanterns which the inn supplied, we proceeded to the public square, alongside of a steaming pool whose sulphurous fumes suggested the opposite of things heavenly. In fact, Kusatsu itself is a good place for preaching. Its very existence is based largely upon the consequences of the immorality. The permanent population is about 1,500 persons, all living off the visitors, who number between three and four thousand, more than a score of whom are Europeans. These hot sulphur baths, for centuries the most famous in Japan, while efficacious in rheumatism and gout, are more generally used for the most loathsome skin diseases. By far the largest number of visitors go to Kusatsu as a penalty for their own or their parents' transgression of the moral law.

The Old and the New in Competition.

But to return to the party of missionary visitors in the center of the village. The simple presence of so many foreigners, apparently in good health, attracted attention. When the older of the two Japanese preachers announced, holding aloft his lantern, that the foreigners would speak and sing that night, heads began to appear on all sides. Then the missionaries, all of whom speak Japanese, gathered about their one hymn book and began to sing a Japanese translation of a familiar hymn. In the meantime the native evangelist was busily accosting individuals, inviting them to the service and giving them tracts.

Two hymns were sung, the announcement was repeated, and the procession wended its way down near the foot of the hill, with natives bringing up the rear. Another hall was made and a similar procedure was adopted; and again, further up the village, a third stand was made. This was a short distance beyond where two native story-tellers were entertaining large crowds with sing-song recitals, after the ancient custom. The missionaries considerately moved to a distance before singing, lest they should disturb these audiences, but they nevertheless got a considerable following from the fringes of the latter. At a slow pace, to accommodate the lame and the halt, the crowd moved on to the appointed meeting place, having created a sensation in the town.

A Fresh Sensation For the Jaded.

Curiously, and the desire of the missionaries to avoid this fact if possible, found on examination to be largely responsible for the attentive company of about 50 Japanese which gathered when the meeting opened. Outside the room, which, in the convenient fashion of the land, was enlarged by removing two of the walls, was a border of wondering women and children. Inside were the men, sitting on their knees, according to the native code of politeness; after the introductory address, one of the auditors spoke up and, with profoundest apologies for the rudeness, asked if the men might not be so impolite as to sit cross-legged, the more comfortable posture, since they were most of them invalids. With many mutual bowings—to live in Japan insures abundant exercise for the muscles of the back—the request was of course granted by the missionaries, only half of whom, I noticed, knew the art of sitting on their knees; I found the ordeal of sitting cross-legged for more than an hour quite severe enough.

The meeting was the first Christian service ever held in that ancient community, the official said, although I later learned that when Revs. T. M. McNair and E. R. Miller spent a vacation in Kusatsu a score of years ago, they also conducted Christian services. Naturally it was as interesting to me as to these Japanese who had never seen a missionary before.

After a hymn in English, sung from memory, and an introductory address and prayer by the native preacher—who, by the way, recently refused an increase in the ten-dollar-a-month salary which a Pennsylvania church pays him, because he said the work elsewhere needed the money more than he—Mr. Hall spoke in Japanese. There was a vein of humor in his address, which abounded in illustrations, and caused the audience to utter the Japanese equivalent for "Hear! hear!" Throughout the meeting, most strangely enough, the addresses and their telling points were applauded by hand-clapping.

Despite the lateness of the hour to which this meeting had been prolonged, the party was astir almost at daybreak, and on a tour of the town watching the bathers. Whoever will may see these, for the Japanese know nothing of the American interpretation of modesty. Then an early start was made for Shibu, more than 20 miles distant, by way of Shirasu, an active volcano 7,500 feet high. This tramp is enough to test the religion of anybody, even a missionary, for it is entirely over mountains, and the road is superlatively bad, though the scenery is superlatively beautiful, rivaling Colorado's best.

The Petite Police.

The faithful Japanese preacher had omitted the climb up Shirasu and so he reached Shibu another village famous for its mildge baths, ahead of the main party. He returned and lectured to the missionaries, who arrived at sundown, to find the town expectant of a meeting, all the preparations for which had been made. Several rooms on the first floor of the native inn where the visitors spent the night were thrown into one, making room for upwards of a hundred persons seated, while many more could stand outside or sit in the house across the alley, so ugh is neighbor to neighbor in the old Japanese villages.

Word came from the police that should this meeting place be too small for the foreigners' purpose, the police themselves would provide a larger room. But some 200 men, women and children crowded around when the service began, and listened to the new teachings with an attention that could not be surpassed in a Fifth Avenue church. The same speakers took part, although with different addresses. A considerable circle of young men, mostly students, gathered about Mr. Hall after the meeting, for further conversation. At this service a native Christian woman, who had moved into the village from another town, was a delighted part. One of the American Bible Society's colporteurs was also present; and, in general, this segment somewhat familiar with Christianity then did Kusatsu, although there are no Christian services held there.

Where Religion Is Cheap.

The next morning the Americans, who were quite accustomed to creating a stir by their appearance in native villages, went to Nagano, where is one of the most celebrated Buddhist temples in Japan, dating back to 670 A. D., although the oldest portion of the present structure is only six centuries old. The high priesters of this temple is an aust of the emperor. The temple ores is crow-ded with statues and buildings of absorbing interest. I noticed one bronze Buddha of heroic size holding a baby, and some devotee had put a modern bonnet, of cheap calico, on the latter's head! On several occasions I have seen images thus incongruously adorned.

Thousands of devout pilgrims visit this temple, and the emperor himself has a sumptuous suite of apartments therein, although the Shintoists claim him as one of their number. In fact, he has rather impartially patronized both faiths; and thousands of his subjects do likewise. Ordinary pilgrims to the temple are kept outside the wire screen before the altar, but the missionaries, by the application of the silver key which unlocks doors the world over, were omitted to a closer view and a complete inspection. They were even taken down through the absolutely dark underground passage where the keys of paradise may be found, attached to a huge padlock. And assuredly those young Americans were glad and ratified when loudly enough for all the celestial doorkeepers to hear. This trip in the dark is supposed to purge the soul of sin, though, paradoxically enough, the priest who was our guide warned us that if we had any evil in our hearts when we entered we would come out changed into dogs, which is the common belief. Of course this priest emerged barking and growling like ours with the cans to their tails.

It must not be inferred that the missionaries were disrespectful to the temple or its worshippers. They moved about reverently and unshod, and were genuinely interested in the bewildering explanations of who's who in this sect of Buddhism. There are more than 20,000 ancestral tablets placed in one apartment, I noticed one that was surmounted by the Mikado.

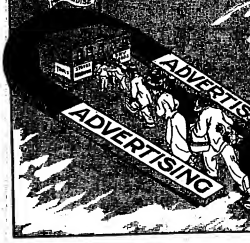
As souvenirs of this trip I have written from the high priest that I have performed an early morning devotion at a certain shrine, and have received absolution from him in person—although, as a matter of fact, it was nearly noon when we were in the temple, and I never saw the high priest. I bought the document from a priest in the temple office for one yen and a half cents, Buddhism (I am sorry to say), guaranteeing protection to my body from every kind of harm, and all for the sum of eight cents. Religion comes cheap in Japan. I saw priests emptying the money boxes which stand before each shrine, and later stringing the coins together. These are all of copper, and of the lowest denominations, two sen, one sen, half sen, rin and half rin. The last two are the commonest, and are worth respectively, one twentieth and one fortieth of an American cent. These are now seldom used in commerce, and are called "curiosity money." The sen is worth one-half cent.

The elaborate and costly Buddhist temple and its ritual and priests was in sharp contrast with the impoverished simple services which these unofficial missionaries had been holding; but the latter had a confidence and a vitality which made one foresee the possibility of the overthrow of Buddhism by the plain gospel of the Nazarene.

HOME TRADE FABLE

HOW THE TRANSFORMATION OF A TOWN WAS EFFECTED.

A STORY WITH A MORAL



One Public Spirited Citizen Who Realized the Big Possibilities and Cultivated the Field to Advantage.

Once upon a time there was a Man, who, in his youth was reared upon a farm located near a Small Town of Great Promise. Two weeks in each year when he was not sawing wood, feeding the stock or picking potatoes, he was allowed to attend the little red schoolhouse in the town. By hard labor during the day, and persistently reading a few old books which were heirlooms in his family, and each week absorbing the intelligence contained in the Weekly Mirror, he, by the time he could mark down his age at 21 years, had accumulated sufficient knowledge to run away from home. He wandered to a large city and there got a great muscular power assisted to gain for himself a position as Chief Scrubber in a large store. He had not acquired the cigarette habit, and his faithfulness to his scrubbing brush, and his unwillingness to know all about his employer's business, soon attracted the attention of the Old Man, and at the end of a year he was promoted to Head Rustler in the shipping department at the large salary of eight dollars a week.

His disregard for scooting when the closing time came, and his total lack of weekly bead so pleased the Old Man that from time to time the ambition youth was advanced until at the end of six years he was drawing the biggest salary paid by the house, and would keep his mind occupied. He loved the old work. He saw that it needed new life. He figured out that there were 600 farmers in the neighborhood. Each farmer surely spent $60 a month somewhere for supplies. This meant a total of $30,000 a month; $360,000 a year. Then the few hundred people in the town would add other thousands to the volume of business. Why not build a great store and supply the wants of the people? He would spend some money and build up the town. He bought half a block on which three of the stores stood. He erected a large brick building, and soon he had installed in it great stocks of goods. Other merchants in the town shook their heads. The Public-Spirited Man was certainly crazy. Farmers when they came to town looked up the big building with wonder. The Weekly Mirror had to send away for type to set up the page advertisement for the new store, and to get a new press for the printing of circulars and posters.

One month after the opening of the store the graveyard quietness of the town was passed away. Streets were filled with the teams and the wagons of the farmers. A new elevator for grain was started, and the railroad placed a new switch in the yard to accommodate the increased business. The son of the old town blacksmith opened the old shop closed for years because of no trade. New life was rapidly being injected into the place.

There was an election. A lot of newcomers selected the Public Spirited Citizen for chairman of the town board. He was elected. In six months the streets were paved, an electric lighting plant was in operation, along with a water works. The Great Store keeper had a way of doing things, and he did them. News of the activity of the town reached near-by villages, and the people came to see the Big Store and to buy goods. A cold storage plant in connection with a new commission house operated by friends of soon he was taken in as a member of the firm. Age and hard knocks and brushes with the business world developed in him marked business ability. He forged to the front as a financier and a public-spirited citizen. As years passed he prospered, and he became what he was envied by after his vast business interests. There were times that he longed to begin again in the small home town. Often in his youth he dreamed of some day being chairman of the village board. Only chance and luck from the old home had he returned, and then to find the town just the same only a little more dilapidated, and in the weed-overgrown kirkyard the neglected graves of his good parents.

Strenuous business life and saddlous attention to the accumulation of capital without vacation, caused him to suffer from what the doctors pronounced neurasthenia, and advised total rest from mental effort. The man of business diligently in amoeing money. Residences in a quiet place was recommended as chairman from the commercial worries. The Great Merchant sold his vast interests to e combine, and after careful consideration decided that he would seek rest and a renewal of health in the town where he at one time started life. He went back to his old home and where in childish imagination he would be powerful and famous by becoming chairman of the town board. Accordingly he retired from the city, purchased the old homestead where he was wont to pick the potatoes, and also built a residence and became a Great Factor in the town. Soon he began to improve the landscape. Buildings and streets were the same, only showing the ravages of decay. The citizens were in possession of the descendants of the owners who conducted them when he was a boy. There was suggestive of peace. It was an ideal place for a man who desired to pass his declining years in contemplation of the hereafter. There, life was much like unto death. There was fresh air in abundance, but it was leisurely spent its beauty ever the country and the town, and even the weeds on the streets were allowed to spring up, bloom and reach maturity without interruption by the scythe or the sickle.

Within a year the Retired Business Man had regained much of his old-time spirit and health. Habits of activity and love of business impelled him to once again seek work that the Storepeeker, caused Farmers to bring in tone of butter and hundreds of thousands of eggs, and chickens and other produce. The transformation was quick from a Dead Town to a Lively Small City. A high school was established, new churches were built, and some of the pious people were shocked to see an opera house erected. The Pan-Handle & Skeddle railroad, which for years had been running 20 miles from the town so as to avoid its ruts as to have it on its main line, co the place had two railroads. Enterprising men who wanted to locate in a Live Town rented their eyes toward the place. Soon there was smoke from a half dozen big factories, and in five years after the Public-spiritel Citizen had started his store his old home town had increased its population 1,000 per cent. It was no longer printed in little type on the maps, but in capital letters.

MORAL.—Do not underestimate the possibilities of your community, or fail to develop them. No city was ever made except by the people buying goode elsewhere.

Civilization in Abyssinia.

A sawmill is already at work at Adie Abeba, Abyssinia, and Greek Africans are engaged in quarrying and stone hewing. Machinery in connection with house building generally is likely to be in demand as soon as the means of transport are provided. The government is already building in Europe a steam saw stone houses may be seen, some even of three stories in height in the capital.

World's Submarine Cables.

The total length of submarine cables in the world is given as 440,000 kilome—279,632 miles, of which 60 per cent. are British, ten per cent. American, a little more than nine per cent. French, and about seven per cent. German. A great advance in this domain has been made during the past few years by Germany, whose efforts tend to constitute an independent system.—Memorial Diplomatique.

Sporting Gossip.

Court tennis has never enjoyed the popularity in the United States that it has in England and older countries. It is the father of nearly all games played with a ball, lawn tennis and squash. By some authorities the Spanish game pelota or jaiali is held to have had its origin in the pastime in which young Jay Gould recently became world's champion. As the records run, court tennis was in the beginning an outdoor sport, but gradually its development became an indoor pastime of the elect. Perhaps its finding its way indoors had a political significance. When it was introduced in England and France it became immensely popular and edicts were issued by the crowns of both countries prohibiting "idle games." Tennis was chief among them and historians have it that the reason back of the orders was that the kings of the two countries thought that if the people played these games they would not practice "their military duties." Court tennis, as it is played to-day, is as different from lawn tennis as the earth is from the moon. The only two features in common are the racquets and balls. These even are different. The court tennis racquets are larger and heavier than those used in lawn tennis, and the balls, while of about the size and color of the lawn tennis spheres, are made of cloth covered with rubber. They are also heavier. The court in which the game is played is an oblong within an oblong. There are two walls all around, one higher than the other. Along the left-hand side and at the heeard end an angular shelf or "pent well" is formed by coanecting the outer and inner walls. Several of the hall must be made directly against the sagie or the well above. The regulation court should be 94 feet and a half between its innor walls and 38½ feet wide. The vernsecular of court tennis contains such expressions as "chases," "nicke," "pesese," ote. Thero is a "dedess," as talet in the service wall of the court, which means a point to put a ball there. There le en "cad gallery" higher up on the "peat wall" side and a "grille" is a "hazard" corner of the court for the esmo purpoec. The floor is marked off like a football gridiron and each line has its significence and value. The court is separated midway by a not running the full width of the court. One side of thie net is the "hasard" side, tbe opoelte tbo "service."

other day. His purpose in coming to thie country is, it is understood, to give exhibitions and secure if possible a series of professional matches with Tom Longboat ,the Indian runner.

Professiosal prize fighters first saw the light of day in England. Writers on boxiens and fistisee are not agreed as to the date of their origin, but some of the older scribes believe it was in the seventeenth century. In ono of Hogarth's pictures, entitled "Gin Lane," there is a representation of a bully offering to tackle anybody and howling for a challenge to stir enough meat of muscle to enter the lists with him. That was during the reign of George II. The fellow figured by Hogarth was a man well known in London in those days. He was called Fig, an ignoramus of a prize fighter, but a fighter all the same, and many writers agree that he was the original professional fistic fighter. He held his place with another of his class, a Venetian gondolier known as Jawbreaker. There was much early date. Fig licked the gondolier, and held on to his prestige until his death. Another of the renowned English fighters who at one time enjoyed considerable fame was Tom Pipes. Tom cracked his elbow too frequently, however, and was whipped by a sleveniy, nasciauitc person called Hamet Sinith. All stood high in the fame amphitheaters of those days. They all fought for "the diversion of gentlemen," with, of course, a lot of money on the side.

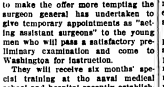
UNCLE SAM IS HUNTING FOR NAVAL SURGEONS



WASHINGTON. — Notwithstanding the superior inducements which a naval career offers for a young physician over the uncertain and overworked lines of the average struggling general practitioner the medical corps of the navy has not found it possible to secure enough naval surgeons to meet the needs of the service.

Admiral Rixey, surgeon general of the navy, has adopted extraordinary measures to meet the case, even going so far as to send circulars to many of the best medical colleges soliciting applications from the graduates for appointment as naval surgeons. And to make the offer more tempting the surgeon general has undertaken to give temporary appointments as "acting assistant surgeons" to the young men who will pass a satisfactory preliminary examination and come to Washington for instruction.

They will receive six months' special training at the naval medical school and hospital recently established here or at the Mare Island naval hospital in the case of applicants from the Pacific coast. At the end of that course the graduates will receive appointments as assistant surgeons with an annual salary of $1,750, supplemented by allowances of $423 and mileage and other inducements.

The difficulty in securing applicants lies in the fear of the examination to which they must submit. Admiral Rixey insists that this fear is unfounded if the applicant has been properly grounded in the principles of medicine, while for the "collateral examination" which the candidates must take, this is nothing more than an elementary test of the candidate's general knowledge of English, arithmetic and literature, and even knowledge of foreign languages is not essential.

Not even these comparatively simple requirements, however, it is stated, are met by the majority of applicants, which is the opinion of the naval medical corps in a severe commentary upon the training afforded by many medical institutions. The shortage of doctors in the navy has become really serious.

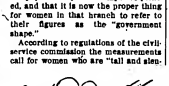
ROOSEVELT'S AMBITION ONCE WAS TO BE SAILOR

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT made his first speech when he was ten years old. At that time he would a bold sailor be. He had read all the marvelous tales of the sea and his ambition was to sail the ocean blue in command of a staunch craft that would carry him to the uttermost parts of the earth. He was permitted by his governess to spend much time about the wharves of New York and he thus became personally acquainted with many of the most famous skippers of that time. Chief among his heroes was a certain Captain Isaac, commander of the clipper ship Rival.

This old sea dog used to fill the mind of the future hero of San Juan with astonishing stories of storms at sea and hairbreadth escapes from a sepulcher in Davy Jones' locker. It fired the imagination of the youth and stirred his ambition. In 1865, the boy who is now president raised a fund by popular subscription for the purpose of a library for the officers and crew of the Rival, all of whom were his friends.

At the head of a delegation of youngsters he visited the ship when it next came into port and with due ceremony presented the library, consisting of 45 volumes, to the skipper. The presentation speech was made by Mr. Roosevelt. When reminded a few days ago of this event by an old friend the president said he remembered it perfectly and that frequently he had wondered if any of the officers or crew of the Rival were still alive, and, if so, if they remembered his speech.

"I thought it was a mighty fine speech," said he, "and so did Captain Doane."



THE "GOVERNMENT SHAPE" CAUSES MUCH COMMENT

THERE is considerable breezy comment among certain women employes of Uncle Sam's two open shops —the government printing office and the bureau of engraving and printing —over what is termed by some of the fair workers the "government shape." It is said this shape was created by the civil service commission for the women employes of the bureau where the paper money and stamps are printed, and that it is now the proper thing for women in that branch to refer to their figures as the "government shape."

According to regulations of the civil service commission the measurements call for women who are "tall and slender and sinuous!" height, 5 feet 8 inches; weight, 154 pounds; bust, 36 inches; waist 25 inches; hips 43 inches, and back 15½ inches.

A case of the rejection of a young woman from Michigan is cited because she was not tall enough for her width to meet the requirements, although her percentage in other directions was said to have been high. It is explained that it is necessary for a woman to be tall in order that she may reach the notes while on the press. A woman of short stature could not reach the notes, while one of unusual girth would not have room to stoop between the presses in the process of printing.

OLD CLERKS IN LAND OFFICE TO LOSE JOBS

COMMISSIONER BALLINGER of the general land office has recommended to Secretary Garfield a general reorganization of the force of his office. The secretary has the matter under consideration and while no official announcement has been made of his intentions it is known that he approves Mr. Ballinger's plan and it is expected that it will soon be put into effect.

The first dismissals will be made in the division of the office in which land patents are prepared. There are about 75 clerks in that division, and of those about 16 or 20 will be relieved from duty. The reason for immediate action is the fact that the law provides for the typewriting of the patents and the recorded copies of them. Many of the employes are elderly persons who have been on the rolls for years, and some of them, it is said, cannot typewrite.

The lowest salaries paid in the division is $900 per annum, and the commissioner complained that many of the employes can not earn that amount. Where possible places paying less will be provided, but there are comparatively few of those positions, and even those are all occupied.

There is not such urgency in other divisions, but there are said to be many clerks throughout the bureau who are incapacitated by age or other infirmities and whose service can not, therefore, be retained in justice to the department.

The commissioner expresses deep regret for the necessity which compels his course, but justifies it on the ground that no less radical course would insure the efficiency of the office.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

SENATOR SPOONER'S SUCCESSOR

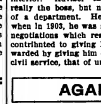
Isaac Stephenson, who won the long drawn out fight for the United States senate seat vacated by John C. Spooner, is a multimillionaire lumberman and iron miner of Wisconsin. He and his brother Demmel of Menominee, Mich., were born in New Brunswick and came to Michigan when Samuel was eight years old and Isaac six. Iron ore was discovered on the lands on which they settled, just about the time they had grown up.

Isaac's land lay across the Wisconsin line. Samuel's was on the Michigan side. They became residents of the states in which their property was situated and rapidly accumulated wealth. Both sought congressional honors. Samuel served four terms in congress from his Michigan district and Isaac served three terms in congress from Wisconsin. Isaac was a candidate for senatorial honors twice before. He is 77 years old and his home is in Marinette.

Senator Stephenson is a many-sided man. He is a banker, a lumberman, a promoter of great industries, a farmer, a yachtsman, a fisherman, a devotee of out-of-door sports such as horse racing, and a philosophical man of affairs. He believes in churches, though not himself a member of any denomination. He has contributed thousands of dollars to Roman Catholic, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Methodist and other religious societies. He has built new church edifices and bought belfry chimes galore.

Mr. Stephenson is no orator and will not endeavor to make extended speeches in the upper branch of congress. He will do his work in committee rooms and at the White House—the work that counts for the state and his constituents.

REIGN OF "BOSS" ENDED



Abraham (commonly called "Abe") Ruef, who recently pleaded guilty to accepting a bribe, was for years a conspicuous figure in the political life of San Francisco. He made Schmitz mayor, he controlled the Republican and Labor party machines, and he was dictator of the police force and of the saloon element. Ruef's father was well off in this world's goods and gave his son a good education. The confessed criminal is a fair Greek and Latin scholar, and has an intimate acquaintance not only with German, but with French, Spanish, Italian and Portuguese. His linguistic abilities account in part for his political success. He began life as a lawyer's clerk and made rapid progress in the profession, and it is said of him that had he not abused his mentional talents he would have made a name and a place for himself.

Ruef, secure in the power of his machine, for years defied the press and the decent element of the city. A lawyer and a graduate of the University of California, he represented a curious phase of the educated man in practical politics.

Ruef had a genius for organization. When the police began to interfere with the saloonkeepers, Ruef, as Mayor Schmitz' legal adviser, acted also as their legal adviser. Enormous fees for his services looked safer than weekly or monthly blackmail. The reason of vice, deep and fashionable, soon recognized his extraordinary skill as an attorney. There was trouble about building permits and Ruef intervened for more big fees.

Aside from the newspapers few dared to antagonize Ruef. It was necessary for Preident Roosevelt to send Francis J. Heney to San Francisco as a prosecuting official to call an honest grand jury.

EGYPT'S NEW RULER

As the successor of Lord Cromer, the man who for 20 years has been the real ruler of Egypt, though nominally merely the British consul general there, Sir Eldon Gorst has a most difficult post to fill. Gorst does not lack admirers, who declare that he will prove the right man in the right place. He is the eldest son of a remarkably able man, Sir John Eldon Gorst, who is still living. He was named after his father, long before, of course, it was known that he had inherited his father's brains.

When his ability brought him a knighthood he dropped his first name, that there might not be two Sir Johns in the family. But in Egypt everybody still speaks of him as "Johnnie" Gorst. He went there when 25 as an attache, and rose rapidly through the diplomatic grades. Great administrative talents and considerable social gifts commended him to Lord Cromer, and within an extraordinarily short time he had become undersecretary to the ministry of finance, and again adviser to the ministry of the interior. "Adviser" in Egypt is a euphemism for the British official who is really the boss, but nominally the subordinate of the minister at the head of a department. He was financial adviser to the Egyptian government, when in 1909, he was summoned to London to assist the foreign office in the negotiations which resulted in the Anglo-French agreement that so largely contributed to giving England a protectorate hand in Egypt. His services were rewarded by giving him one of the most responsible positions in the permanent civil service, that of under-secretary of state for foreign affairs.

AGAIN TO BE A BRIDE

Anna Gould is the subject of society gossip of the moment in France. A romance, it is said, of some years standing, is to be consummated shortly by marriage. The former Countess de Castellane (Boni) has for a long time had two steadfast admirers or at least two great friends whom she admired. One is a Frenchman, the other an Englishman.

The moment there seemed to be a possibility that she could wed again there was much gay gossip as to the chances of the two men. The betting was on the Englishman, for it was thought la petite American had a sufficiency of the French husband.

But now it is said that the Frenchman is the first favorite and that in the course of the near future Anna Gould will once more change her name. It is the general opinion among men who know her that while Anna Gould is a sweet little woman she is not attractive in face or form. But she dresses magnificently, has charming piquant ways and manners and still possesses quite a hoard of good American dollars.

Anna Gould has quite recovered her position in society largely due to Henry White, the new ambassador to France. The other week a reception was held at Holy Trinity lodge by the American colony in Paris in honor of the new ambassador. There were those high-class and fashionable people who know how to entertain. Among the guests were the Duchess de Rochefoucauld, who was formerly Consuelo Vanderbilt, the duchess of Marlborough, and Anna Gould, the Countess de Castellane (Boni).

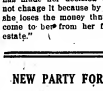
Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

WIDOW HEIRESS PREFERS HAPPINESS TO MONEY

NEW YORK.—Mrs. Catherine Walker Duryee, known at the time of her marriage to William Duryea, Jr., son of the late starch manufacturer, as the prettiest girl in Gloscove, L. I., will lose her share of her late father-in-law's $200,000 estate by marrying a young preacher.



Her father-in-law's will, recently admitted to probate, leaves her $15,000 outright if she remains single and more than $100,000 at the death of his wife, if she has not taken a husband. She gets practically nothing if she weds.

Regardless of the will, she is to marry in the near future Rev. Samuel Angus, who recently graduated from Princeton university, and who at present is teacher of languages in the Harvard Theological seminary.

She met the minister at Clifton Springs, where they were both spending a part of last winter in search of health. They fell in love, much to the annoyance of the Duryea family, and so it happens that Mrs. Walker Duryea will not only give up her fortune but will permanently suffer the frowns of her relatives if she persists in marrying a theological professor.

Rev. Angus was told that under the Duryea will the daughter-in-law would forfeit her share of the estate if she married.

"We knew full well the provisions of Mr. Duryea's will," said he, "and it does not make a particle of difference in our plans. My intended wife has made her decision and she will not change it because by marrying me she loses the money that would have come to her from her father-in-law's estate."

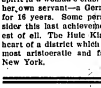
NEW PARTY FORMED TO MAKE WAR ON LANDLORDS

THE constantly increasing rents in New York, with no relief in sight, have driven many tenants of moderate means to form a new political party, with the doom of the landlord as their slogan. Cornelia Donovan is president of the organization, and says it has 10,000 members, with more joining all the while. He says the situation is intolerable, and that strong means must be used if the tenants are to get anything like fair treatment. He asserts the belief that fully 90 per cent of the voting business men who start in New York are put down and out by the landlords. The government, he says, protects the borrower from the lender, but the miserable tenant who cannot pay his monthly rent is ejected without redress.

Mr. Donovan proposes to have a series of mass meetings to stir up enthusiasm in the matter. He declares he is going to appeal to Governor Hughes for help to "end the landlords' day of robbery," and recommends that the name of the owner of each house be displayed publicly on the building or at least printed in all receipts for rent. In this way he hopes to prevent the dodging of the real owners, through paid agents.

Donovan has a big job on his hands, without a doubt, as the rights of private property are pretty closely guarded in this country. But all joking aside, many of the complaints he fathers are founded on solid facts, or rather customs. The borough of Manhatten is a place for only the very rich or the very poor to live. Both of these are tolerably well looked after in the matter of housing, but the great middle class suffers by reason of the fact that comparatively scant provisions have been made for them within their means. The enormous increase in the cost of living in New York city proper, combined with the almost equivalent increase that suffers for moderately comfortable quarters, is driving hundreds away.

WOMAN KEEPS SERVANT GIRL SIXTEEN YEARS



THERE are many remarkable women in New York, but the most remarkable of them all, probably, is Mrs. Huie Kin, the clever American wife of the superintendent of the Presbyterian Chinese mission at 26 West Ninth street.

For eighteen years she has been her husband's associate in the mission work. During this time Mrs. Huie not only has had the duties pertaining to an American household of extraordinary size to attend to, but she has had to shoulder many additional responsibilities imposed by Chinese custom.

Despite the fact that she has nine children, the last two of which are twins, and that these nine children, like most children, are enough to wear out any ordinary woman, she remains young and does not look to be a day more than 35 years old.

She adds to the family income by renting rooms in her big house to two Americans, man and wife, two or three young Chinamen, and a Japanese, students at Columbia university. She assists regularly at the four or five services her husband holds on Sunday.

She has 40 or 50 guests to dinner every Sunday. She is the leading spirit in a woman's club. She has kept her own servant—a German woman—for 16 years. Some persons will consider this last achievement the greatest of all. The Huie Kins live in the heart of a district which once was the most aristocratic and fashionable of New York.

CUSTOMERS OF GATES FAILED HIM IN CRISIS

MANY stories were circulated in Wall street as to the causes of the retirement of John W. Gates and the control of Tennessee Coal & Iron, Republic Iron & Steel and United States Realty & Improvement. These stocks he is said to have accumulated with a view to holding them as permanent investments.

During the recent decline it is believed that these stocks were freely used as collateral by his other stock holders of Tennessee and when the big slump came the bankers whom Mr. Gates approached to assist him in arranging his affairs over the crisis suggested that he with them, and failed to respond to his call for margins.

The firm of Charles Gates & Co. had been carrying a lot of people in speculative operation who proved ungrateful when the call for funds to protect their accounts was finally made. This is said to have been one of the main causes for the retirement of the firm.

FOR GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF LINES

PRESIDENT IS EMPHATIC IN HIS RECOMMENDATIONS AS TO RAILROADS.

Declares There Is Much Good to the Public and to Corporations in Wise National Regulation—Men of Predatory Wealth a Peril.

Indianapolis, Ind., May 31.—After paying a tribute to the men who gave up their lives that the union might be maintained, and after speaking in praise of the gallantry, patriotism and devotion of Gen. Lawton, President Roosevelt Thursday turned his attention in his address at the Lawton monument unwilling to the economic problems of the hour, making particular and pointed reference to the matter of federal control of the railroads.

The speech places the president in a still more advanced position on economic subjects, but oft through his course there was expressed the determination to see that no legitimate business interest should suffer.

The principal points made by the president were as follows:

Stop Crimes of Cunning.

"The power of the nation must be exerted to stop crimes of cunning no less than crimes of violence."

"One great problem that we have before us is to preserve the rights of property; and these can only be preserved if we remember that they are in less jeopardy from the socialist and the anarchist than from the president man of wealth."

"Every federal law dealing with the question of with railroads has been a step in advance in the right direction. . . . There will be no halt in the forward movement toward a full development of this policy; and those who wish us to take a step backward or to stand still, if their wishes were realized, would find that they had invited an outbreak of the very radicalism they fear."

Closer Railroad Control Certain.

"The movement to regulate railways has come to stay. The people of this country have made up their minds—and wisely made up their minds—to exercise a closer control over all kinds of public service corporations, including railways. Every honestly managed railway will gain and not lose by the policy."

"The purpose of these of us who so resolutely believe in the new policy, in its thorough carrying out and in its progressive development, is in no sense punitive or vindictive."

"We favor the railroad manager who keeps in close touch with the people along his line rather than in close touch with the speculative market."

Needs of Commerce Commission.

"Ample provision should be made by congress to enable the interstate commerce commission, by the employment of a sufficient force of experts, to undertake the physical valuation of each and any railroad in the country, whenever and so soon as in the opinion of the commission the valuation of any road would be of value to the commission in its work."

"It is plainly inadvisable for the government to undertake to direct the physical operation of the railways save in wholly exceptional cases; and the supervision and control it exercises should be entirely adequate to secure its ends, and yet no more harassing than is necessary to secure these ends."

Warning to Railroad Men.

"Let the big railroad men scrupulously refrain from any effort to influence politics or government save as it is the duty of every good citizen in legitimate ways to try to influence politics and government."

"In providing against overcapitalization we shall harm no human being who is honest; and we shall benefit many, for overcapitalization often means an inflation that invites business panic . . . and puts a premium on gambling and business trickery."

"We hope as one of the chief means for betterment of conditions to secure as complete publicity in the affairs of the railroads as now obtains with regard to national banks. There need be no fear on the part of honest men that movement for national supervision and control over railways will be for their detriment."

Appeals for Power.

"I ask for full power to be given the federal government to control by single state can by legislation effectually cope with these powerful corporations engaged in interstate commerce; and while doing them full justice, exact from them in return full justice to others."

"The shippers of the country must be supplied generously with cars and all other equipment necessary to properly care for our commerce, and all this means that the national government must be given full and effective power of supervision and control."

Cold Weather Damages Rye.

Omaha, Neb., May 28.—The United States weather bureau reports below freeze general all over Nebraska Sunday night. Wheat is probably not injured. Rye suffered greatly. Corn is unaltered, in some fields not having even sprouted. Market gardens in Douglass county suffered $200,000 damage.

Seven Die in Car Wreck.

Myrtle, O., June 1.—Seven persons died of injuries received in the wreck of the Cleveland & Southwestern trolley car Thursday, when the car was struck by another car.

CHINESE OFFICIALS KILLED

SERIOUS UPRISING IN PROVINCE OF KWANTUNG.

Rioters Also Reported to Have Destroyed the German Mission Station at Lienchow.

Swatow, Province of Kwantung, China, May 28.—A rebellion has broken out at Wongkong, in the Uping district of the Chinchu prefecture. All the civil and military officials at Wongkong have been assassinated and their yamens burned.

The local revolutionists, who were joined by natives of the neighboring provinces, concentrated their attack on the officials without being molested by the police.

Kwantung province is in the southern part of China and has a population of about 30,000,000.

Berlin, May 28.—According to dispatches received here from Shanghai and Hongkong native rioters have destroyed the German mission station at Lienchow, near Pakhoi. The missionaries escaped.

New York, May 28.—Four missionaries of the Presbyterian board of foreign missions are now stationed at Lienchow, according to a statement made at the offices of the board in this city Monday. They are Rev. John S. Cunkle, who lately returned to Lienchow, after a furlough in England; Rev. Rees F. Edwards and his wife and Miss Ella Patterson. They have been in the mission field so long that their home addresses are not accessible at the office of the board in this city.

No information of troubles at Lienchow has been received from the Presbyterian missionaries.

THRONG TO MEET PRESIDENT.

Crowds Gather at Stopping Places Along the Route.

Indianapolis, Ind., May 31.—The president's trip from Bellefontaine, where he first appeared in public Thursday morning, to Indianapolis, was a continued ovation. At all places where the train stopped, starting at Bellefontaine, and including Sidney, O., and Union City, Muncie and Anderson, Ind., great crowds were gathered and pressed around the president's car. At several places the president made brief remarks in keeping with the day, and at others he shook hands with as many of the people as could get near him.

At Bellefontaine, O., where it was generally known his train would stop, the largest crowd was on hand. Here Vice President Fairbanks introduced Mr. Roosevelt in a few words, to which the president responded, speaking briefly of good citizenship, reminding the veterans who were assembled that the day was especially their day and declaring that what impressed him most in this country was the fundamental unity of the people.

The train bearing the president left here for Fort Wayne, Ind., where he passed the night on his car. Stops were made at Anderson and Muncie.

KILLED SELF AND SISTER.

Double Tragedy the Work of Discontented Illinois Girl.

Springfield, Ill., May 31.—It is now accepted as a fact that Cora Lederbrandt, the 17-year-old daughter of Joseph Lederbrand, a farmer residing ten miles east of this city, whose body, together with that of her sister, Carrie, aged seven, was found in the bottom of Sugar creek, near the Lederbrand homestead, with a 12-caliber revolver wound in the temple of each, killed her sister and then, wading into the creek, shot herself with the revolver with which the deed was done was found on the bank of the creek by Thomas Brunk, one of the searchers.

Cora Lederbrand had been in a despondent mood, and it is supposed that she made up her mind to end both her own and her sister's life. The sister was dead and dumb and had been an invalid since her birth.

Cummins Would Do Senator.

Des Moines, Ia., May 29.—It is announced definitely that Governor Cummins will be a candidate for United States senate, subject to indorsement of the Republicans at each year's primary election under recently enacted primary law. It has been rumored many times that Gov. Cummins would seek a seat in the senate, but no definite announcement was made until now. Senator William B. Allison is the Iowa senator directly affected. Senator Dolliver having been reelected by the last legislature. Gov. Cummins announcement may mean a precipitation of another fight such as was waged among Republicans in Iowa last year.

Trust Takes an Appeal.

Kansas City, Mo., May 30.—Attorneys for the Central Coal & Coke company, recently found guilty of being a member of a trust to control the price and output of ice, imposing a fine of $8,000, Wednesday filed a bond bare in an appeal to the United States supreme court.

Lutheran Synod Adjourns.

Sunbury, Pa., May 31.—The general synod of the Lutheran Church of America adjourned Thursday. The synod accepted the invitation of St. Paul's church, Richmond, Ind., as the place for their next meeting.

Delmas to Defend Bribers.

San Francisco, May 28.—Delphin M. Delmas has been engaged to defend Abraham Glass and T. V. Halsey, two officials of the Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph company, indicted for bribery.

METHODS OF "BEEF TRUST" EXPOSED

A SYSTEMATIC SHORTAGE OF WEIGHT FOUND IN BOXES OF CHICKENS SOLD.

Exposure Follows Arrest of New York Dealer — Magistrate Recommends That Action Be Commenced Against the "Trust."

New York, May 31.—In the Myrtle avenue police court, Brooklyn, Wednesday, Harry Schmidt, an employe of Armour & Co., the Chicago packers, was arraigned on a charge of having sold meat at short weights.

The arrest of Schmidt followed on extensive investigation made by inspectors of the bureau of weights and measures. They have found that on every box marked as containing 50 pounds of chickens there is a shortage of four pounds or more. The trust will only sell at "box weights."

Butchers throughout the country are paying 16 cents a pound for boxes supposed to contain 50 pounds of chickens. They receive only 46 pounds and so lose 64 cents on every box.

It is necessary for the butchers to add this additional cost to the retail price, so the public has to foot the bill. This practice has been going on for nearly a year, but the butchers have feared to take action, knowing that the trust would retaliate by discriminating against them.

Wants Officials Arraigned.

Magistrate Neumer, before whom the case against Schmidt was up for hearing, was indignant at the revelations made.

"I will hold this prisoner for trial in the general sessions," he said, "and in the meantime I trust steps will be taken to bring an action against the officials of Armour & Co., who have guilty knowledge of this fraud. Little can be gained by convicting this defendant, as he is merely an agent. A stop should be put to this systematic method of making the public pay for the commercial shrinkage of chickens."

"It would be hard to estimate how many millions of dollars the public has been swindled out of by this outrageous method," said Inspector Frederick H. Tighe.

"The same conditions exist all over the country. The butchers fear to oppose the trust, and so the fraud has never been exposed before."

Inspector Tighe also declared that the trust uses the same methods in selling pork tenderloins and lard.

Voliva Is Deposed.

Chicago, May 29.—William Glenn Voliva, general overseer of the Christian Catholic Apostolic church, has been deposed as temporal head of Zion City, and the opposition to him is rejoicing in the belief that his spiritual leadership also is dead. Tuesday Voliva was notified that his lease on the tabernacle, the administration building and the four school buildings in Zion City will be canceled by John C. Hately. Voliva also was summoned to appear before Judge K. M. Landis of the United States district court Wednesday and make answer to the charge of contempt of court.

Insurance Official Indicted.

New York, May 29.—The May grand jury, which has been investigating the affairs of the Equitable Life Assurance society, Tuesday returned 18 indictments against Thomas D. Jordan, formerly controller off the Equitable. Perjury and forgery in the third degree were charged. No indictments were found against present officials of the society.

Bondholders Buy Railroad.

Toledo, O., May 29.—The Toledo Railway and Terminal company and all its equipment was sold Tuesday by the bondholders by a master commissioner. There was but one bid and that was made by the bondholders' committee, which bid $1,000,000. The road is the Toledo, Bowling Green & Southern railway, extending from Toledo to Bowling Green, O., a distance of 25 miles.

ADVANCE OF TEN PER CENT

WAGES OF NEW ENGLAND COTTON OPERATIVES RAISED.

Approximately Two Hundred Thousand Workers Are Affected by the Increase Just Made.

Boston, May 28.—The general upward movement in the wages of New England cotton mill operatives Monday affected about 85,000 operatives in Rhode Island, southwestern and western Massachusetts, Amesbury, Mass., and Newmarket and other places in southern New England. The advance in the sections named amounts to about ten per cent. Early next month it is expected an increase of five per cent will be given in many mills in other manufacturing districts. The cotton mills of New England employ upward of 200,000 hands when the machinery is fully manned.

In Lowell the operatives have requested an advance of ten per cent, and Monday through the textile council declined an offer of a five cent increase made by the manufacturers. Aside from this effect upon the 20,000 operatives in Lowell, the situation in that city is of interest also because mills in Maine and New Hampshire have usually followed the lead of Lowell in regards to wages.

AFFECTS TAXATION OF GRAIN.

Important Decision Made by Minnesota Supreme Court.

Minneapolis, Minn., June 1.—The supreme court has decided that the Northwestern Elevator company of Minneapolis need not pay the personal property assessment on 29,000 bushels of grain stored in its elevators at the Minnesota transfer. The only tax that can be collected from the Northwestern Elevator company in this office furniture, which amounts to about $250.

This is considered a most important decision, as it may affect every elevator company in the state in regard to taxation of the grain in the elevators. The assessment on the grain in the northwestern elevator at the Minnesota transfer was about $350.

Scope of Land Convention.

Denver, Col., May 31.—The scope of the land convention to be held in the city June 18, 19 and 20 has been enlarged to include consideration of arid land reclamation. This will bring before the convention the projects of Colorado water users against alleged government usurpation of their rights in the San Luis valley. Colorado is not the only state interested. Similar conditions are said to exist in the states of Idaho, Washington and Oregon.

An effort will be made to have the convention adopt resolutions against what is called "government by rules and regulations, and not by law."

Mrs. McKinley Laid to Rest.

Canton, O., May 31.—The body of Mrs. Ida Saxton McKinley now rests by the side of that of the late President McKinley in the receiving vault at Westlawn cemetery.

The funeral services held at the McKinley residence on Market street Wednesday afternoon were witnessed by a distinguished company, including President Roosevelt, Vice President Fairbanks, Gov. Harris and many State officials both of the nation and state.

Wisconsin Wins Big Race.

Madison, Wis., June 1.—Wisconsin freshmen won from the St. John's Military academy crew, of Delafield, Friday. The race was pretty close until half the course of a mile was covered, when the Delafield stroke lost his oar. Wisconsin rowed in a little better form than the soldier boys.

Syracuse won the four-oared race, leading Wisconsin by about five lengths at the finish.

Wisconsin won the eight-oared race.

A Cornell Defeats Harvard.

Ithaca, N. Y., May 31.—Cornell won the varsity race from Harvard by three

PRESIDENT IS GIVEN OVATION AT LANSING

MAKES THREE ADDRESSES FRIDAY AFTERNOON IN THE MICHIGAN CAPITAL.

Occasion Is Semicentennial of Founding of State Agricultural College—Speaks of Importance of Country's Rural Interests.

Lansing, Mich., June 1.—President Roosevelt, whose address Friday afternoon on the campus of the Michigan Agricultural college was the climax of the semicentennial celebration of the founding of that famous institution, arrived in Lansing at ten o'clock in the morning over the Lake Shore railroad in his special car. He made a number of short addresses during the morning from his car platform at small towns.

Special excursions trains had been bringing in thousands of people since daylight and when the president's train arrived the number of strangers in the city was estimated at 50,000.

Has Escort of Guardsmen.

Twelve companies of the Michigan national guard had been brought into the city to escort and guard the president, together with a troop of cavalry from South Huron, Mich., and two divisions of the Michigan naval reserve.

The president was given an ovation as he concluded his balcony speech and went into representative hall to address the members of the legislature. His speech there about ten minutes. He said that the railroad problem in this country must be dealt with unflinchingly, but with sanity and with reason. There must be, he said, steady progress along the lines that already have been laid down. He also mentioned some of his own experiences as a member of the New York legislature.

Guest of College President.

After the second address of the president and his party entered automobiles and were driven to the residence of President J. L. Snyder, of the agricultural college, where luncheon was served.

At two p. m. the president made his formal address from a platform erected at the head of the campus.

Children the Best Crop.

That there is no relaxation in President Roosevelt's vigorous views regarding the importance of the country's rural interests was evidenced by his speech.

"The crop of children is the best crop of the nation," said the president, "and the best tribute to the work of the farmer's wife, who, he declared, should neither be an idler nor a drudge.

The city-ward trend of the rural youth was deplored by the president, and he urged a more efficient course of agricultural education as a means of offsetting this exodus and upholding the integrity of the rural community.

"Points" of the Speech.

The telling points of the speech follow:

"Workers should get over the idea that to earn $12 a week is to call it a week's better than to earn $25 a week and call it 'wages.'"

"Many country communities have not the social coherence. In such communities, for instance, the country church has come back as a social and religious factor."

"Ambitious native-born men and women who now tend away from the farm must be brought back to it."

"I emphatically believe that for the great majority of women the only really indispensable industry in which they can engage is the industry of the home."

"I have not the slightest sympathy with those hysterical and foolish creatures who wish women to claim easy lives by shirking their duties."

Four Burned to Death.

Long Branch, N. J., June 1.—The two daughters of Dr. and Mrs. A. Schiffer of New York, secretary of the United Cigar Manufacturing company, Marion, aged ten, and Ruth, aged 14, and two servants, Mary Dilter, and Tilly Monthon, were burned to death in a fire which Thursday night destroyed the handsome residence of Jacob Rothschild, which Mr. Schiffer had rented. In attempting to rescue her children Mrs. Schiffer was so severely burned in fighting the fire.

Forty Thousand Idle at Frisco.

San Francisco, May 31.—According to the figures based on an investigation conducted by Harbor Commissioner W. V. Stafford, there are approximately 40,000 persons idle in San Francisco as the direct result of the existing labor troubles.

"Lord" Barrington to Hang.

Jefferson City, Mo., May 31.—The supreme court in banc Thursday decreed that "Lord" Frederick Seymour Barrington, now in jail at Clayton, Mo., shall be hanged on July 25 for the murder of J. P. McCann, a St. Louis horse man.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

The Vicksburg Shaft.

Vicksburg, Miss.—Fully 2,000 people clustered around the Monumental circle in the Vicksburg National Military park to witness the sixth dedication of a state memorial, the event being the unveiling of the imposing granite obelisk that stands 90 feet upon its base, placed here in commemoration of the Minnesota soldiers who fought horo during the war.

Governor Johnson and General Hubbard of Minnesota and Governor Vardaman of Mississippi delivered addresses. The monument was unveiled by Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. Vardaman.

Never Touched Him.

St. Paul.—Elmar Hodgins, fourteen years old, residing at Gladstone, miraculously escaped death beneath the wheels of a freight train at the Chicago Blodgett plant, East Seventh street. He is employed at the plant and was sitting on a platform near the tracks when he lost his balance and fell between the rails of a spur track just as a string of box cars was being backed past the platform.

Young Hodgins fell directly in front of the cars, three of which passed over him before the train could be brought to a stop. The train was uncoupled and the rescuers expecting to find a mangled corpse picked up Hodgins very much alive and only slightly scratched. He had fallen directly in the center of the track and the cars had passed over him without touching his body.

Boy Lost.

Solway.—John, the three-year-old son of William Shepherd, disappeared from his home near this place and not a trace of him has been found. It is feared he has either perished from hunger and exposure or has been devoured by wild beasts. Hundreds of men and boys with dogs have scoured the country for miles around. The county officials have offered $100 reward for the return of the boy dead or alive.

Body Stops Engine

Hibbing.—The lifeless body of Joseph Pavovich, engineer at the Stevenson mine at Stevenson, was found wrapped about the shafting of his engine, which was stopped. It is presumed that his clothing caught in the gearing and his body drawn after it. The stopping of the engine caused an investigation to be made, which resulted in the finding of the body.

Girl Goes to Prison.

Minneapolis.—Estelle Swift, a pretty 16-year-old girl, was sentenced by Judge H. D. Dickinson to one year in state prison. She had pleaded guilty to grand larceny in the second degree. The girl admitted that she had already served two sentences for grand larceny.

Town Wiped Out.

Nankato.—The recent burning of W. L. Hoover's store, house and barn wipes out the last building at old Nashville Center, southeast of here. A dozen years ago the place was a village of considerable importance. In recent years fires have been frequent and of peculiar destructiveness. This was the fifth fire that has occurred in the Hoover stores. Two village halls have been burned, and every other business place has been wiped out, one after another. Mr. Hoover will not rebuild.

Drainage Fund Apportioned.

St. Paul.—Appropriations for state drainage work during the current year have been made by the state drainage board. The new law authorizes spending state money in two ways—on state ditches built on the assessment plan, and in state aid for county ditches. The following appropriations were made for state ditches:

Completion of Rosean river channel, $21,003.02; Kitson county, $10,000; Marshall county, Stranquist ditch, $2,500; Beltrami county, $5,143; Koochiching county, for ditches near International Falls and Northome, subject to investigation by the state engineer, $15,750; Itasca county, $6,000; St. Louis county, $10,000; Aitkin county, $700.

Engineer Ralph estimates that for every dollar the state spends on these ditches $2 will be paid in assessments by private land owners, so that the work will command three times as much money as the state appropriates.

The members of the commission will inspect the work on the Rosean river June 26 and 27.

Appropriations in aid of county drainage work were made as follows:

Aitkin county, for Mississippi river cutoff, $3,000 a year for two years.

Wabasha county, two ditches, $6,000.

Todd county, Long Prairie river ditch; $3,000; Wing river ditch, $3,000.

Wabasha county, Zumbro river cutoff, $3,000.

Norman county, $3,000.

Polk county, $5,000.

Traverse county, Mustinka river cutoff, $5,000.

Steele county, $5,000.

Nicollet county, Rush river ditch, $7,500.

Wadena county, Leaf river ditch, $2,000.

NEWS NOTES.

Ashville, N. C.—The National Library association in session here, decided to hold its next session in Minneapolis, Minn.

Minneapolis.—Joseph Cohen, a 12-year-old boy, fell from a log in the Mississippi river at the mouth of Minnehaha creek and was drowned.

Melrose.—Thomas Burke, a Great Northern engineer, while operating a steam shovel got his foot caught in the machinery. The foot was seriously crushed, resulting in the loss of three toes.

Moorhead.—The one-and-a-half-year old child of Ole Farder, foreman on the Benedict farm at Hawley fell into the Buffalo river and was drowned. The body was recovered about half an hour after the child was missed.

Bank Centre.—Bert Rice, twenty-two years old, was found dead in his brother's barn. He had been dead several hours. Circumstances indicate suicide, but no cause has been suggested. He had no perfect health.

St. Paul.—Errors and omissions in the gross earnings reports of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad for 1907 to 1908, the tax upon which amounted to $2,935, were reported to the state treasurer by Public Examiner Anton Schacfer.

Winona.—In United States court the jury returned a verdict of $7,750 in the suit of John Moore against the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway for broken limbs caused by the breaking of a derrick on a car on which he was working.

Winona.—Ping creek farmers awoke one morning of last week to find nearly all the dogs in the neighborhood killed and a horse valued at $175 so badly bitten that shooting was necessary. The cause was a large dog said to be afflicted with rabies, which had visited the vicinity in the night and which left before it could be overtaken.

Faribault.—Edwin Sherwin, a hardware merchant of Nerstrand, in the eastern part of Rice county, committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver. It is supposed that he committed the deed while in a fit of despondency over business trouble. He was in partnership with a brother who was in the store when the shot was heard, but in another part of the building.

Duluth.—Extensions of the Duluth, Rainy Lake & Winnipeg road from Virginia to Duluth, seventy miles, is expected to be ready for business in 1907. The line will give a direct route from Winnipeg to Duluth by way of International Falls. The length of the road will be 170 miles. It has traffic relations with the Canadian Northern. Extensive terminals will be made at Duluth.

Owatonna.—At the annual boys' contest in declamation at Pillsbury academy, first place was won by Neal Kellogg of Milwaukee, and second by Harold Green of Dodge Center. In the young ladies contest, first place was won by Miss Helen Berrier of Flasher, and second by Miss Eva Hars of Owatonna.

Winona.—Andrew Gazell was run down by a train, while picking up coal droppings near the depot of the St. Paul railroad. One foot was badly crushed and cut. He was taken to the hospital. Amputation of the foot at the ankle may be necessary.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF.

The French cruiser Chanzy, which went ashore on one of the Saddle Islands May 20, will prove a total loss, and has been abandoned.

Announcement is made that plans are near completion for the merger of several cement concerns in the east, which will be known as the National Cement company. It will have a capital stock of $25,000,000.

Prince William of Sweden will arrive at Jamestown on the cruiser Fylgia on August 18. Later the cruiser will go to New York and the prince will visit Newport, Tuxedo, Saratoga and other near-by resorts by rail.

The president of an Illinois university has addressed a letter to the Brazilian minister of education suggesting an exchange of professors between the two countries similar to that between eastern seats of learning and universities in Germany.

Instructions have been issued through the Russian consulate in London to the Russian steamship lines to refuse passages to the social democratic members of the lower house of parliament, who have been holding a congress at the British capital.

The seamen's strike at Glasgow, Scotland, has reached an acute stage. The employers refuse to recognize the unions and have taken no notice of their demand for an advance in wages. Atlantic liners due to sail June 1 for New York and Canada have not found crews.

FRENCH SAILORS ON STRIKE.

Complete Paralysis of Commerce of the Nation Threatened.

Paris, June 1.—A general strike of sailors and others belonging to the French naval reserve began at almost all the ports of France at daylight Friday and threatens the complete paralysis of French commerce. The navigation companies are making energetic representations to the government, claiming that the movement is not directed against them and saying that unless it is settled immediately it will cause untold injury to French commerce.

The strike was decreed by the executive committee of the National Seamen's union because the government's new bill increasing pensions from $40.80 to $72.50 in the case of seamen and from $156 to $200 in the case of captains is regarded by the members of the union as being inadequate.

The tie-up is almost complete at the Mediterranean. Atlantic and channel ports. At Marseilles the sailors and longshoremen struck almost to a man, and even the fishermen drew up their nets.

Millers Hear Secretary Taft.

St. Louis, May 31.—Before an audience of millers from all parts of the country, attending the annual convention of the Millers' National Federation, and marking the largest gathering of millers ever held in this country, Secretary of War Taft Thursday afternoon made an address at the Odeon on the topic, "Recent Instances of National Altruism."

The assembly constituted the final session of the convention of the federation, which invited Secretary Taft to address the body. President J. W. Burk of Springfield, O., presided, and introduced former Missouri Governor E. O. Stanard, a miller of St. Louis, who, in turn, made a brief speech introducing Secretary Taft.

Minnesota Jurist Dead.

St. Paul, June 1.—An Owatonna, Minn., special to the Pioneer Press says: Judge Lewis L. Wheelock dropped dead at his home in the city Friday afternoon. Judge Wheelock has been prominent for years in Minnesota politics, at one time being considered as a possible candidate for governor, and serving several terms in the Minnesota senate.

Gives Birth to Quadruplets.

Heantington, Ind., June 1.—Mrs. Frank Cronton, aged 43 years, and the wife of a section foreman on a traction line, living near Andrews, gave birth to four children. There were three girls and a boy. The combined weight of the four children was 11½ pounds. Two of the children have since died.

WHISTLER'S COCK FIGHT YARN.

Disguised Eagle Prized by Yankee Sailors Against British Champions.

Whistler used to take delight in telling a story of some American sailors who were at a cockfight in a seaport in England, when one of them remarked to the owner of the champion:

"We've got an American cock on board that can whip any bird here."

"Go fetch 'im on," said the Englishman, quick to a bet and see. If 'e licks one bird we 'ave plenty more to throw in that can lick Jany blawsted American bird you can fetch 'em."

"All right; we'll bring one," said the sailors.

When they got aboard they rigged up an American eagle. After their own manner they painted, trimmed, spliced, and reeled fore and aft, transforming the eagle to a cock. When ready they went ashore, and at the pit chucked in their new gamecock which, overcome by surprise, promptly backed close to the wall.

"Now bring on your birds," yelled the sailors.

A strutting cock was thrown into the pit, and was another surprise to the poor dismantled eagle. He backed closer and closer to the wall, wondering what would happen next.

The cock walked three times majestically around the circle, cuffing at his strange opponent, the eagle pitifully shashed and bedrabbled, cronching lower and lower, and looking around for some sign for an explanation of what it all meant, while the crowd were yelling madly for the English fighter.

The eagle made himself smaller and smaller, but at last, finding that he could get back no further, and thinking that something was expected of him, stretched out his long claws as the cock dashed at him again and took his opponent by the neck.

Here Whistler ended, with an imitation by motions of what the eagle did. He stretched out his arm, shaped his hand like a claw (by this time I looked like a reel one), drew it to his mouth, and, with one bite, pulled off the head, as he thought an eagle might do it. He looked blankly about the room, as the eagle had done, at the astonished crowd and said:

"I never saw your other birds."—Century Magazine.

Wood Felled by Gladstone's Axe.

What Mr. Gladstone most enjoyed about the Chateau de Chorone (adds our correspondent) were the beautiful walks in the neighborhood. Many photographs were taken of him there, but the one he liked most was a photograph in which he and Lord Rendel appeared walking arm in arm, deep in politics! discussion. I came across a copy of it once in a remote farmhouse in Monigomeryshire, and on the back of it was written, "To Mr. John Jones with best wishes from Mr. W. E. Gladstone."

John Jones was a farmer, a constituent of Lord Rendel, a tremendous admirer of Mr. Gladstone, and an amateur woodcarver. He had once written the prime minister asking for some wood felled by the statesman's own axe, and for some time afterward he regularly received a supply of wood whenever Mr. Gladstone brought down a new tree.

This he worked up into walking stick handles, crosses, lockets, necklaces, etc., and they were greatly prized among his friends.—Manchester Guardian.

Delicately Put.

Stuyvesant Fish was discussing in Philadelphia the March panic.

"I was gravely cool," he said, referring to a remark that indirectly cast the blame for the panic on a certain man. "I was cool. My remark was true or false, it was couched delicately. It reminds me of the story of the beaten.

"A footman called his master up by telephone and said:

"'Oh!' cried the master, 'what a terrible misfortune! But my wife—is she safe?'

"'Quite safe, sir. She got out among the first.'

"'And my daughters—are they all right?'

"'All right, sir. They're with their mother.'

"There was a pause. Then:

"'That, sir,' said the footman sauvely, 'was what I wished to speak to you about, sir. Your mother-in-law is lyin' asleep in the third story back, and knowin' your regard for her, sir, I wasn't sure whether I ought to disturb her or not, sir.'"

Suiting Music to the Work.

The mistress of the house is a cultivated Bostonian of much musical taste, and the whole of the time the man who believed himself alone in the house, fretted her artistic soul by whistling, called it back, from the head of the back stairs, "please don't whistle those vulgar ragtime melodies!"

"Yes, mem," returned Joseph, meekly. "I know, mem," he continued, with unexpected spirit, "but you cannot expect a rhapsody of Liszt with cleaning the knives. That will come later, when I'm polishing the silver."—Youth's Companion.

Taken Literally.

"Lady," said Weary Willie, "I'm near dead fur a good square meal."

"Well," said Mrs. Hankseed, "if you'll say some of that wood over there I'll let you eat your fill."

"Good day, lady; I ain't never et no wood, thank ye, kindly."

IS COOK FOR A KING.

M. MENAGER, FRÊNCHMAN, A GENIUS IN HIS ART.

Edward VII. Pays $10,000 Salary Yearly to Monarch of Royal Kitchen Who Prepares Meals at Buckingham Palace.

London.—One of the privileges which the sovereign is still allowed to retain in democratic England is the appointment of his own chef.

When there is a change of ministry King Edward, at the dictation of the prime minister, has to take on a new lord chamberlain, who is nominally the boss of the upstairs department of the royal household, and a new lord steward, who is supposed to have supreme control of the culinary department.

But the real monarch of the palace kitchen, the "chief cook," as he is officially styled in good old Anglo-Saxon, is not subject to the vicissitudes of politics. Whatever party is in power he continues to hold his job at his majesty's pleasure, which is just as long as he contrives to satisfy his majesty's highly cultivated epicurean tastes.

This is a matter which really affects the king more closely than a change of administration, for whether the liberals or the conservatives are in a majority, he can exercise very little control over the government.

The august functionary who ministers to the royal appetite is M Juste Menager, a native of the land of good cooks, and something over 40 years of age. He gets $10,000 a year, which is $500 more than is paid the first sea lord of the admiralty, the famous Sir "Jackie" Fisher, who practically runs the British navy.

M Menager has an easy billet. He is paid his big salary not so much for what he actually does, as for knowing how to do it.

So great a culinary artist is not expected to produce three masterpieces in one day. With the breakfast of the king, which is always a modest meal, he does not concern himself. He is not required to sleep under his master's roof like most of the royal menials, but lives in a private residence a short distance from Buckingham palace. He always drives to the palace, arriving there shortly after 11 o'clock. In his own private office, a sunny apartment adjoining the kitchen and overlooking lawns, he receives the luncheon carte drawn up by Lord Farquhar, the master of the king's household, and begins his day's work.

The office of the lord steward, who is nominally at the head of the gastronomic department, is practically a sinecure. It is at present filled by Lord Knebworthy, who pockets $10,000 a year for drawing his salary and looking imposing on state occasions when his attendence is required.

If M Menager were capable of envy he might occasionally envy the lord steward. But he has declared that he would not be happy if he were not able to practice his art. And so far as fame is concerned, as the king's chef he enjoys a far greater measure of it than is bestowed on any figurehead functionary. Besides abundance of leisure he is allowed time in which to cultivate his own pet hobbies or seek gastronomic inspiration. After luncheon is served he is free to lay what he pleases until six o'clock, when preparations for the great vent of his domain—dinner—begin.

At his command for this work are four master cooks, and a retinue of well trained attendants, all clad in immaculate linen. Perfect discipline prevails among them. Clockwork regularity is the rule. Each dish is begun and finished within a minute of the appointed time. Few words are spoken.

The king's kitchen contains something like $10,000 worth of utensils. There are no less than 800 pots and pans, most of them of copper, and five coursers are solely employed to keep them brightly burnished. There are 4,000 knives, 2,000 forks, and as many spoons of various sizes used for cooking and kitchen purposes. For the service of the royal table there are 5,000 forks and spoons of massive silver.

Like the king himself, M Menager is a tactful man. He knows how to please the women folk and the man who does that is sure to be popular. He has hedly challenged the opinion entertained by most exalted chefs that women are incapable of mastering the higher mysteries of the culinary art. He encourages women cooks. He frequently dines at the Buckingham palace. He has declared that there are at least half a dozen women cooks in London who are capable of preparing a dinner fit for the king.

TO SUCCEED SECRETARY LOEB

Assistant Postmaster General Hitchcock Slated for Post.

Washington.—Frank H. Hitchcock, who began his Washington career

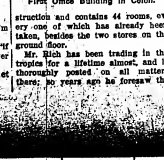
(Slated as Loeb's Successor as Secretary to the President.)

some time ago by making as the youngest chief clerk of any department, is booked to be secretary to President Roosevelt beginning January 1 next, when Secretary Loeb retires for the presidency of a Washington trust company.

Hitchcock is now the first assistant postmaster general, and George B. Cortelyou, who grew over the department, declared he was easily the most efficient worker in any division of the national capital.

It is undoubtedly on the recommendation of Mr. Cortelyou that he is going to get the new appointment, and he is regarded as just the man to carry out the spirit which has prevailed there for several years.



Hitchcock is a man from the ranks, an example of what can be done in Washington without pull. Educated in Boston schools and working his way he went to Harvard and graduated in 1891. Out of Harvard he was recommended to Washington for chief clerk of a department, and soon there he came. His assistant work did not hold him, for he took up the study of law, and graduated from the Columbian law school in Washington and was admitted to practice before the supreme court.

Meanwhile he had been taking other civil service examinations in various places, and finally attracted the attention of Cortelyou, who took him under his wing.

Trenton, N. J.—Despite the fact he is full of electricity and that he will, charge the whole institution, George Denby, a negro convict from Burlington county, has been removed from the state prison to the state insane asylum in this city.

Denby thinks he is a living dynamo producing electricity in large quantities and continually shunts to be taken from his cell that he mfy not electrify the walls and steel doors. It is said that, primarily, his condition is due to imbibing large quantities of "Jersey lightning" before his incarceration in November, 1901, for 12 years for attempted criminal assault.

We are in receipt of a letter from a friend in Canada dated May 27th saying that their winters snow was still with them. By the same mail we recieved a letter from a sister in Oklahoma stating that the wheat crop had been knocked by a green bug. Take a look at our healthy growing grain in Northern Minnesota before you decide to locate elsewhere.

In addition to proof of the truth as a defense to an action for libel, the publisher can show that the character of the plaintiff was so bad that he had nothing to lose by the publication.--Ex.

It seems by the above that a party of shady reputation principaling an action for libel, where a newspaper had told the truth a bout him, would not only loose his case, but would get his reputation shown up proper.

Frederick Warren of the Appeal to Reason a Socialist paper published in Girard, Kan., has been indicted by a grand jury in Fort Scott on the charge of sending threatening and scurrilous matter through the mails He was arrested and adulitted to bond.

This paper used to be a socialist paper but of late years it has become an Armichistpaper, which has become so scurrilous that it is unfit to be circulated through the mails.

The railroad company always keep a strong lobby at St. Paul during every session of the legislature to look after their interest, and the "wood chucks" that they slip through at every session would fill a forty acre lot. Two years ago they slid through a bill to the effect, that in order to get a marriage license, that the applicant must personaly appear before the clerk of District Court. What for? so the railroad company could collect car fare, of course. If the people don't begin to get onto their job and put a lobby in that legislature to look after their interest, there will be a law passed that a man must personaly appear before the County treasurer and aware that he has two cows, one hog, a yeller dog and an old clock in order to be allowed to pay 15 cents personal property tax.

We hear of snow storms in Michigan, army bugs and chich bugs in Oklahoma and Kansas, but we are fortunate up this way with a prospect for a big crop Northern Minnesota where crops never fail.

Lawyers Have Another Job.

The Lawsuit Petitioned For Has Commenced.

The Crookston Daily Journal, for last Monday says:

"Two more suits in the Red Lake County Seat removal fight were filed today. This morning the petition asking for an elect ion to be called by the county commission was filed with the county auditor at Red Lake Falls by the Thief River contingent and this morning F. A.Grady of Red Lake Falls appeared before Judge Watts and secured an order on the auditor of Red Lake Co. to show cause why he should not be enjoined from calling a meeting of the county commissioners of Red Lake County to act on the petition. The writ was made returnable before Judge Watts here next Friday afternoon when the arguments will be heard."

A Remarkable Bridge.

Among the many odd nooks and corners and crannies of the auld Emerald isle is Carrick-a-rede, on the Grey Northern railroad of Ireland. It is an isolated rock, separated from the mainland by a chasm sixty feet wide and more than eighty feet deep, and it is at this place that the salmon are intercepted in their retreat in the rivers. A rude bridge of ropes is thrown across, which remains during the fishing season, and this bridge, which is protected by a single rope rail, swings about in the most uncomfortable manner, often rendering it a dangerous feat in stormy weather save to the natives, who cross it with the utmost indifference. The chasm is derived from "Carrig-a-rede-bush" (the rock in the road) on account of the intercepting of the salmon. Near by on the west side of the island is a cavern in which have been found the bones of horse, ox, deer, sheep, goat, badger, otter, water rat and of several kinds of birds.

Nobody Was There.

To take the census of the British empire is a matter of difficulty in certain districts. A native official was ordered to take a census of what was known to be a populous village in Uganda. He returned with the report that there was no population, the explanation being that the inhabitants had fled on hearing of his approach. More precise instructions were given to him, and he paid another visit to the village. The result of his inquiry was given thus in the tabulated form: Number of huts, 257; inhabitants, men over eighteen years of age, 0; men under eighteen years of age, 0; women, 0; children, 0; total, 0.

Butchery in War.

In one of the Greeks victories so many English were taken captive that even the bumblest soldier among the French had one or more prisoners. The victors, however, fell to quarreling, and, ill feeling becoming rife in the French army in consequence of these quarrels over the prisoners, Do Guesclin ordered all the captives to be butchered, and the brutal order was carried out.

Oddly Marked Tombstones.

In an old graveyard in Malta the monument to the founder of a distinguished family is marked with the outline of a human leg. It is formed by black streaks in the granite running through the stone, for at the back there is another leg, but much smaller in dimensions. Nobody saw this blemish when the stone was set up. Not until years had passed did any one notice it. People concluded that they themselves were waiting, to get to the expense of quarrying out another block, so had the leg with eement and stone dust put in instead of the hollow it originally was. This was necessary, to prevent the stranger being short of a leg.

The Englishman's Morning Tub.

Until the beginning of the seventeenth century English princes and other babes were immersed three times in the font when christened. The last Prince of Wales who was submitted to this ordeal appears to have been Arthur, the son of Henry II., who died in 1502 at the age of sixteen. The abolition of the practice was strongly objected to opoo sanitary grounds by Sir John Floyer, a celebrated physician, who died in 1734. "Immersion," he says, "would prevent many hereditary diseases," and "the English will return to it when physic has given them a clear proof that cold baths are both safe and useful." So pro-morning tub is the outcome of royal immersion.--London Mail.

Clearwater Creamery.

The Clearwater news has been a little scarse of late, as we have all been taking the advice of THE SUNBEAM and farring in our crops as it says there is still plenty of time for it to grow.

Well, our first months dues for cream has been paid, and although there are some not quite satisfied, yet they should remember that it cost about as much to handle a small amount of cream as it does a large amount, so you see the larger the amount of cream the bigger the price.

G.A. Hoveland our present butter maker has shown his ability as a first class butter maker. This can be proven by our creamery returns as our butter got 1½ cents above best New York price.

Anyone not satisfied with their creamery test are requested to be present on days the monthly test is made, and satisfy themselves that there is a fair test made of all cream.

As the weather has been cold the cream has been delivered to the creamery in very good shape but our last two cream days showed a little falling off in the quality of some of the cream delivered.

We reject that all patrons skim their cream at about 65 deg, then it will keep fairly well for a reasonable time.

Bring your cream on cream days and do not bring any sour acid cream as we can not use it.

It is pleasing to note that our farmers are getting more interested in creamery work, as our creamery is doing a fairly good business.

The board of Directors of the Clearwater Creamery, meet at the creamery on June 21st at 11 o'clock A.M.

The share holders who have not yet brought in their bond of wood, are requested to do so at once as we are in need of it.

It Couldn't Be.

The Winning of Nora

BY J. NEWELL COTTON

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Pete Lafitte, Canadian-Frenchman, gentleman and "bon fellier," won his prefix from n long and skillful acquaintance with that indispensable lumberman's implement, the "cant-dog," "peavy," or "spike-lever."

Pete was an expert on the landing, having but one rival, and that was his sweetheart's father, big, bony Pat Shannon.

'Cre had, but so. Just the same, Old man down on Pete like some locks, but Pete he care no. Pete an girl just same, other time, hunky."

This was volubly reeled off through an avalanche grin.

Pat had a fine contempt for Pete's skillful manipulation of the "peavy" in such neat tricks as hook catching a log, or giving the "peavy" a rapid turn and a sudden jab, timing the maneuver so accurately as to catch the hook on the log while the "peavy" was rapidly revolving—a clever trick.

"Hasteny monkey tricks, and a monkey that's at thim sure. Faith, the blackguard 'll break his lasety neck some fine day, and small loss to all be nither," Pat would say in fine scorn.

The last part of this remark had reference to another dangerous feat at which Pete was particularly clever. In fact, none of the yardmen dare attempt it but big Pat.

It was to hack catch a big rolling stick, step one's feet to the stick and snap back on the "peavy" stock with all one's might and strength.

If successfully performed, the stick is stopped from rolling and slowly slid along the slippery skids to a stand-till.

If caught too high, over goes the darin' artist, with the chances of a broken limb, if not his neck.

This is the regular mode of stopping a small stick if one end is travelling too fast; but only an expert dare tackle a big spruce with 60 to 100 cubic feet in it.

Pat was very proud of his pretty, red-cheeked daughter, Nora, and kept her pretty close to her little cabin at the foot of the mountain. He didn't allow any of the husky young lumbermen around his shanty. His had other plans for Nora.

One day in passing the cabin Pete had got one entrancing glimpse of that rustic beauty, and promptly blew a kiss to her; then as promptly fell in love with her as she laughingly blew it back.

After this Pete hid lots of business down by Pat and Shannon's cabin, and in consequence the dumb court ship and pantomime love-making rapidly progressed.

It was a little slack on the landing. The loose timber had been loaded onto the waiting log trucks, except in a big spruce with over 100 cubic feet in it.

His burly Pat had just successfully turned the big stick over alone, with apparent ease. A happy thought struck him.

Say, boys, I'll bet ye an avenin' sit-up wid me Nora there's divil a man nyo ye that can turn that stick alone."

They were all very willing to try for this tempting offer, and did so without avail—all but Pete."

"Well, Frenchy, yo are in fer a turn!" hantered Pat.

"Big job, don't it? All same Pete try. No try, so upset sirl."

Selecting two cant-dogs to his line, he carefully tried the stick along, to get in a position so the weight of the ends would be evenly balanced, and then he hooked his "peavy" on low down and got under it.

Slowly his small, wiry body straightened, and with it came the stick, until he stood straight. Catching his other "peavy" on lower down, by a mighty effort he transferred his shoulder to it, then slowly began to straighten again.

It was muscle-trying work, with a dead weight bearing on him; but slowly the stick turned, and after the fourth shift, with a mighty heave, he overcame a crook in the stick and over it went, and started unexpectedly down the skids toward the log trucks.

Just then the landing men, hitherto latent on Pete's efforts, looked up and simultaneously a cry of terror broke from their lips.

Coming up the landing toward them was Nora Shannon.

The slowly revolving stick, each instant gaining speed down the slight incline, caught her eye.

She glanced rapidly around for an avenue of escape. Each side of her were high railways of logs, piled from 20 feet of landing and a four-foot drop to the empty trucks; before her, death.

She was a brave, quick-witted Irish born amid danger; and without a moment's hesitation she turned to make a run for it. She had not taken two steps when her foot slipped on an icy skid and she went down, with one agonizing appeal for help.

"Oh, father! Pete! Save me!"

At the outset Pat had seen the danger, and with a hoarse cry of agony had darted forward and made a wild lunge at the rolling stick.

His hook pulled through the bark, and he fell sprawling on his back, and the stick rolled on toward the doomed girl.

It was then that her agonized cry rang out.

Pete had stood panting after his extreme exertions, in stupefied horror; but as her voice appealed to father and then to him, his nerve came back. He must save her, or die.

Swiftly he sped down the slippery landing. The big stick was scarcely 15 feet from the prostrate girl, and turning rapidly.

With keen calculating eye, he watched that crook in the stick. If he could catch it right, when both ends touched the outer skids, and the heavy belly was coming up, he thought he could check it.

Suddenly he lurched forward; the sharp hook caught low and tore into a firm hold. Almost as soon as the hook struck the stick Pete's feet met it, and back went his supple body on to the "peavy" stock with all his weight and strength. He caught so low that when he threw himself back his body touched the rollway.

Slowly the big stick lifted him, partly checked by his sudden onslaught, until he was almost upright; then with a frantic snap he surged back for the last time.

The great stick trembled its length, paused, slid a couple of feet, then stopped close to the body of the helpless girl. She was saved.

A mighty shout went up from the landing men, and headed by Pat, crying like a child, they rushed forward. It had all happened so quickly that the men, paralyzed by horror, had not thought they could help Pete until it was all over and the glory his.

She Was Saved.

Pete, pale and trembling with overexertion and excitement, felt Pat's big, brawny hand grasp his, and heard him say:

"God bless ye, me bye. Ye saved me Nora's life, and may the saints preserve ye and curse Pat Shannon if he don't beinye ye are the narviest Frenchman out of Canada. Come down the avening, and we will talk it over wit ther gal. Niver yit was a Shannon accused of ingratitude, and by me faith, I'm not agoing to establish a precadent."

And poor, pale Nora, lyin with a badly wrenched ankle, looked up into Pete's face and smiled her approval —and something else.

And Pete muttered to himself as father and daughter moved off:

"By gosh, all right, upset sirl just same; make Pete nice little wife, eh, bumby, too, just same."

PROTECTS "GRASS WIDOWS."

"Entitled to Same Rights as Those Whose Husbands Are Dead."

Toledo, O.—A divorced woman, whose husband is living, is to be classed as a widow. The appellation "grass widow" won't do.

Such is the interpretation given a decision rendered by Judge R. W. Taylor in the United States district court in the interesting case of Ella E. Giles, bankrupt.

Mrs. Giles, on June 23 last, was adjudged a bankrupt by the federal court. Harry Levison was appointed trustee. Petitioner asked that she be allowed, as exempt under the Ohio statutes, her household goods and a lot worth about $400, situated in North Toledo.

Referee Belford, United States bankruptcy referee, allowed the first-named exemption, but upheld the trustee in his finding that the bankrupt was not entitled to property under the state law.

As a reason Mr. Belford certified to Judge Taylor that "she was denied the right to the real estate because she is not a widow, and because she is not an unmarried female having in good faith the care, maintenance, and custody of any minor child or children of a deceased relative, as required by section 5441."

Judge Taylor holds that Mrs. Giles is entitled to the exemptions asked for. It therefore follows that "grass widows," so-called, can benefit under the Ohio statutes, which resolved into an interesting question for the federal court. Judge Taylor set aside the decision of the referee in bankruptcy.

Author says that it is not painful to starve to death, but as he has not tried it more than three or four times we will have to accept the statement and suspend judgment.

A WOMAN'S WAY.

Her lovers adored her, they asked and implored her
To give them a look or a smile;
Like little dogs trotted in tasks she allotted,
And begging for notice the while.
They fetched and they carried, they dodged and they parried
When snubs for reward did she give;
They took it all meekly, gave in to her weakly,
Just asking permissions to live.

Their worship she scorned, their love lightly flouted,
And treated them all with disdain.
She met vows with laughing, heeded anguish with chaffing,
And took with just tribute their pain.
That they did adore her, the more seemed in bore her,
She said they were idiots all,
So little she prized them that she soon despised them
For being slaves to her thrall.

At last came a wooer who scorned to pursue her;
He ordered her just at his will.
Asserted his power, said he would "allow" her
His need of affection to fill.
They stared in amazement to see her abasement.
For meekly she gave him his way,
That followed the faster when he would be master.
And promised—with joy—to "obey."

"So the proprietor of this hotel has a big phonograph that plays while you dine?"

"Yes, and some of the selections are very appropriate. For instance, if he thinks his guests are getting impatient he puts on such pieces as 'Life Is Too Short to Worry' and 'All Things Come to Him Who Waits.'"

"Hm! Pretty good idea."

"Yes, but the last selection heats them all. If he thinks you might overlook tipping the waiter he puts on Kipling's recessional: 'Lest We Forget! Lest We Forget!'"—Chicago Daily News.

Chloe—I sin't.

Sambo—Den whutfo' yo' gwineter say whut yo' done said? Yo' gwineter marry me, ain't yo', Chloe?

Chloe—Deed I is, honey. But I ain't gwineter marry yo' 'cause I don't know yo' is awury—'cause yo' is. If I's gwineter be dat tickler I's done gwineter fill a maiden's grave, sho'.—Judge.

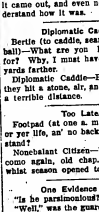
Just Imagine.

Miss Elder—Well, I maintain that woman can do anything that men can.

Mr. Gazzam—Oh, no. The auctioneer's business is one a woman cannot go into.

Miss Elder—Nonsense. She'd make every bit as good an auctioneer as a man.

Mr. Gazzam—Just imagine an unmarried woman getting up before a crowd and exclaiming, "Now, gentlemen, all I want is an offer!"



The Jealous One.

"Oh, yes," said the maker of verse; "Yon Scribble is all right on prose, but when he tackles rhyme I can't say he makes a scintillating success."

"Yon don't think his Pegasus is well gaited, eh?" asked the other.

"I don't think his Pegasus is a flying horse," said the maker of verse, "it reads to me more like a horse-fly."—Judge.

IN BOSTON.

"My name, kind sir, is Emerson E. Emerson."

"And what ar the middle 'Es' for?"

"Why, for 'Emerson,' of course!"

Poor Stuff.

P.—I see you have my novel. I'll wager you had to look at the last page to see how it all came out.

Q.—No; I looked at the name of the publishers on the title page to see how it came out, and even now I can't understand how it was.

Diplomatic Caddie.

Bertie (to caddie, searching for lost ball)—What are you looking there for? Why, I must have driven it 50 yards further.

Diplomatic Caddie—But sometimes they hit a stone, sir, and bounce back a terrible distance.

Too Late.

Foolpad (at gun's one a. m.)—Yer money or yer life, an' no back talk! Understand?

Nonchalant Citizen—You'll have to come again, old chap. The bridge whist season opened to-night!—Puck.

One Evidence of It.

"Is he parsimonious?"

"Well," was the guarded reply, "you might say that he carries his money in a purse that shuts a good deal easier than it opens."—Chicago Journal.

Matter of Orthography.

Lola—I told mamma this morning that the sun affected my eyes.

Grace—What did she say?

Lola—She asked whose son I had reference to.—Chicago Daily News.

WHEN WOMEN MEET.

"How do you like my new hat, Lopless?"

"I think it is beautiful, Loey."

"I am so glad you like it. You have such excellent taste.

"Yes, but re—I think that pink how would look more chic on the right side instead of the left."

"Really, I—"

"And a white bird would be much more becoming than a gray bird."

"A white bird? How odd you talk! Why—"

"And those beads! In my opinion—"

"Never mind your opinion. I don't care to hear it. If I didn't know any more about millinery than you do, I would wear a sunbonnet. So there!"

And now people wonder why Loey and Louise don't speak when they meet.—Chicago Daily News.

THERE ARE OTHERS.

"Skinnem gave me a check the other day, and it was returned to me by the bank marked 'no funds.'"

"I always told you Skinnum was a no-account fellow."—Philadelphia Press.

Nothing Doing.

"There was a man in our town,
Who was rather slow;
His boatmen kept going down—
An advertiser? No.

Proof.

"Does your fiancé love you?" we asked.

"Madly, devotedly!" she answered. "Are you quite sure?"

"Quite. How can I doubt? He has shut me up here in this little cage of a place, where he expects me to spend all my time, with nobody's company but his own. If he does not love me, why does he take so much trouble to make me miserable?"

And there about a her fan eyes the beautiful strong light of unshaken confidence.—Puck.

The Silver Lining.

"Terrible accident you had on your wheel," observed the sympathizing friend.
